The Wine Cup.

BY MRS. CAROLINE M. SAWYER.

Dash down that sparkling cup!—its gleam
Like the pale corpse-light o'er the tomb,
Is but a false, deceitful beam,
To lure thee onward to thy doom.
The sparkling gleam will fade away,
And round thy lost, bewildered feet,
'Mid darkness, terror and dismay,
The ghastly shapes of death will meet.

Dash down the cup!—a poison sleeps
In every drop thy lips would drain,
To make thy life-blood seethe and leap,
A fiery flood through every vein—
A fiery flood that will efface,
By slow degrees, that godlike mind,
Till 'mid its ashes not a trace
Of reason shall be left behind.

Dash down the cup!—a serpent starts
Beneath the flowers that crown its brim,
Those deadly fangs will strike thy heart,
And make thy flashing eye grow dim.
Before whose hot and maddening breath—
More fatal than the simoon blast—
Thy manhood, in unhonored death,
Will sink, a worthless wreck at last.

Dash down that cup!—thy father stands
And pleads in accents deep and low;
Thy anguished mother clasps her hands,
With quivering lips and wordless woe.
They who have borne thee on their breast,
And shielded thee through many a year;
Oh, would'st thou make their bosoms blest,
Their life a joy—their pleading hear.

Dash down the cup!—thy young wife kneels,
Her eyes, whose tears have often gushed,
Are turned with mute and soft appeal,
Upon the babe in slumber hushed.
Didst thou not woo her in thy youth
With many a fond and solemn vow?
Oh, turn again, and all her truth
And love shall be rewarded now!

Dash down the cup!—and on thy brow,
Though darkened o'er with many a stain,
Thy manhood's light, so feeble now,
Shall bright and steady burn again.
Thy strength shall, like the fabled bird,
From its own ashes upward spring!
And fountains in thy breast be stirred,
Whose waters living joys shall bring!

Maria Louisa.

BY REV. J. S. C. ABBOTT.

A darker day never enveloped in its gloom the Austrian monarchy, than when the beleaguering hosts of Napoleon encompassed Vienna, and from their encircling batteries were showering shot and shell upon the doomed city. The armies of Austria, in repeated conflicts, had been mown down and scattered by the resistless conqueror. As the eagle of Napoleon glittered upon the hills which overlooked the city, the royal family with the "hot haste" which terror inspires, had fled far off into the wilds of Hungary. It is midnight. The sky is streaked with the fiery projectiles which, like meteors of death, are descending into the thronged and dismayed metropolis. Flames are bursting forth in every part of the city. All hearts are frozen with terror. There is no place of refuge. Red hot balls crush their way through the dwellings of brick and stone. Shells explode in the cradle of the infant, and upheaving the most massive dwellings bury their mangled inmates beneath the ruins. The clamors of two hundred thousand combatants fill the midnight air, and mingle with the thunder of one of the most awful bombardments earth has ever witnessed.

In one of the chambers of the royal palace there lies a maiden of sixteen years of age, the daughter of the king. Her father and mother in the consternation of their flight, were compelled to leave behind them their sick child. Her cheek is flushed with fever and again paled with terror, as the uproar of the assault, like angry thunder, fills the air. The glare of bursting shells and the flames of the spreading conflagration, portentiously gleam through the windows upon the eyes of the sick and terrified sufferer. She in vain buries her head beneath the bedclothes to shut out the horrid cries of the assailants and the shrieks of the wounded.

In the midst of this most dreadful scene, the gates of the city are suddenly thrown open, and a small party emerge, and with a flag of truce pass through the embattling hosts till they approached the presence of Napoleon. They informed him of the situation and peril of the princess. He instantly orders the direction of every gun to be changed, which might endanger her person. The flag of truce again retires within the walls, and the awful bombardment continues. For ten long hours this terrific storm of iron descends upon the city, till three thousand shells have filled its streets with ruin and with blood. But Maria Louisa remains upon her bed unharmed, though other parts of her father's palace are blown down from their foundations. Little did she imagine in the consternation of that dreadful night, that it was her future husband that was raining down destruction upon her father's capital. And little did the plebian conqueror imagine, as he compassionately changed the direction of his guns, that this maiden was to be Empress of France, and by this bombardment he was wooing and winning for his bride the daughter of the Cæsars!

A daughter of the Cæsars! What a misterious influence there is in ancestral renown. Napoleon even, the creature of his crown, the fabricator of his own glory, was dazzled by its glare. Maria Louisa was a lineal descendant of one of the proudest monarchs of Rome. The blood which circulated in her veins, had passed to her from the Cæsars, and through the heroine heart of Maria Theresa. She had been cradled and matured amid scenes of moral sublimity and regal magnificence, which, one would think, would give an impress of grandeur even to the meanest soul. Surely, then, her spirit must be animated with all that is lofty and ennobling in human character. Alas, it was not so! She was nothing more than a mild, amiable, pretty girl, utterly incapable of cherishing an idea of magnanimity or heroism. She was endowed by nature only with those qualities which were most common place and earthly, and was entirely unqualified to act a noble part in the lofty drama through which she was destined to move.

Napoleon, despairing of an offspring from Josephine, and consumed with the most intense desire to have an heir who should inherit his glory and perpetuate his name, resolved to sever the ties which bound him to Josephine, the wife of his youth, to obtain a more youthful bride from the subservient monarchies around him. He hoped thus to secure an heir in whose person should be allied all that was glorious in exalted descent. The repudiation of Josephine, strong as were the political motives which led to it, is the darkest stain upon the character of Napoleon. And like all wrong doing, however seemingly prosperous for a time, it promoted final disaster and woe. A pique originating in this marriage alienated Alexander of Russia, from the French Emperor; hence the campaign of Moscow, and imprisonment of Napoleon upon the rock of St. Helena. When the design of Napoleon was known, every court of Europe was emulous of the honor of such an alliance. The Bourbons in their exile, would gladly furnish a princess of the royal blood, as a bride for the mighty conqueror. The Russian Court proffers any of its high-born maidens to the acceptance of the master spirit, at whose frown all Europe trembles. And the Austrian Monarchy, the proudest of all earthly dynasties, eagerly seeks alliance with the soldier of fortune, who has twice entered his capital in triumph, and reposed with plebian marshals, in its palaces. After much deliberation, Napoleon decided to accept the alliance with Austria. Proposals were made for Maria Louisa and eagerly accepted. Maria was 19 years old, and was most happy to be honored as the bride of one who had filled the world with renown. Napoleon was forty-two. On the 12th of March, 1810, apparently without emotion, she left the palaces of her father, surrounded by all the pomp the Austrian monarchy could confer, to meet her future husband. As the long train of carriages left Vienna, the people gazed mournfully upon the scene. Maria Antoinette, the last princess Austria had furnished for the throne of France, but a few days before, had perished miserably upon the scaffold. The populace were only prevented by the soldiers from cutting the traces of the carriages, and preventing their departure. The gorgeous procession moved on its way towards the frontiers of France. Napoleon had never yet seen the bride who was coming to meet him. "She is not beautiful," he said as he gazed upon her miniature, "but she is a daughter of the Cæsars."

A Curiosity.—A service of silver plate, comprising of forty-five articles—tea-pot, with moveable lid, sugar bowl, slop bason, cream ewer, two cake plates, sugar tongs, butter knife, with twelve cups and saucers, and a dozen spoons, all exquisitely finished, and of the most fashionable make, are all made from the metal contained in a single four penny piece! The wonder is, how it was possible to conduct the necessary manipalation for molding and finishing the several pieces of this less than Liliputian tea service. The set is exhibited under a small glass shade, and the nicity of the finish of each article becomes more apparent when they are viewed through a magnifying glass. Mr. Pearson, Sackville street, Londen, is the ingenious manufacturer—London Freeman.

Never retire at night without being wiser than when you rose in the morning, by having learned something useful during the day.

The Consequences of Smoking.

The wide spread habit of smoking has not yet had due medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years observation that Dr. Laycock had become fully of the great changes induced in the system by the abuse of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which especially excessive smoking gives origin. He proceeded to state some of them as they were met with in the pharyngical mucous membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, brain, and the nervous system. The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers varied from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week, the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate segar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week.

The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membrane of the lips and tongue; then the tonsils and pharynx suffer—the mucous membrane becoming dry and congested.—If the thorax be examined well, it will be found slightly swollen with congested veins meandering over the surface, and here and there a streak of mucous. Action ascends upwards on the posterior nares, and there is a discharge from the upper part of the pharynx, and irritation is felt by the anterior nares. The eye becomes affected with heat, slight redness, lachrymation, and a peculiar spasmodic action of the obicularis muscle, experienced together with intolerance of light on awaking from sleep in the morning. The frontal sinews do not escape, but there is a heavy dull ache in their region.

Descending down the alimentary canal, we come to the stomach, where the result in extreme cases are symptoms of gastritis.—Pain, tenderness, and a constant sensation of sickness, and a desire to expectorate, belong to this affection.

The action of the heart and lungs is impaired by the influence of the practice on the nervous system; but the morbid state of the larynx, trachea and the lungs, result from the direct action of the smoke. The voice is observed to be rendered hoarser and with a deeper tone. Sometimes a short cough results, and a case of inflammation of the cartilages of the larynx come under the doctor's notice. The patient was such a slave to the habit, that he hardly ever had the pipe out of his mouth. Similar sufferings have been caused by similar practices in other instances.

Another form is a slight tickling low down in the pharynx or trachea, and the patient coughs or rather hawks up grumous looking blood. It is so alarming as to be mistakable for pulmonary hæmotysis.

The action of tobacco smoking on the heart is depressing; and some individuals, who feel it in this organ more than others, complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple—a distressing feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the spectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than on the left.

On the brain, the use of tobacco seems to diminish the rapidity of serebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefulness, like green tea, than composes to sleep—induces a dreaminess which leaves no impression on the memory, having a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hand and an irritability of temper. Such are secondary results of smoking. So are the blackness of the teeth and gumboils; there is also a sallow paleness of the complexion, an irresoluteness of disposition, and a want of life and energy, and in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary consumption.

Dr. Wright, of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinions; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, coughs, and inflammatory affections of the larynx and pharynx, diseases of the heart, and lowness of spirit; and, in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, circulating, alimentary and nervous system.—Washingtonian.

An Honest Obituary.—We do not often stumble upon anything more honest than the following. A Western editor, announcing the death of an old resident of his town, says:

"He came to his death by too frequently nibbling at the essence of the still-worm, which soon placed him in a non-travelling condition. He lay out the night previous to his death, near a cottage in this place, and was found too late on the following morning for medical aid to be of much importance in staying his breath. He has been a regular tippler for the last half century."

Inhumanity Rebuked.

The Blair County Whig says, a few years ago, while passing over the Pennsylvania State Improvements, the writer was a witness of one of those scenes of genuine kind-heartedness which make the heart thrill with an unutterable blessing, and fills the mind with the unvoluntary consciousness that there is "something of the angel still" in our common nature.

At a point this side the mountains, where occurred the transhipment of passengers from the west, was moored a canal boat, waiting the arrival of the train, ere starting on its way "through" to the East. The captain of the boat, a tall, rough, sun-embrowned man, stood by his craft, superintending the labors of his men, when the cars rolled up, and, a few moments after, a party of about half a dozen gentlemen came out, and deliberately walking up to the Captain, addressed him something after this wise:—"Sir, we wish to go on East—but our further progress to-day will depend on you. In the cars we have just left is a sick man, whose presence is disagreeable. We have been appointed a committee by the passengers, to ask that you will deny this man a passage in your boat. If he goes, we remain — what say you?" "Gentlemen," replied the Captain, "I have heard the passengers through their committee. Has the sick man a representative here?" To this unexpected interrogatory there was no answer, when, without a moment's pause, the Captain crossed over to the car, and entering, beheld in one corner, a poor, emaciated, worn-out creature, whose life was nearly eaten up by that canker-worm, Consumption. The man's head was bowed in his hands, and he was weeping. The Captain advanced, and spoke to him kindly. "Oh! sir!" said the shivering invalid, looking up, his face now lit with trembling expectation. "Are you the Captain—and will you take me? God help me! The passengers look upon me as a breathing pestilence; and are so unkind. You see, sir, I am dying — but, oh! if I am spared to reach my mother I shall die happy. She lives in Burlington, sir, and my journey is more than half performed. I am a poor printer, and the only child of her in whose arms I wish to die!"

"You shall go!" replied the Captain, "if I lose every passenger for the trip!"

By this time the whole crowd of passengers were grouped around the boat, with their baggage piled up on the path, and they themselves awaiting the decision of the Captain before engaging their passage. A moment more and that decision was made, as they beheld him coming from the cars with the sick man cradled in his stout arms.—Pushing directly through the throng with his dying burden, he ordered a mattress to be spread, in the choicest spot of the boat where he laid the invalid with all the care of a parent. That done, the Captain directed the boat to be prepared for starting.

But a new feeling seemed to possess the astonished passengers—that of shame and contrition at their inhumanity. With one common impulse they walked aboard the boat, and, in a few hours after, another committee was sent to the Captain, entreating his presence among the passengers in the cabin. He went, and from their midst arose an aged, white-haired man, who, with the tear-drops starting in his eyes, told that rough sun-embrowned man, that he had taught them all a lesson—that they felt humbled before him, and that they asked his forgiveness. It was a touching scene. The fountain of true sympathy was broken up in the heart of nature, and its waters welled up, choking the utterance and filling the eyes of all present. On the instant a purse was made up for the sick man, with a "God speed!" on his way home, to die in the arms of his mother!

The true-hearted Captain of that boat was Gen. Samuel D. Karns, and the above incident is worth remembering.

A Child's Rebuke.—The following is a fact. A bright, intelligent boy about seven years of age, whose father had been in the constant habit of drinking alcoholic stimulants with his dinner, said to his parent the other day—"Father, what do you drink brandy for?" "O I take it for medicine," replied the father. "Why father you ain't sick," rejoined the son. The parent was nonplussed, but his good spouse came to his aid. "Your father takes it make him strong." The child immediately turned to his mother, "why father isn't weak!" Both parents were silent, for they both felt the justice of the rebuke.

Ye who indulge in your daily glass in the sight of your children, give them a reason if you can—if you dare, why you do so.—U. Ark.

Now for it.

The busiest portion of the season, is passed by. The evenings are growing longer. The time has come to commence with new vigor the strife against the rum power.

Sons of Temperance should everywhere buckle up for the fall and winter campaign, with all the hope and zeal inspired by a righteous warfare. Rivive old enthusiasms and reclaim fresh trophies. Talk with your neighbors and persuade them, circulate temperance publications and temperance truth. Be vigilant, active and discreet. Set an example that can be followed for good. Tell your careless neighbor that whenever he votes for those whom he knows will sustain the rum traffic, he is directly sustaining that business himself. Tell him never to vote that down the throats of others, which he would shrink from having poured down the throats of him and his. Tell him that a wo is pronounced against him who "putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips," and that the voter who casts his suffrages for the support and continuance of the traffic, most effectually does that.

A good time to work! Let no man put on a long face and whimper about past defeats. He is a poor soldier. If we work until we die, and generations after us do the same, our influence will be felt. A band of men once went cold, ragged and hungry, and bled and died, in a seven years' struggle. We are asked to make no such sacrifices. At our homes, in our shops, and in public assemblies, we can peacefully battle for the right.

Fill up the Division Room! Our right for the cause and humanity. Man your brakes when you get there. Don't be so parliamentary and skillful in hair-splitting as to kill all the life in the Division, but work away with a soul warmed through and through. Don't hurry out of the room, but bend manfully to the work.

Sons, and temperance men everywhere! Let the old zeal thrill again along the arteries and fire the sluggish blood into a quicker throb. Remember the triumphs of the past and rejoice at the bright promise of the future—remember the gigantic power of the evil which is so closely woven with every fibre of our social and political fabric—remember the importance and value of the temperance reform. Remember the rum-cursed living and the dishonored dead, and again to the breach, with the stern determination of good citizens and freemen.—Cayuga Chief.

The Engine of Ruin.—Six thousand and three rumshops in the city of New York! Good Heaven! No wonder that vice and crime stalk like demons there at noon-day. No wonder that paupers wail for bread—that women die by inches—that children are schooled in prostitution and crime—that murder and outrage is the order of the day.

Of the above number of hells, 4433 are licensed, 1595 not licensed. Forty-one hundred and eighty-one are open on Sundays. The mind recoils from the contemplation of such facts. A chilling sensation creeps over us as we reflect for a moment upon this vast enginery of evil—this infernal crater of ruin and now seething and smoking with the wreck of mind and body.

And yet our legislators dare not lift a voice for humanity. The people cringe like abject slaves while their very life blood is sucked out by the damning system. Talk of Heathendom! when in one city in the State of New York there are over six thousand drunkard, pauper and felon manufactories in full blast. Think of the hunger and the nakedness—the crushing hopes and heart-achings—the unutterable anguish—the degradation and the untold crimes—and then blush that freemen stand up and advocate and sustain the dark system.—Cayuga Chf.

Beautiful Extract.—One fountain there is, whose deep veins has only just begun to throw up its silver drops among mankind—a fountain which will allay the thirst of millions, and will give to those who drink from it, peace and joy. It is Knowledge; the fountain of intellectual cultivation, which gives health to mankind, makes clear the vision, brings joy to his life, and breathes over his soul's destiny a deep repose. Go, and drink therefrom, thou whom fortune has not favored, and thou wilt soon find thyself rich. Thou mayest go forth into the world, and find thyself everywhere at home; thou canst cultivate in thy own little chamber; thy friends are ever around thee, and carry on wise conversations with thee; nature, antiquity, and heaven are accessible to thee! The industrious kingdom of the ant, the works of man, the rainbow, and music records, offer to thy soul hospitality.—Frederika Bremer.

Temperance Camp Meeting at Crawfordsville.

We have just returned from this camp meeting, where we have spent the past week, and we can say, that we have not in a long time enjoyed so pleasant a time. On Monday we rode through a most disagreeable dust, and arrived at C. early on Tuesday morning. Here we found that for five or six weeks this town had been in a great commotion on the subject of Temperance. Bro. Ross—"the man with the still," had been there, and had held meetings every day and night nearly, during that time. When the excitement commenced, there were nine "liquor hells" in the place, but before the camp meeting commenced, five of them had been closed and their liquors destroyed. On Tuesday at 10 o'clock, the camp meeting was commenced in a beautiful grove North-east of the town. On account of the the rain, there was a small attendance on the forenoon of the first day. During the forenoon, however, a liquor seller named Newton, had concluded to quit the traffic and sign the pledge, which he did before the assembly. He then offered all his stock of liquors as a sacrifice to the good cause, and at one o'clock, the multitudes who had by this time assembled, gathered in the street in front of his establishment, and all the stock of liquors on hand were rolled into the street. We were called on for a speech, and mounting a barrel of Whiskey we spoke a few moments, when Bro. Ross came forward with his hatchet and demolished the whole concern, and the mixed liquors ran in a large stream down the gutter.

The meetings were continued during the afternoon on the camp ground, notwithstanding the rain, and in the evening at one of the churches.

By Wednesday night the crowd had increased to a vast assembly, and Rev. Professor Twining, who had just returned from Maine, was called to the stand and made a splendid effort, and read the Maine liquor law, and after full discussion, it was unanimously voted, that the principles of this law be our Temperance platform.

Hon. Horace E. Carter, in the afternoon, made one of his finest efforts, and when he closed, 70 signed the pledge.

Bro. Ross labored incessantly during all the meeting, and was nearly broken down, but still the head and front of the camp meeting.

On Thursday the Odd Fellows had a celebration in town, which we did not attend, and therefore shall not attempt to describe, but notwithstanding this, there was a considerable crowd on the ground, and a fine speech was made by Rev. S. Frazier of this county.

But Thursday afternoon was the capsheaf of all the Temperance meetings we have ever seen. A procession nearly a mile in length, was formed, composed of the Cadets, Daughters, Sons, Templars, Odd Fellows, Rossonians, Washingtonians, Citizens, Ladies, and strangers, and after marching through the town repaired to the campground, where they were addressed by Bro. Ross in his usually powerful and effective manner; and by the Hon. Henry S. Lane, in decidedly the best Temperance speech we have heard since we listened to John B. Gough. The effect was, that some of the hardest cases in the country signed the pledge. At this time the number on the ground was variously estimated at from three to five thousand! we are satisfied there was at least four, one-half of whom were ladies.

During the meetings, addresses were also made by Rev. Messrs. Boyd, Greene, Gee, and many others, whose names we do not recollect, but we believe every clergyman in Crawfordsville and vicinity was present and took a decided stand.

Col. Samuel C. Wilson was the presiding officer, assisted by five Vice Presidents and two Secretaries.

On Friday we were compelled to leave for home, but as Gen. Cary was expected, and as the meeting was to continue several days, we would not be surprised if it should swell in numbers to ten thousand.

The Secretaries will furnish us with the proceedings, and we will publish the remainder in our next.

Success to Crawfordsville.

Statistics of the Order.

We have received the Journal of the 8th annual session of the National Division of North America, and gather from it the following statistics:

During the past year there have been admitted to the Order 91,776 members — suspended 14,230, expelled 28,849 — increase during the year 48,697.

The greatest number expelled and suspended, has been in Ohio. The present number is 238,908.

This however does not include the State of Michigan, the province of Nova Scotia, and the various Subordinates under the immediate jurisdiction of the National Division. These would increase the number of members to about 300,000—1,738 only out of this vast number have died during the year, which has been one of unusual mortality—showing that temperance conduces to health.

There are in the Order about 7,000 Divisions. The receipts of those reported (6,097) are--For fees and dues, $722,661 18. Paid out for benefits, $194,708 16. Cash on hand, $548,746 68.

A full report would have shown at least $200,000 paid out as benefits to the poor and distressed of our noble Order. Who would not be a Son of Temperance?

Virginia has the most "Sons" in proportion to her population, and Tennessee comes next in the list. Indiana, with a population of less than 1,000,000, lacks but 933 of having as many members as Ohio, with her population of nearly 2,000,000. The receipts of her Divisions are $4,100 more than Ohio, and she has paid $2,500 more for benefits.

THE MAILS.

We have frequent complaints that the Chart does not arrive regularly to our subscribers. We are very particular in mailing and directing every number to every subscriber, and if they do not arrive, it is the fault of the mails, and not ours; but we will in every instance forward papers, where they fail to arrive, if our subscribers will inform us what number is missing.

If any of our city subscribers fail to receive their paper, we will furnish them with the missing copies on application at the office.

PUBLIC MEETINGS IN INDIANAPOLIS DURING THE PRESENT MONTH. — The Indiana Conference of the M. E. Church, will commence its session in this city, on Wednesday the 8th instant.

The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of the State, on Tuesday the 14th instant.

The Grand Section, Cadets of Temperance, on Monday the 13th inst.

And the Grand Union, Daughters of Temperance, on Tuesday the 14th instant.

We hope as all these various bodies meet so nearly at the same time, it will secure for each a large attendance.

CAMP MEETING. — A Temperance Camp Meeting will commence at Boggstown, Shelby county, on the 16th of October inst. We hope it will be well attended.

☞ The annual session of the Grand Union, Daughters of Temperance of Indiana, will be held in this city, commencing on Tuesday October 14th, 1851.

It is desirable that all Subordinate Unions be represented.

ANNA BAGGS, G. S. S.

Indianapolis, Oct. 1, 1851.

GRAND SECTION.—The fourth annual session of the Grand Section of Indiana, will commence in Temperance Hall, Indianapolis, on Monday October 13th, 1851, at 9 o'clock, A. M. It is hoped that there will be a full representation.

HENRY OHR,
G. S. of C. of T.

Indianapolis, Sept. 30, 1851.

☞ When Mrs. Hannah Moore asked Dr. Johnson why he drank no wine, he honestly and wisely said, "Because, if I drink at all, I shall drink too much. Abstinence is as easy as moderation is difficult."

Temperance Lectures.

Bro. E. H. Parsley, G. L., will lecture on on Temperance at the following places at the time mentioned:

At Rushville and vicinity, Oct.	5th and 6th
Burlington,	7th
Morristown,	8th
Charlottesville,	9th
Portland,	10th
Greenfield and vicinity,	11 & 12th
Pleasant View,	13th

At each place at candle-lighting. We hope preparations will be made before Bro. P. arrives for his accommodation, and due notice circulated of the meetings. When Bro. P stops more than one day, it is expected that the brethren will make arrangements for lectures in the vicinity — further appointments will be published in due time.

NEW DIVISIONS.—Since our last, the following new Divisions have been chartered:

117, Starlight, Darlington;
229, Waymansville, Bartholomew Co.;
240, Mt. Meridian, Putnam Co.;
241, Claysville, Washington Co.

Fire.

Many of our readers who were members of the Grand Division and were present at Patriot in April last, will remember the Big Distillery past which our procession moved during the celebration at that place.

Well, the said distillery was burned a few nights since, and we are only sorry that the conflagration did not reach to "some more of the same sort" in that vicinity.

LET THEM DIE.—Some of our friends have tried to dissuade us from recommending any of the candidates on the State ticket, fearing that if the fact is known that they are temperance men they will be defeated.

Our reply is, if being a temperance man will kill a person's political prospects in Ohio, let him die.—Western Fountain.

These are our sentiments exactly, and we don't care who knows it.

JOHN SAILOR, Mayor.
BENJ. W. DAVIS, City Clerk.

MAINE TEMPERANCE LAW.—The stringent temperance law, now in operation in Maine, is attracting the attention both of temperance and anti-temperance men generally.—The former are looking on with deep solicitude, hoping to see a law which contains the most efficient provision for suppressing the traffic of any which has yet been enacted carried fully into execution. Not only the success of the temperance cause in their own State demands this, but its progress in other States call for their united and vigorous action. If the principles of law so generally applied to gamblers, burglars, and counterfeiters can be successfully applied to rumsellers—and we see no reason why it should not be—if the officers of the law can be authorized and sustained in searching out and destroying the instruments of mischief, in this case, as in others, then the last strong hold of rum is taken. As, then, the good people of Maine have "girded on the harness," let them not put it off until the earth has drank the last barrel of liquor illegally retained in the State. The enemy will stoutly dispute the progress of the work; rum men, and particularly rum editors out of the State will sneer at the law; but let it be fully and generally executed, and in five years every other New England State will envy Maine her proud pre-eminence, and, we doubt not, emulate her example.—Vermont Chronicle.

☞ The following hard hit, by Mrs. Sigourney, is as true as it is severe:

"May it please your honors to grant us permission to kill?"

"In what manner do you desire to kill? with the sword?"

"Your petitioners consider the sword as an antiquated way of extinguishing life.—There is a savageness about it, and an useless effusion of blood. Wounds are inconvenient and not always mortal. We wish to do our work with less trouble, and more effectually. Death by the sword is an unjust and partial system: It effects only those who are drawn up in battle array. It falls entirely upon one sex. According to the theory of Malthus, there are more human beings created than the earth is able to contain. Therefore it is necessary that a part be cut off, for the safety and subsistance of the whole. Now as there are full as many women in the world as men, some process of diminution ought to be devised, in which they shall bear due proportion. We petition for leave to kill women and children, as well as men. We pray that power may be given us to enter the domestic sanctuary, and to slay by the fire-side, as well as in the battle-field."

"Do you prefer the use of gunpowder to the sword?"

"May it please your honors, none reverence more than ourselves, the invention of gunpowder. As an expeditious and commodious way of freeing earth of her supernumeraries, it is truly admirable. Nevertheless, we are not perfectly satisfied to adopt it. It is too local in its operations.—When the field is once covered with the dead, the thunder of the cannon ceases.—Battles are not of frequent occurrence. We prefer to employ an agent that needs no rest, and that night and day may follow the work of destruction."

"It would seem, then, that pestilence or famine must be summoned as executors to your commission."

"We suppose that the plague may be imported, and we know that it has produced great effects. The cities of the east have been humbled in sackcloth before it, and desolated London, anciently inscribed with the red cross, and "Lord have mercy upon us," the doors of her smitten and almost tenantless dwellings. The past year, too, in the opening graves of our own land, told how fearful was even the lightest footstep of the destroyer, "walking in darkness."—Famine also has withered whole nations.—They have blighted and faded away; stricken through for want of the fruits of the field." But earth soon renovated herself, and was again clothed with plenty. The harvest whitened, and the grape filled its clusters. The flocks that had vanished from the fold returned, and the herds lowed in their stalls. Health and fulness of bread banished away every trace of weeping and of woe. Not only is the dominion of pestilence and famine transient, but their sway is also restricted. In the height of their power, they kill only the body. They have no authority over the soul. We desire a broader commission. We request liberty to "kill the soul as well as the body."

"What tremendous agent do you then seek, before whom the ravages of war, and pestilence, and famine are forgotten?"

"May it please you to grant our petition for a license to sell intoxicating liquors."

SCISSORS—NEWS.—The Cuban authorities have released three of their American prisoners.——A destructive fire raged in the woods in the south east part of Maine on the 13th inst. HOW TO TELL WHEN A MAN IS DRUNK.—At a village "down South," public intoxication is an offence punishable with five days imprisonment. A difficulty has often occurred in determining whether a subject arrested was really in the state contemplated by the law, or, in other words, whether the subject were drunk, and "publicly" drunk. In "the cell" there is a passage which serves as a thermometer for the corned. The village officers bring the subject to its entrance and say to him, "Now, if you can walk to the other end of this place, without touching on both sides, you will be discharged at once but if not, it is clear that you are publicly drunk, and must take up your lodgings in this boarding house." Much dispute has been obviated by this ingenious arrangement.

☞ On Tuesday some gentleman, assisted by old King Alcohol, attempted to give his better half a small specimen of his dexterity at knocking down and dragging out; while she made use of a mighty strong set of lungs in crying "murder," and other equally hideous terms, which soon brought Mayor Thompson to the spot, who kindly informed the gentleman, that he would furnish him with a room in which to amuse himself.—The last we seen of him he was laying in a tremendous chew of "pig-tail," and travelling up the steps to the town house muttering to the crowd that he was going to "learn to be a Congressman, a Judge or a President." On Wednesday he was taken to Mount Holly, and lodged in jail to await his trial at the next term of Court, for assault and battery.—Bordentown (N. J.) Register.

☞ A very remarkable river, called the Wicass, has been discovered in Florida.—It takes its rise from springs of immense volume, runs in a stream as large as the Potomac or James for fourteen miles, and then disappears in a subterranean channel, and is no more seen.

☞ There is a female now residing in Clarke Co., Georgia, who is 133 years of age. She is quite active, lively and cheerful, converses fluently, and reads well without the use of glasses.

The last case of spiritual knockings we had in Woonsocket, says the Patriot, was a man about half seas over, tapping at the post office window for a gin-cocktail.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.—From the reports of the G. W. P. and G. S. we learn, that the Order throughout the State of New-Jersey, numbering over 120 subordinate Divisions, and a membership of between 6 and 7,000, is with but few exceptions, in a sound and prosperous condition.

☞ The choir of the Musical Convention in Boston, at the Tremont Temple, numbered fifteen hundred voices—the largest it is believed, that ever sung in this country.

☞ Young ladies who read temperance newspapers, are always observed to possess winning ways, most amiable dispositions, invariably make good wives, and always select good husbands.

☞ The Temperance League at Detroit appears to enjoy the confidence of the churches, most of them being represented in the Executive Committee.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AUGUST 25, 1851.

Bro. Woodward:—Dear Sir—I thought it would not be amiss to give you some account of the progress of Temperance here at Rinehart Division. We organized on the 29th of March, with 15 members, and our Division now has 25. We have not had the progress here that some Divisions have, but our members are of the right kind, with some of the very best men of the country, but we have the worst kind of opposition. There are some men that stand high in the church, that take strong ground against us and against the ministers of their own church who have joined the Division; and yet with all their opposition we are still increasing. You may think 25 members a small Division, but ours is a country location. We had a Bible presentation on the 16th, when some of the rummies thought they would give vent to their fury. We had borrowed some plank from the Trustees of the Presbyterian church which they used to seat their church, and made seats to accommodate six hundred persons, but the night before the 16th the rummies sallied forth and piled all the plank in a wagon bed that we had fixed for a stand, and set it on fire. Some of the brethren found it out, however, before day-light, and before the sun was two hours high, we had another stand and seats erected over the ruins of the first. We had a beautiful day and everything went off pleasantly. The Bible was bought by the ladies of the vicinity of Rinehart Division and was presented by Miss Rinehart on behalf of the ladies, and Dr. W. S. Hamilton made a response on behalf of Rinehart Division. After the presentation and the response, Bro. M. C. Culver was called for, when he respnded to the call, by giving one of those able and humorous speeches that he is noted for. Next came Rev. Alford Caves, bringing the scriptural ground; and next Bro. J. Burckhalter, of Rinehart Division, showing the rise and progress of our Order. The ladies, by their hospitality had prepared a large quantity of the choicest sweet cakes, and the audience feasted on cakes and cold water. CLOD HOPPER.

For the Temperance Chart.

Bro. Woodward:—I wish to occupy a small space in the "Chart," to say a few words, about the cause of Temperance.—Now is the time for us to be doing something in our glorious cause. Other States have taken the lead, and why should we not follow. The people are becoming awakened and are beginning to get their eyes open, and to see with a clear light the evils of Intemperance; and we should use every lawful means, and combine all our efforts to keep them open and awaken a still livelier interest among the people, that they may co-operate with us in driving the rumsellers from their haunts, and stopping the sale of of intoxicating beverages. In perusing the last number of the "Chart," I notice that memorials have been prepared and will be sent to each Division for the purpose of circulating them among the people, procuring their names and sending them to the Legislature this winter. Will not every member of every division rouse up and proceed to action and do their duty in this respect, and the memorials will go up to the Legislature with long lists of names, and then it the members of our General Assembly are men of the right stamp, and do their duty, we will have laws that will drive the liquor traffic from our State. But it will require exertion on the part of every "Son" to have this accomplished. So let every one be up and doing, and by our united efforts we can drive the Demon from our land, and the mighty monster intemperance, that now stalks abroad over our country unrestrained, will become a thing that was.

Why can we not have a law as strenuous as that of Maine? Our State is not so old; but why wait until we are as old? We are old enough now, and if we cannot have one as good as that of Maine, let us have one at least as good as that of our sister State, Ohio.

But Mr. Editor, I have written more than I intended, and must stop.

Hoping that every "Son" and "Templar" will direct their attention to this subject,

I remain yours,

In Love, Purity, and Fidelity,

Logansport, Sept. 22d, 1851. J. B.

MEROM, Sept. 22, 1851.

Bro. Woodward:—A little over two years ago, Merom Division, No. 271, was organized through strong opposition. Some of our opponents prophesied it would not live over one year; but through the efforts of a few of the faithful, it is still in existence, and the community have been made to feel its influence. That strong prejudice is fast giving way; our membership is on the increase, and we have received propositions for more. The cause of Temperance appears to be on the advance, and I believe we will yet be able to build up a strong Division here. Our membership, though not large, is generally of the right stamp. We will be able to report an increase of several members by the end of the quarter.

Yours, in L. P. and F. W. P. W.

A LAMENT FOR RUM.—A disconsolate soaker in Ohio laments in the following strain, in the Zanesville Courier, the restriction lately imposed upon the sale of spirituous liquors:

"Jugs has Riz."

Oh! you ought to hear Sam Jones relate
'Bought the good old times in our native State!
When almost every gushing rill
In the Buckeye State could boast its still;
When the strong, pure juice of the rye and corn
Was flowing on from night till morn,
And every man could get a HORN!
Oh LIKKER was cheap, far cheaper than now—
A man could live without keeping a cow!
But Temp'rance RUM, Temp'rance AS IS,
And the price of our grog and jugs HAS RIS.

Now Billy! just wipe 'em tears from your eye,
And PINT me to ONE Distillery!
Dark ruins lie scattered here and there,
Where once our large Distilleries were;
But the STILLS are gone, and the WORM's decay'd,
And their owners are in the Churchyard laid;
For Temp'rance has SPILED the LIKKER trade!
And now, if you'd drive the fog from your throat,
You must carry a Flask in your hat or coat!
For Temp'rance has RUM, Temp'rance AS IS,
And the price of our grog and jugs HAS RIS.

O CRACKEY! the joy good rum will inspire,
When a ring is made round the tavern fire!
Ah! what can compare with the Bar-room seat,
When the joke goes round, and the song and treat!
But the HANDSOMEST places I ever saw
Are all shut up by the License Law,
And we must GUGGLE our LIKKER alone and raw!
Does I boast of our freedom? no, no SIRREE!
I MOUT if LIKKER was cheap and free,
But Temp'rance has RUM, Temp'rance AS IS,
And the price of our grog and jugs has RIS.

I keeps my jug in the coal-hole below,
But there it's a cost and a trouble you know;
Every time I gets dry I must go to the cellar,
And the wimmen folks play such tricks on a feller!
As sure as my name is Swipey P. Soakum
If I'm pizened to death! may Belzebub choke 'em!
For they puts in my jug that Tartarized oakum,
And Ipekakany and Dragon of rotum!
One-half of my LIKKER, as I am a sinner,
Wont stay in that place where I puts in my dinner.
But Temp'rance has RUM, Temp'rance AS IS,
And the price of our grog and jugs HAS RIS.

Olympus, July 1, '51. SWIPEY P. SOAKUM.

Cadets of Temperance.

This junior association banded together, as the friends of Virtue, Morality and Temperance, is composed of the youth of the land. What a beautiful sight; to look upon them assembled together in the same room, having common purposes in view, addressing each other by the endearing name of brother, and mutually inculcating one upon the other, the ennobling principle of rectitude and morality, it is such a sight, as cannot fail to awaken the tenderest emotions of the most insensible heart. Neither riches nor learning, nor worldly distinctions can avail, in gaining admittance to the society of these virtuous youths. Temperance, a total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is with them the most potent charm. If any thing on earth, besides an association of real christians, can adumbrate the society of angels in heaven, 'tis a Section of Cadets of Temperance, clothed in their regalia of white, red and blue, the peculiar emblems of Purity, Fidelity, and Love. Temperance, Love, and Truth; Wisdom and Holiness; Purity and Love; Fidelity and Temperance. All these centred in Him who, in ages far remote, was heard to exclaim—"Suffer little children and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Such were words that occurred to my mind, as I sat and listened to the beautiful, simple, but not the less heavenly doctrines, which the ceremonies of this youthful Order affectionately inculcate. May HE who took little children in his arms and blessed them, bless these young recruits in the armies of Temperance. May the rays of his grace, the teachings of his spirit, and the influence of his wisdom, preserve them from the devious paths of the unfortunate, helpless, hopeless, inebriate. Then will they realize the hopes of their parents, constitute the joy of their brother; and their sisters, become the future guardians and conservators of public morals and possess within themselves an equanimity and peace of mind unknown, even to the moderate dram-drinker. We wish them the most abundant success, and would be glad to see every youth in the country enlisted under its banner. A beautiful sight. J.

WINE.—Let the wine bibbers swallow the following which we take from an article by "Sigma," in the Transcript. It is an old saw that every one must eat his peck of dirt, but it is pretty evident that some who dip deep in the wine cup will stand a chance of getting more than their share, if the following be true. It is an extract from an old writer, who is describing the process of wine making in France. The "kuve" is a large wooden vessel, capable of holding many hogsheads:

"In the kuve which is made use of but once a year, as well as all other parts of their making wine, they are, according to their manner, sufficiently nasty: the grapes are often rotten, and always full of spiders. Besides that, I have been told by those of the country, that they often put salt, dung, and other filthiness into their wine, to help, as they think, its purging. But, without these additions, the very sight of their treading and making their wine, walking without any scruple, out of the grapes into the dirt, and out of the dirt into the grapes they are treading, were enough to set one's stomach ever after against this sort of liquor."

Sigma painfully suggests whether the "nutty" and "cockroachy" flavor, so much in favor with connoisseurs, be not derived from this process, which is still retained in some wine countries.—Crystal Fount.

Miscellaneous.

DEAF WIVES.—Two waggish farmers in Dover, New Hampshire, living some miles apart, got married, and they laid a plan to make some fun on introducing their wives to each other. So each one tells his wife that the other is very deaf, and that a visit was expected from one to the other. A day was sent, and Mr. Ela and wife rode over to Mr. Ricker's.

Mrs. Ricker, not expecting them at the time, happened to be engaged at her domestic duties in the kitchen, but observing her visitors through the window, she flew to the glass to adjust her cap, and put herself in the best trim to receive them, that the moment would allow. In the mean time, Ricker had ushered Mr. Ela and his lady into the parlor, by way of the front door. Soon after Mrs. R. appeared in the presence of her guests.

"Mrs. Ricker, I will make you acquainted with Mrs. Ela," roared Mr. E., in a voice of thunder.

"How do you do, madam?" screamed Mrs R. to Mrs. E., with her mouth close to the ear of the latter.

"Very well, I thank you," replied Mrs. E., in a tone of corresponding elevation.

"How did you leave your family," continued Mrs. R., in a voice quite up to the pitch of her first effort.

"All very well, I thank you; how's your family?" returned Mrs. E., in a key that called into requisition all the power of her lungs.

In the mean time, the men, who were convulsed beyond the power of endurance, had quietly stolen out of the door, and remained under the window, listening to the boisterous conversation of their deaf wives, which was continued on the same elevated letter of the staff for some time, when Mrs. R., in the same ledger line key she had observed from the first, thus addressed her lady guest:

"What on earth are you hallooing to me for; I ain't deaf."

"Ain't you, indeed?" said Mrs. E.; "but pray what are you hallooing to me for; I'm sure I'm not deaf."

Each then came gradually down to her ordinary key, when a burst of laughter from the wags at the window revealed the whole trick, and even the ladies themselves were compelled to join in the merriment they had afforded the outsiders by the character of their interview.

DRUNKENNESS IN THE CHURCH.—A leading member of one of the churches of this city, who has been first and foremost in the prayer meetings of that church, and has always been relied on to give animation to the social religious meetings, has been suddenly, and from this unexpected cause, suspended from the exercise of his functions. He was engaged in a liquor store, and being under the necessity of often tasting the liquor that he might recommend it to his customers, the habit of tasting insensibly grew upon him till it quite obtained the mastery. He not long since went home from his business and was attacked with delirium tremens. He at once attacked his family, maltreated them, as drunkards often do, and next day was taken to an insane asylum. How many other professed Christian men in this city are engaged in this unchristian business of liquor selling, we know not,—and whether the same results will follow in their case, we know not. But we would ask, with all sincertty, have not the churches something to do in arresting this rising tide of intemperance? Is it not enough that among the lowest class of community, the hangers-on of the vile groggeries, fighting, stabbing and murder should become common, as of late, in this city? Must church members have the delirium tremens, abuse their families, and go to the Insane Asylum? The ancients said: "A word to the wise is sufficient." Who then is wise? for on this subject words have been written "line upon line, and precept upon precept."—N. York Tribune.

☞ A vagrant called at a house on Sunday and begged for some cider. The lady refused to give him any, and he reminded her of the oft quoted remark, that she might entertain an angel unawares,"

"Yes," replied the lady, "but angels don't go about drinking cider on Sundays!"

A SELF-DESTROYER.—A preacher in Ohio lately communicated the following statement to the Christian Mirror:

"About thirty miles from my residence, a young man of intemperate habits had kept his parents in constant fear for several weeks, by his violent, threatening deportment. At length, he one day rushed at his father, with a stone in his hand, exclaiming, "You or I must die." Being intoxicated, he fell forward on the ground. A flask which he had in his pantaloons pocket, broke; a piece of the glass penetrated his body, severed an artery, and in less than a minute he was dead."

☞ In Bangor, there were one hundred and twenty-five grog shops when the law passed. The Mayor gave the dealers thirty days to quit. When the time was out, there was not a liquor-seller in the city.

The Social Temple.

The Social Temple—what is that? It is a degree in the Temple of Honor, into which ladies are admitted, with the most beautiful and appropriately impressive ceremonies. Those who are initiated take a solemn obligation of total abstinence during life. Alcoholic drinks are prohibited in all forms, and their use, except strictly as a medicine, entirely forbidden. Here both Brother and Sister Templars may meet as a social temperance organization. All the business details are transacted by the Brothers in the Subordinate Temple, so that the Social Temple has nothing to do but admit and initiate members, and talk temperance. The members have signs and tokens of recognition; and every lady is assured of aid and support when in trouble or in need, wherever a Brother Templar is found. The Social Degree meetings are delightful temperance reunions, and, we think, much more pleasant and profitable than the fashionable parties. where wines dis-grace the sideboard, and heartlessness and envy are too often the predominent influences.—Peninsular Fount'n.

A SLY DASH AT THE "CRITTER."—One of our subscribers, says the Rhode Island Republican, who happened to be in Newport last summer, got down into the bar-room at a very early hour, when there was nobody but a boy in attendance, when lo! who should come first but a tall, well dressed Quaker gentleman, who had been attracted thither by the "yearly conference." The friend looked about for a moment, and turning to the boy inquired: "Boy, dost thee ever make any lemonade?"

"Certainly, sir—a great deal every day."

"Well, make me a glass. Take that largest size tumbler."

Boy mixes ingredients, and pours in water about half full.

"Stop—leave a vacancy. Has thee any old French brandy?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, pour till I tell thee to stop."

The boy acted accordingly.

"Stop!" exclaimed the Quaker, in due time; "has thee any good Jamaica rum?"

"No, sir."

"Any Santa Cruz?"

"Yes."

"Well, pour till I tell thee to stop."

It was done, and the boy mixed the contents of the tumbler, which was brimfull, in the usual mode, our Quaker friend raised it to his lips, and poured down in one continuous stream the whole "arrangement," without the interruption of a breath. Then with a look of satisfaction to the inner man which on such occasions, is seen but not described, as he sat down his glass, and inquired what was to pay. He paid, and turned to go away, but stopped as if he had forgotten something, just as he had reached the door, and casting an eye to the fountain of refreshments, where he had imbibed the exhilerating beverage, he exclaimed—

"Lad, thee's a very small boy; but thee does make a gr-gr-great lemonade!"

ST. CLAIR'S DEFEAT IN 1791.—The bones of the gallant dead, of the heroes who were massacred at Fort Recovery in 1791, thro' the treachery of Indian Allies, are to be exhumed and re-interred, with appropriate honors, by the citizens of Mercer county, Ohio, on the 10th inst., the anniversary of Perry's victory. Gen. Cass, has been invited to pronounce a funeral oration on the occasion.

CHILD EATEN BY A WILD ANIMAL.—A child of Jonathan Ayres, of Canterbury, N. H., was sent out into a pasture on Wednesday last, but not returning, search revealed the horrid fact that it had been killed and mostly eaten by some savage animal, supposed to be a wolf. Some of the child's limbs were found, and a party of hunters started out the next day to ferret out the wild beast. Such animals have not been known in that vicinity for many years.

A TEMPERANCE ITEM.—We recently conversed with a highly respected magistrate of Fayette county, in this State, who among other things informed us that in his county there is not a single tavern or other place where spirituous liquor is sold in either small or large quantities. Fayette is one of the richest portions of Ohio, and since the banishment of King Alcohol, there has been no paupers or other charge upon township trustees.—Cincinnati Gazette.

☞ A young married women of respectability, while enjoying the society of friends, drank too freely of sweet wine on Tuesday evening. She made an effort to get home without attendance, and fell in the street. When found by her friends, it was discovered that she had been robbed of her gold watch and chain. Officer Kemble accompanied her home.—Cin. Com.

RESCUE.—Wednesday, about 12 o'clock, a man in a state of intoxication fell into the river from a schooner anchored off the Cunard dock, at Jersey City, and would have drowned but for the opportune assistance of Col. Hockly, second officer of the Asia, who went off to his assistance, and succeeded in bringing him to shore at the peril of his own life.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Temperance Appeal from real Life.

The sun rose brightly one summer morning, and joy was in the family of our friends as they commenced the duties of another day. The laughing voices of the little ones also shed its sunshine upon their home.—And never did little A. seem more joyous, nor look more noble than upon that morning, as he started out to seek again his play-fellows. His mother's eye glistened with all the pride and fondness of the parent as she smoothed his shining locks, and heart yearned for his welfare, as she bade him "be a good boy to-day." He saunters slowly from his home, finding one thing after another to allure him on. True to his childish simplicity he imitates the employments of men—he builds and destroys the tiny house, the fragile railroad track, the work of ingenuity—is demolished by the heedless tread of the first passer. Soon he sees the crowd gather around a certain door—something is going on there—his curiosity is aroused—he follows them—and within he hears them talk "great swelling words." He sees the cause on the counter before them. He would be large, too, and again he imitates, and is bitten by the most fearful of all reptiles. He goes back to the happy home he left, insensible, an idiotic, disgusting, reeling object. Oh, God! the agony of that mother's heart, when she beholds him thus changed—who can tell? No pencil can picture the pangs of the parents, when they for the first time beheld their idol—their once bright eyed boy an idiot. They would have mourned for the loss of an unsullied jewel, oh how deeply, had they seen his beautiful form in its little shroud. But now his tongue lolls disgustingly from his mouth, his pewter eye-balls roll senseless in his head and he may die thus. Is there no hope for him; can he be restored? Yes mother the coming morrow may restore him to sense and beauty again, but thy mother's eye must guard him with all the vigilance it can summon—for the same serpent that bit him, lurks in your midst; he has been charmed by its many colored stripes—he will seek to be bitten again, and again, unless more than human aid guard him, he will fall a victim to its loathsome evils.

Will the citizens of our city sit idle and heedless when they have it in their power to stop this inhuman carnage? In the name of humanity, do not consider it a light thing, but rise in your moral majesty as a people and come forward on Monday next and vote the monster from our midst—Richmond Palladium.

EMPTYING THE JUGS.—A number of Jugs of all sizes, seized by the police on the 4th of July, containing various kinds of intoxicating and poisonous liquors, were emptied of their contents into the Common Sewer, near the Court House, in the presence of many spectators this A. M., at eleven o'clock and the jugs returned to the Marshal's office. These liquors were found secreted in various spots in and about our beautiful Common, on Independence Day, and by their timely discovery, no doubt many a poor fellow was saved from the House of Correction, and the city the costs of their commitment.—Boston Traveller.

THE LAST SPEECH OF MRS. PARTINGTON.—"Fifty-two Sons of Temperance," exclaimed the old lady, "and twenty-five Daughters too! Why bless me how many children has aunt Tempy got? And I hear them talk of Cadets of Temperance. What sort of debts are them? But no wonder she owes debts when she has so many children to maintain—how I pity the old crittur."—And the old lady pulled her spectacles down on her nose and resumed her knitting.

☞ There are in Albany seven breweries in full operation, which consume, by estimate, 400,000 bushels of barley annually, which, at 75 cents a bushel amounts to $300,000; 100,000 barrels of ale are made, which at $5 per barrel, produces the sum of 500,000 dollars.

☞ It is stated that no person was ever "sun struck" who was not in the habit of using intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

SOMETHING NEW.—We understand that two females, not over 100 miles from this city, were indicted at the last circuit court of this county for retailing liquor! "Lead us not into temptation—deliver us from evil!"—Richmond Pal.

☞ The Temperance Societies of the State of Maine, had a grand celebration in Portland on Tuesday. The possession was three-quarters of a mile long, four abreast, and represented the bone and sinew of the Commonwealth.

MOVEMENTS OF WILD CAT.

Mr. W. Secrest, who has recently visited the Mexican towns in the vicinity of Eagle Pass, informs the editor of the Houston Telegraph, that the statement published lately, in regard to the number of runaway negroes that have collected in those towns is entirely correct. He says he was informed that no less than two hundred and seventy runaways crossed the ferries at Eagle Pass and Laredo last year. Several hundred also crossed at the fords above Eagle Pass. It is estimated that there are not less than eighteen hundred runaways at the town that has lately been built by Wild Cat near the mouth of Los Moras. The greater part of these runaways have escaped from Arkansas, but at least five hundred are, it is said, fugitives from Texas. Wild Cat has a large number of negroes armed and they often accompany him on his expeditions against the Camanches. He has made two successful forays into the Camanche country. On one of these forays he had about two hundred Indians and one hundred negro warriors. He attacked a large Camanche lodge, killed one huudred and fifty warriors, and captured over one hundred horses and mules. On his second expedition against the Camanches, he was accompanied by one hundred Mexicans and a large party of Kickapoos. Several hundred horses and mules were captured, but the Mexicans claimed the lion's share of the spoil, and this so enraged the Kickapoos that they stole all the captured property and went back to Red River. It is thought that Wild Cat advised his Indian alies to rob the Mexicans, and that he will share the spoils. His forces appear to be daily augmenting, and it is feared that he will soon concentrate several thousand Indian warriors from Arkansas to his new settlement.

LAMARTINE says, through he scarcely exceeds the middle age of man, he has seen in France ten revolutions. Judging from present indications, should he live to a good old age, he will see ten more in the same country.

W. P's. and Sections are reminded that by their charters, and the Constitutions of Grand and Subordinate Sections, it is made their duty to forward regularly the Quarterly Returns. Many of the Sections having failed to do so, for one, two and three quarters past, will please attend to this matter immediately, and forward to the Grand Secretary a report for the quarter ending June 30th, and regularly hereafter, or their charters will be forfeited. Such as have disbanded should at least give notice to the G. S., and return charters, red books, and officer's cards, post paid.

As the Grand Section requires all communications from Subordinate Sections to be prepared, such as are not, will be charged to their account and will cost them nearly double postage. Those ordering documents would do well to forward funds to pre-pay postage on said documents, should there be an overplus they will receive credit on account.

Shall we have your returns for the present quarter by the 10th of October to enable us to make a full report to the Grand Section at its annual session on the 13th of October next.

OF

THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.

Published in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and devoted to the Interests of the Order of the Temple of Honor.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

THIS Popular Magazine, having met with the hearty approval of the Temple Order, wherever it circulated during its first year, will commence its Second Volume on the first of September, 1851. It will as heretofore, be issued on the first of every month, each number containing

THIRTY TWO PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER,

in pamphlet form, convenient for binding—making at the end of the year a volume of three hundred and eighty-four pages—at the low price of

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The established character of this Magazine—its approval and recommendation by National, Grand, and Subordinate Temples—the liberal terms on which it is published, placing it within the reach of every member of the Order—and the will render it a desirable companion for every Templar who wishes to supply his family with good temperance reading, and keep himself posted in the doings and progress of the Order of which he is a member. This Magazine is the first and ONLY publication ever devoted particularly to the Temple Order, and is not confined to any locality, but is designed to be the Organ of the whole Order. This gives it a peculiar claim on the Fraternity for encouragement and support.

While it aims to be the expositor of the Temple Order, it will give an impartial and faithful history of all important temperance movements, whether by individual or associated action, or legislative enactments and thus form a valuable journal for every friend of temperance and morality.

The services of several able writers are already secured for its pages; and, as the subscription list increases, more will be added. No labor or expense, consistent with our means, will be spared to make it just what the temperance portion of community desire: a good family Magazine not surpassed by any in the country.

Poetry.

INTEMPERANCE.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

Parent!—who with speechless feeling,
O'er thy cradled treasure bent,
Every year new claims revealing,
Yet thy wealth of love unspent,—
Hast thou seen that blossom blighted
By a drear untimely frost?
All thy labor unrequited?
Every glorious promise lost?

Wife!—with agony unspoken,
Shrinking from affliction's rod,
Is thy prop, thine idol broken,—
Fondly trusted,—next to God?
Husband!—o'er thy hopes a mourner,
Of thy chosen friend ashamed,
Hast thou to her burial borne her,
Unrepented, unreclaimed?

Child!—in tender weakness turning
To thy heaven-appointed guide,
Doth a lava-poison burning
Tinge with gall affection's tide?
Still that orphan burden bearing,
Darker than the grave can show,
Dost thou bow thee down despairing,
To a heritage of woe?

Country!—on thy sons depending,
Strong in manhood, bright in bloom,
Hast thou seen thy pride descending
Shouded,— to the unhonored tomb?
Rise?—on eagle pinion soaring,—
Rise!—like one of God-like birth,—
And Jehovah's aid imploring,
Sweep the spoiler from the earth?

THE FLAG OF OUR UNION.

BY GEO. P. MORRIS.

"A song for our banner!" The watchword recall
Which gave the republic her station:
"United we stand—divided we fall!"—
It made and preserved us a nation!
The union of lakes—the union of lands—
The union of States none can sever—
The union of hearts—the union of hands—
And the Flag of the Union forever
And ever!
The Flag of the Union forever!

What God in his infinite wisdom designed,
And armed with republican thunder,
Not all the earth's despots and factions combined
Have the power to conquer or sunder!
The union of lakes—the union of lands—
The union of States none can sever—
The union of hearts—the union of hands—
And the Flag of the Union forever
And ever!
The Flag of the Union forever!

Miscellaneous.

The Maine Law.

SECTION 1. No person shall be allowed, at any time, to manufacture or sell, by himself, his clerk, servant, or agent, directly or indirectly, any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquors, a part of which is spirituous or intoxicating, except as hereafter provided.

SEC. 2. The town council of any town, and mayor and aldermen of any city, on the first Monday of May annually, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, may appoint some suitable persons as the agent of said town or city, to sell at some central and convenient place within said town, or city, spirits, wines, or other intoxicating lixuors, to be used for medicinal and mechanical purposes, and no other; and said agent shall receive such compensation for his services as the board appointing him shall prescribe; and shall, in the sale of such liquors, conform to such rules and regulations as the town council, or mayor and aldermen, as aforesaid, shall prescribe for that purpose. And such agent, appointed as aforesaid, shall hold his situation for one year, unless sooner removed by the board from which he received his appointment, as he may be, at any time, at the pleasure of said board.

SEC. 3. Such agent shall receive a certificate from the mayor and aldermen, or town council, by whom he has been appointed, authorizing him, as the agent of such town or city, to sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal and mechanical purposes only; but such certificate shall not be delivered to the person so appointed, until he shall have executed and delivered to said board a bond, with two good and sufficient sureties, in the sum of six hundred dollars, in substance as follows:

Know all men that we, —— as principal, and —— and —— as sureties, are holden and stand firmly bound to the inhabitants of the town of ——, (or city as the case may be,) in the sum of six hundred dollars, to be paid them, to which payment we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our seals, and dated shis —— day of ——, A. D. ——.

The condition of this obligation is such, that whereas the above bounden, ——, has been duly appointed an agent for the town (or city) of ——, to sell within, and for and on account of said town, (or city,) intoxicating liquors, for medicinal and mechanical purposes, and no other, until the —— of ——, A. D. ——, unless sooner removed from said agency.

Now if the said —— shall in all respects conform to the provisions of the law relating to the business for which he is appointed, and to such rules and regulations as now are or shall be from time to time established by the board making the appointment, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force.

SEC. 4. If any person, by himself, clerk, servant, or agent, shall at any time sell any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquors, part of which is intoxicating, in violation of the provisions of this act, he shall forfeit and pay on the first conviction ten dollars, and the cost of prosecution, and shall stand committed until the same be paid; on the second conviction he shall pay twenty dollars and the cost of prosecution, and shall stand committed until the same be paid; on the third, and every subsequent conviction, he shall pay twenty dollars and the costs of prosecution, and shall be imprisoned in the common jail not less than three months, nor more than six months.—And if any clerk, servant, agent, or other person, in the employment or on the premises of another, shall violate the provisions of this section, he shall be held equally guilty with the principal, and on conviction shall suffer the same penalty.

SEC. Any forfeiture or penalty arising under the above section may be recovered by an action of debt, or by complaint before any justice of the peace, or judge of any municipal or police court, in the county where the offense was committed. And the forfeiture so recovered shall go to the town where the convicted party resides, for the use of the poor; and the prosecutor or complainant may be admitted as a witness in the trial. And if any one of the town council or board of mayor and aldermen shall approve of the commencement of any such suit, by endorsing his name upon the writ, the defendant shall in no event recover any costs, and in all actions of debt arising under this section the fines and forfeitures suffered by the defendant shall be the same as if the actions had been by complaint. And it shalt be the duty of the mayor and aldermen of any city, and the town council of any town, to commence an action in behalf of said town or city, against any person guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, on being informed of the same, and being furnished with proof of the fact.

SEC. 6. If any person shall claim an appeal from a judgment rendered against him by any judge or justice, on trial of such action or complaint, he shall, before the appeal shall be allowed, recognize in the sum of one hundred dollars, with two good and sufficient sureties, in every case so appealed, to prosecute his appeal, and to pay all costs, fines, and penalties that may be awarded against him, upon a final disposition of such suit or complaint. And before his appeal shall be allowed, he shall also, in every case, give a bond, with two other good and sufficient sureties, running to the town or city where the offense was committed, in the sum of two hundred dollars, that he will not, during the pendency of such appeal, violate any of the provisions of this act.—And no recognizance or bond shall be taken in cases arising under this act, except by the justice or judge before whom the trial was had: and the defendant shall be held to advance the jury fees in every case of appeal in an action of debt; and in the event of a final conviction before a jury, the defendant shall pay and suffer double the amount of fines, penalties, and imprisonment awarded against him by the justice or judge from whose judgment the appeal was made. The forfeiture for all bonds and recognizances given in pursuance of this act, shall go to the town or city where the offense was committed, for the use of the poor; and if the recognizances and bonds mentioned in this section shall not be given, within twenty-four hours after the judgment, the appeal shall not be allowed; the defendant in the meantime to stand committed.

SEC. 7. The mayor and aldermen of any city, and the town council of any town, whenever complaint shall be made to them, that a breach of the conditions of the bond given by any person appointed under this act, has been committed, shall notify the person complained of, and if, upon a hearing of the parties, it shall appear that a breach has been committed, they shall revoke and make void his appointment, And whenever a breach of any bond, given to the inhabitants of any city or town, in pursuancy of any of the provisions of this act, shall be made known to the mayor and aldermen, or town council, or shall in any manner come to their knowledge, they, or some one of them shall, at the expense and for the use of said city or town, cause the bond to be put in suit in any court proper to try the same.

SEC. 8. No person shall be allowed to be a manufacturer of any spirituous or intoxicating liquor, or common seller thereof, without being duly appointed as aforesaid, on pain of forfeiting, on the first conviction, the sum of one hundred dollars and costs of prosecution, and in default of the payment thereof, the person so convicted shall be imprisoned sixty days in the common jail; and on the second conviction, the person so convicted shall pay the sum of two hundred dollars and costs of prosecution, and in default of payment shall be imprisoned four months in the common jail; and on the third and every subsequent conviction shall pay the sum of two hundred dollars, and shall be imprisoned four months in the common jail of the county where the offense was committed; said penalties to be recovered before any court of competent jurisdiction, by indictment, or by action of debt in the name of the city or town where the offense shall be committed. And whenever a default shall be had of any recognizance arising under this act, scire facias shall be issued, returnable at the next term, and the same shall not be continued unless for good cause satisfactory to the court.

SEC. 9. No person engaged in the unlawful traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be competent to sit upon any jury in any case arising under this act; and when information shall be communicated to the court that any member of any panel is engaged in such traffic, or that he is believed to be so engaged, the court shall inquire of the juryman of whom such belief is entertained; and no answer which he shall make shall be used against him in any case arising under this act; but if he shall answer falsely, he shall be incapable of serving on any jury in this State; but he may decline to answer, in which case he shall be discharged by the court from all further attendance as a juryman.

SEC. 10. All cases arising under this act, whether by action, indictment, or complaint, which shall come before a superior court, either by appeal or original entry, shall take precedence in said court of all other business, except those criminal cases in which the parties are actually under arrest, awaiting a trial; and the court and prosecuting officer shall not have authority to enter a nolle prosequi, or to grant a continuance in any case arising under this act, either before or after the verdict, except where the purposes of justice shall reqnire it.

SEC. 11. If any three persons, voters in the town or city where the complaint shall be made, shall, before any justice of the peace, or judge of any municipal or police court, make complaint under oath or affirmation, that they have reason to believe, and do believe, that spirituous or intoxicating liquors are kept or deposited, and intended for sale, by any person not authorized to sell the same in said city or town, under the provisions of this act, in any store, shop, warehouse, or other building or place in said city or town, said justice or judge shall issue his warrant of search to any sheriff, city marshal, or deputy, or to any constable, who shall proceed to search the premises described in said warrant, and if any spirituous or intoxicating liquors are found therein, he shall seize the same, and convey them to some proper place of security, where he shall keep them until final action is had thereon. But no dwelling house in which, or in part of which a shop is not kept shall be searched, unless at least one of said complainants shall testify to some act of sale of intoxicating liquors therein, by the occupant thereof, or by his consent or permission, within at least one month of the time of making said complaint. And the owner or keeper of said liquors, seized as aforesaid, if he shall be known to the officer seizing the same, shall be summoned forthwith before the justice or judge by whose warrant the liquors were seized, and if he fails to appear, or unless he can show by positive proof, that said liquors are of foreign production, that they have been imported under the laws of the United States, and in accordance therewith—that they are contained in the original packages in which they were imported, and in quantities not less than the laws of the United States prescribe, they shall be declared forfeited, and shall be destroyed by authority of the written order to that effect of said justice or judge, and in his presence, or in the presence of some person appointed by him to witness the destruction thereof, and who shall join with the officer by whom they shall have been destroyed, in attesting that fact upon the back of the order by authority of which it was done; and the owner or keeper of such liquors shall pay a fine of twenty dollars and costs, or stand committed for thirty days, in default of payment, if, in the opinion of the court, said liquors shall have been kept or deposited for the purpose of sale. And if the owner or possessor of any liquors seized in pursuance of this section shall set up the claim that they have been regularly imported under the laws of the United States, and that they are contained in the original packages, the custom house certificates of importation and proofs of marks on the casks or packages corresponding thereto shall not be received as evidence that the liquors contained in said packages are those actually imported therein.

SEC. 12. If the owner, keeper, or possessor of liquors seized under the provisions of this act shall be unknown to the officer seizing the same same, they shall not be condemned and destroyed until they shall have been advertised, with the number and description of the packages as near as may be, for two weeks, by posting up a written description of the same in some public place, that if such liquors are actually the property of any city or town in the State, and were so at the time of the seizure, purchased for sale by the agent of said city or town, for medicinal and mechanical purposes only, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, they may not be destroyed; but upon satisfactory proof of such ownership within two weeks, before the justice or judge by whose authority said liquors were seized, said justice or judge shall deliver to the agent of said city or town an order to the officer having said liquors in custody, whereupon said officer shall deliver them to said agent, taking his receipt therefor upon the back of said order, which shall be returned to said justice or judge.

SECT. 13. If any person claiming any liquors seized as aforesaid, shall appeal from the judgement of any justice or judge by whose authority the seizure was made to a higher court, before his appeal shall be allowed, he shall give a bond in the sum of two hundred dollars with two good and sufficient sureties to procure his appeal, and to pay all fines and costs which may be awarded against him; and in the case of any such appeal, where the quantity of liquor so seized shall exceed five gallons, if the final decision shall be against the applicant, that such liquors were intended by him for sale, he shall be adjudged by the court a common seller of intoxicating liquors, and shall be subject to the penalties provided for in section eight, of this act; and said liquors shall be destroyed as provided for in section eleven. But nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent any chemist, artist, or manufacturer in whose art or trade they may be necessary, from keeping at his place of business such reasonable and proper quantity of distilled liquors as he may have occasion to use in his art or trade, but not for sale.

SEC. 14. It shall be the duty of any mayor, alderman, town-councilman, assessors, city marshall or deputy, or constable, if he shall have information that any intoxicating liquors are kept or sold in any tent, shanty, hut, or place of any kind for selling refreshments, in any public place on or near the ground of any cattle show, agricultural exhibition, military muster, or public occasion of any kind, to search such suspected place, and if such officer shall find upon the premises any intoxicating drinks he shall seize them, and arrest the keeper or keepers of such place, and take them forthwith or as soon as may be practicable, before some justice or judge of a municipal or police court, with the liquors so found and seized, and upon proof that such liquors are intoxicating that they were found in possession of the accused, in a tent, shanty, or other place as aforesaid, he or they shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for thirty days, and the liquor so seized shall be destroyed by order of said justice or judge.

SEC. 15. If any person arrested under the preceding section and sentenced as aforesaid, shall claim an appeal, before his appeal shall be allowed, he shall give a bond in the sum of one hundred dollars, with two good and sufficient sureties, that he will prosecute his appeal and pay all fines, costs and penalties which may be awarded against him. And if on such appeal the verdict of the jury shall be against him, he shall in addition to the penalty awarded by the lower court, pay a fine of twenty dollars. In all cases of appeal under this act from the judgment of a justice or judge of any municipal or police court, to the common pleas court, except where the proceeding is by action of debt, they shall be conducted in said district court by the prosecuting officer of the government—and said officer shall be entitled to receive all costs taxable to the State in all criminal proceeding under this act, in addition to the salary allowed to such officer by law—but no costs in such cases shall be remitted by the prosecuting officer or the court. In any suit, complaint, indictment, or other proceeding against any person for a violation of any of the provisions of this act, other than for the first offence, it shall not be requisite to set forth particularly the record of a former conviction, but it shall be sufficient to allege briefly that such person has been convicted of a violation of the fourth section of this act, or as a common seller, as the case may be, and such allegation in any civil or criminal process in any stage of the proceedings, before final judgment, may be amended without terms and as matter of right.

SEC. 16. All payments or compensations for liquors sold in violation of law, whether in money, labor or other property, either real or personal, shall be held and considered to have been received in violation of law, and without consideration, and against law, equity and a good conscience, and all sales, transfers and conveyances, mortgages, liens, attachments, pledges and securities of every kind, which either in whole or in part, shall have been for or on account of spirituous or intoxicating liquors, shall be null and void against all persons and in all cases, and no rights of any kind shall be acquired thereby; and in any action either at law or equity, touching such real or personal estate, the purchaser of such liquors may be a witness for either party. And no action of any kind shall be maintained in any court in this State, either in whole or in part for intoxicating or spiritous liquors sold in any other State or country whatever, nor shall any action of any kind be had or maintained in this State, for the recovery or possession of intoxicating or spiritous liquors, or the value thereof.

SEC. 17. All the provisions of this act relating to towns shall be applicable to cities; and those relating to town council shall also be applied to the mayor and aldermen of cities.

SEC. 18. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act—as providing for the granting of license to sell spirituous liquors in certain cases, or providing penalties for the illegal traffic in the same—are hereby repealed, saving and reserving all actions or other proceedings which are already commenced by authority of the same.

"Fellow citizens," said a stump orator, "we have the best country in the world, and the best government. No people on the face of this globe enjoy more liberty than we do. Here we have liberty of speech and liberty of press, without onerous despotism. What, fellow citizens, is more desirable than this? Do you want anything more my countrymen?"

"Yes, sir-ee!" sang out a red faced loafer, "this is dry work. I want a suck out of that pint flask sticking out of your coat pocket behind."

Our orator was completely winged in his lofty flight, and came down floundering. He suddenly vamosed from that neighborhood.

DISTANCE OF THE SUN. — Imagine a railway from here to the sun. How many hours is the sun from us? Why; if we were to send a baby in an express train, going incessantly a hundred miles an hour, without making any stopages, the baby would grow to be a boy—the boy would grow to be a man—the man would grow old and die—without seeing the sun, for it is more than a hundred years from us. But what is this compared with Neptune's distance? Had Adam and Eve started, by our railway, at the creation, to go from Neptune to the sun, at the rate of fifty miles an hour, they would not have got there yet; for Neptune is more than six thousand years from the centre of our system.—Household Words.

DEACON BARNES AND THE DRUNKARD.—A man once addicted to intemperance, but who for some months had entirely abstained, though he had not joined the Temperance Society, took occasion not long since to relate, in a temperance meeting, his experience in regard to the influence of temperate drinkers of respectable standing in society, upon the habits of the drunkard.

"Many a time," said he, "have I gone to Capt. Johnson's tavern and waited for half an hour, or an hour, for some respectable man to come in and go to the bar and call for liquor. After a while, Deacon Barnes would come in and call for some spirits and water. Then I could get up to the bar and do as he did."

Deacon Barnes hearing of this, asked him if it was so.

"It is," said the man.

"Well," rejoined the Deacon, you shall hang on me no longer. I joined the Temperance Society yesterday."

"Did you?"

"Yes."

"Well, then I will join to-day, for I can do without liquor as long as Deacon Barnes can"

He did join, and remained a consistent temperance man afterwards.

Indiana Legislature.

This body met in this city on the 1st inst. The Senate organized, Lieut. Gov. J. H. Lane in the Chair; by electing John P. Dunn Principal Secretary, J. H. Vawter, Assistant Secretary, Wm. M. Patterson, doorkeeper.

The House was organized by the election of Hon. John W. Davis, Speaker; George L. Sites, of Allen, Chief Clerk; A. J. Boone, of Boone, Assistant Clerk; G. W. Patterson of Dearborn, Doorkeeper, and Washington Holloway, of Montgomery, Sergeant-at-arms.

The Governor's Message was delivered on Tuesday and the two bodies then proceeded to the usual business of legislation. We shall publish from time to time, short sketches of such business as we think will interest our readers.

Legislative Actions.

On the 5th inst., Mr. Gunn of Harrison county, introduced into the House of Representatives, a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of five on the subject of Temperance.

The chair appointed Messrs. Gunn, of Harrison, Bryant of Warren, Lindsey of Fayette, Helmer of Lawrence, and Wilson of Randolph said committee. To this committee all our memorials will be referred, that are presented in the House, and much will depend upon their action.

We presume from the fact of his making the motion that Mr. Gunn is a temperance man. Mr. Bryant is not a teetotaller, but may be favorable to a temperance law. Mr. Helmer is a temperance man and said to be favorable to a temperance law. We have heard a story about Mr. Wilson which if true is not favorable to temperance principles or temperance laws. Of Mr. Lindsay we know nothing, but we shall soon have an opportunity of seeing what is to be done.—We hope for the best and will advise our readers how things go on.

Proceedings of the Grand Divison.

Should any Division or any one entitled to a copy fail to receive it, they will be supplied on application by letter or otherwise, to the Grand Scribe. The abstract of these proceedings prepared six weeks since, for the Chart, is again crowded out, and as it is now so late we have concluded not to publish them.

☞ We extract the following from an address delivered by N. W. Harmon Esq, G. W. P. of Massachusetts, at Tremont Temple, Boston.

It describes the situation and feelings of many a poor inebriate. He says:

"Some ten years since, a gentleman, the son of a man of wealth, influence and character, graduated at the distinguished institution near your favored city. He graduated with the highest honors of his class. He was of Southern birth, and soon after he left college removed to the South, where he studied his profession, commencing the practice of the law in Savannah.—Soon after he married into one of the most respectable families of the South. He possessed great talents, and soon obtained a very lucrative business in his profession.—But, unfortunately, he had formed the habit of occasional drinking. He was blessed with two children. His indulgence in drink continued. Soon, his wife discovered the effect upon her husband—as the wife ever is the first discoverer of this effect. He went on from one stage of inebriety, of disgrace, to another, until he became what is called a gutter drunkard. A classmate from the north, visiting the city, was requested to go and see that man, and to talk with him upon the subject of his habits. He lived, not in the stately mansion that he occupied soon after his marriage, but in a lowly tenement. His friend and classmate went there, and told the unhappy victim the purpose of his visit. "Before you proceed to talk with me upon this subject," said he, "I wish to say a few words to you; and, after I have conclued, I shall be perfectly willing to converse with you. In such a year," continued he, "I graduated from college with the highest honors of my class. I came down here, pursued my law studies, was unexpectedly successful, and soon earned fifteen thousand dollars in my profession. That year I married one of the loveliest women that God ever made; happiness was mine; children blessed our fire-side. But, sir, day by day, I have known that my habits of drunkenness were killing my wife, my property has gone, I have beggard my children, and it is all owing to the cursed appetite for strong drink which I have contracted. I see all this, sir, too vividly see it! And now, sir, if you have anything to say to me, upon the subject of drinking, I am ready to hear it!"

Friends, what could that classmate say to him, after such a statement, seeing and knowing, as he himself did, the accursed influence this great vice was having upon his intellect and his habits?

☞ There is no hesitation in enforcing the Maine Law to the fullest extent. Twelve hundred liquor sellers have abandoned the traffic there since the first of July last.

The Maine Liquor Law.

We publish on our first page this celebrated law, and ask for it a candid and careful perusal. It is, in our humble opinion, the only law which has ever been enacted, which will entirely suppress the nefarious traffic in ardent spirits. It is the first recognition by legislative enactment, that the people have the power to prevent the traffic in, and the right to destroy intoxicating drinks by the power of the law. It also recognizes the right of the law to punish the seller of the article. This principle has long been recognized in regard to other dangerous articles, but not in regard to whisky. When Gen. Jackson marched against the Seminole Indians, he found that certain agents of foreign governments were furnishing those Indians with powder. As soon as he ascertained where this powder came from, he seized what the agents still had on hand, and put the agents themselves to death. Who does not justify his course and say it was right—right in theory and right in practice? Now this is the theory and practice of the Maine Law in regard to liquor and liquor sellers. Whisky and rum are recognized in that law as more dangerous than gunpowder and the seller equally a villain with the seller of gunpowder to a public enemy, and it therefore treats them on the same principle. This we consider right, and now let our readers come to a different conclusion if they can, after reading the law.

Bro. Clarkson, P. G. W. P., in the Brookville American, speaking of this law says:

For the suppression of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors, it is the best that has ever been enacted. It has life, power and energy in it. And our advices are that it is popular in that State, and that its provisions are enforced with promptness. There has been considerable inquiry of late for this Law, and as in all probability, it will be frequently alluded to in the future, we give it to our readers entire.

The cause of temperance is advancing. There is a better moral feeling growing up relative to the hundreds and thousands of our citizens who are annually slaughtered by the debased appetite of some, and the craven cupidity of others. The time is coming, and that shortly, when such things will be no longer tolerated. And although many suppose that nothing is doing in the temperance cause, we assure them there never was a time when there was as much doing in a substantial and lasting way. It is not a storm which would soon pass over. It is not a violent outburst of feeling that will soon subside. The Sons of Temperance have a mission—and that mission is to put an entire stop to the manufacture and sale, in every shape or form, of intoxicating liquors for a beverage. This is our mission, and our halls will never be closed—our gavel will never cease to resound throughout our land till this great object be attained. Those who expect the Sons to fail before this great victory is achieved, will die, without the sight. And those Sons who are not prepared for the battle, and who have not the face to contend for an entire exclusion of the accursed traffic, who are not willing to contend for the abolition of the Capital punishment now carried on by liquor sellers, had better step out of our ranks. They are in our way, and had better go over to those with whom they have sympathy. We want no timid souls in our army in this warfare. The enemy now has entire possession of every fort, citadel and battery, but we are preparing for a charge, and those who do not desert now will be put to the test. In this warfare we intend to be cool ,and prepared, keeping our provisions and amunition wagons together. But disguise it as you will, and evade it as long as some Sons are striving to do, their great object and mission is the entire suppression of the importation, manufacture, and use of liquors for a beverage: And this they intend to do by moral and legal suasion, penal enactments, and confiscations. Those not prepared to go with us in this, at the proper time, may as well, join at once, those who are engaged in human slaughter-houses. We wish our readers to examine the Law of the State of Maine carefully.

But, says one, you are encroaching on our rights, and taking away our liberty.—That is true. We long since took away your right to kill your neighbors with the shot-gun and the dagger, notwithstanding you killed but a few dozen a year. But now we are determined to deprive you of the right to kill 50,000 a year, by a more insidious, but more disgraceful instrument. We intend to deprive you of the right to murder in all shapes, groan as you will.

We endorse this sentiment in full. The Chicago Temperance Messenger speaking of the same law, says:

It is gratifying to the reformer to witness the impetus given to the temperance movement by the passage of the Anti Liquor Law of Maine. It has been one triumphal march through the whole continent. It is not confined to the States but the temperance host in the Canadas have taken up the cry, and the Maine Law—the total anihilation of the liquor traffic is the watchword uuder which they are now marshaling for a renewed contest.

It is the first legal embodiment of the true idea, that the people have the right to destroy the traffic in intoxicating drinks by the strong arm of the law. It is not only a sound principle, but the result has proved its expediency, and farther that the people will sustain a movement the beneficial results of which are so immediately manifest, with more earnestness and spirit than they will one framed on a compromising and temporizing poliicy. Cowardice has ruined many a good cause, and it is this combined with a distrust of the people, that now prevents the people of Illinois from enjoying the same freedom from the ravages of the destroyer that now blesses the State of Maine. We do not mean to disparage the efforts of the members of the last session of our legislature, for all did nobly; but we repeat, that were it not for a hesitating cowardice on the part of the temperance workers of this State, a fear of asking for too much, a far better and much more efficient law would have been passed.

But in that glorious State they have at once advanced to it. They have no miserable restraining policy, they destroy and anihilate the evil, and already are they reaping the fruits of their courage and perseverance in the remarkable improvement in the society of their cities and towns, in their freedom from drunken revels and midnight brawls, and the rapid disappearance of pauperism and crime.

This is the point to which we are to reach, and the people of this State should unite in one loud call for the enactment of the provisions of the Maine Law, nor cease their efforts until our State is totally redeemed from the dire influence of the accursed traffic.

We hope to see a similar law enacted in Indiana.

Public Temperance Discussions.

We noticed some time since, that the brethren of Hartsville Division were holding public temperance discussions. We learn that they continued them as long as there was an opposer, and finally failed for want of opposition.

They have now proposed the question: "Is it the duty of Christians to join the Sons of Temperance?" and invite every opposer to meet them on the question. Our opinion is, that such discussions are productive of much good, and that public speeches at the corners of the streets, such as are now delivered weekly in this city, are calculated to bring into notice our objects as temperance men, and will certainly end in our favor. Such a course has been pursued in Crawfordsville and other places, and has been the means of a great reformation.

Let our friends try one or both means thoroughly, and see if our predictions are not correct.

Washington Monument.

A majority of the committee appointed at the annual session of the Grand Division of 1850 to expend the fund collected from the several Subordinate Divisions for a stone for this monument, met in this city a few days' since and made a contract with Bro. D. R. Mead of Greensburgh, to furnish a stone of the same size and kind of that furnished by the State, for one hundred and twenty-five dollars, delivered on the Ohio river. We regret to say, however, that this small sum has not yet been received from Divisions, and we now call upon every Division in the State to do something however small, for this noble object, and forward their donations to the Grand Scribe immediately, that the contract with Bro. Mead may be complied with and funds raised to transmit the stone to Washington city. Will our Divisions respond to this call? We shall see.

☞ Dr. Jewett, the celebrated Temperance Lecturer, recently had a horse stolen from him. The "Worcester Cataract" mentioning the circumstance, says:

"The burglarious, and grog-drinking scamp, who stole Dr. Jewett's horse, ought ever afterwards to ride on a trip-hammer beam, trotting 60 blows a minute, with nothing under him but a saddle of porcupine quills, and that without stirrups."

We say, consent.

The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of Rhode Island, at its annual reunion last week, passed the following rasolution:

Resolved, The Maine Law—we want it—we shall have it—and it shall be executed.

Sons in England.

There are 33 Divisions of the Sons of Temperance in the cities of Liverpool and Manchester, England, and 1400 members.

☞ Francis W. Kellogg, the Ohio shoemaker, has been in England for the last three months, lecturing on Temperance. He knows how.

☞ Reader, read Bro. Fisher's communication in this number of the Chart—it will repay a careful perusal—then take his advice and let such an array of names be taken to our General Assambly as will give us the right kind of a law or none—for we much prefer none to a license law.

In conformity to his suggestions, we here insert our Memorial and ask every one who has not a copy to set down and write one and circulate it as Bro. F. suggests.

TEMPERANCE MEMORIAL.

To the General Assembly of the State of Indiana.

The undersigned, citizens of the State of Indiana, would respectfully petition your honorable body to repeal all laws which authorize the granting of license to traffic in intoxicating drinks in the State, and to append such penalty to the traffic as in your wisdom will most effectually suppress the evils growing out of it.

BOSTON.—The following report is characteristic of Marshal Tukey. It is prompt and to the point:

A report was made by City Marshal Tukey to the Board, agreeably to an order introduced by Alderman Grant, propounding several questions concerning the extent of the liquor traffic, in the city of Boston, the marshal reports as follows, viz:—The whole number of places where liquor is sold 1500. In ward 1 there are 335 places; ward 2, 88; ward 3, 120; ward 4, 217; ward 5, 21; ward 6, 36; ward 7, 286; ward 8, 97; ward 9, 25; ward 10, 111; ward 11, 67; ward 12, 95. American dealers, 490; Germans and Swedes, 110; Irish, 900; Sold in cellars, 310; above ground, 1190. Male dealers, 1374; female dealers, 126. Sold in oyster and ice cream saloons, 65; bowling alleys, 90; buildings for same, 14; groceries 469; other places, 1031. All first class hotels except four, have an open bar for the sale of liquor. In answer to the eight interrogatories requiring him to give an opinion of the means best calculated to check the progress of crime and intemperance, whereby our taxes are greatly increased, and the reputation of the city injured, he replied "EXECUTE THE LAWS."

DEATH AND THE DRAM SHOP!

FRIEND GOODRICH:—Somewhat of a sorrowful occurrence took place here recently in Brookfield. Some of our Catholic friends took carriages on the Sabbath for Ware Village, for the purpose of attending the Catholic church there. Two men with one of their wives, after taking a horn of the good creature, started for home, the men or the horse became unmanageable, and caused the carriage to turn a somerset, and in the operation the woman had her skull broken in, and her neck dislocated, which caused instant death. The carriage was very much shattered, and one of the men had one arm badly broken, and probably it may be found necessary to amputate it. The husband of the woman escaped without much injury. The charge must have been obtained in Ware Village that caused the disaster. Make what use of the above you please. The woman was ancient, and of good reputation. She foresaw the evil when it was too late to avoid it. All for rum! If the Maine Liquor Law had been in force in Ware, this disastrous smash-up,—loss of property,—broken limbs,—and death of two human beings, would all have been prevented. When shall we have such an antidote for rum?

EBEN. MERRIAM.

West Brookfield, Oct., 1851.

A most distressing case of the death of a stubborn and lawless rumseller of Waterford took place a short time since. This man by the name of Chapin Nelson, a trader, removed some ten barrels of rum to the cellar of his dwelling house for safety; but fearing it would not be safe there from the vigilant eye of temperance men, he removed it again into the woods, or swamps for greater security. Late at night he started in his wagon for two barrels. Some few of his unfortunate victims were waiting at his store for his return. He came not. They went home, and next morning his wagon was found bottom upwards. The heads of the barrels, by the upsetting, were bursted out, and he was laying by the side of a large rock against which he had been thrown, cold and stiff in death! Truly the way of the transgressor (rumseller) is hard. The grandfather of this unfortunate young man was killed in the town of Bridgeton, by being thrown from his wagon while drunk! His father broke a blood vessel in a drunken cough, and died in a short time after he became sober.—Cataract.

CORRESPONDENCE.

For the Chart.

License or No License.

MR. EDITOR:—The question presented by the heading of this article must be settled in Indiana, for the next two years, by the Legislature now about to convene; and fearing that temperance men are not sufficiently awake to the importance of immediate action, I take the responsibility of calling their attention to the subject through the Chart.

The existing law provides that the voters of each township may decide the question for themselves, at the April election in each year. Under this law it is believed that three-fourths of the townships in the State have voted "No License." Indeed, I know of no township, where the friends of temperance have made an effort, that has not so voted. Some counties and even townships have special laws prohibiting the retail liquor traffic, which are perfectly satisfactory to the people residing therein; hence they make no further effort.

But all these laws have to be changed the coming winter. Our New Constitution provides that there shall be no special laws for particular localities. All must live under the same law; license must be authorized in all the counties and townships, or in none.

The new Constitution, too, prohibits the submission of this question, or indeed any other question, to the vote of the people; or, in other words, the taking effect of any particular law cannot be made to depend upon a vote of the people, subsequently taken.—Hence, whatever law the Legislature pass upon this subject will be in force until repealed by a subsequent Legislature.

Then shall the law authorize the granting of license in every township in the State, or not? Shall we go back to the starting point of the temperance reform, and begin anew; or shall we hold on to what we have gained, and strive to advance.

The drunken man said, when asked how he came to fall from his horse, that he did not fall off; he "just got off to get on better." Shall we go back to begin better? I trust not. It is contended by liquor sellers that more liquor is drank where "no license" prevails than where men are licensed to retail.

This is simply untrue. Still, if it was true, I say abolish the license system, because I regard it as the greatest absurdity of the age.

Morally speaking, it is either right or wrong to sell liquor. If it is right, why make a monopoly of it? Why restrict it? Why not permit every one to sell as much or as little as he pleases? Why not permit all our citizens to deal in it, as they do in corn or oats, or other products of the soil, or articles of domestic manufacture? Or, if it is proper to require men to get license to retail liquor, particularly domestic liquor, why not require them to get license to retail corn or oats, or butter? If it is as proper to retail liquor as butter, why not let the same law govern both? The fact is, it is not right; and every civilized nation on earth restricts it by legal enactments. But does this make it right? Is it the province of the law-making power, to license men, for a pecuniary consideration, to commit wrong?—It is asserted, that in the dark ages the Pope granted, for a pecuniary consideration, to members of the Church, indulgences to commit sin. This seems so ridiculous at the present time, that men are loth to believe it; yet it is no more ridiculous than granting license to retail liquor, if such retailing is wrong. God says "Cursed is he that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips." But, says the retailer, "I have a license from the State. God calls a man to account for murder; but says the man, "I have an indulgence from the Pope to kill—I have paid for the privilege." Now, will not the indulgence of the Pope to kill avail just as much at the bar of the Almighty, in the hands of the murderer, as the license of the liquor seller, when arraigned for "putting the bottle to his neighbor's lips." I can see no difference. If it is right to retail liquor, let every man retail that pleases; if wrong, prohibit all from retailing. The law cannot make right wrong, or wrong right. It may declare a thing right, but that does not make it so, if it was wrong before. It only makes it a legal wrong. Things are right or wrong, independent of human law. If the law should authorize men to steal, it would be just as wrong to steal then as now. It would only be legalizing a wrong. The only thing the license system has to commend it to men of the present day is its antiquity. If the question was now raised for the first time, it would be regarded as the offspring of a diseased imagination, and no man of sane mind would entertain the proposition for a moment.

It is not so much my object to argue the license question at present, as to call the attention of your readers to the importance of action on this subject, now. I presume most of them entertain the same views I do upon this subject, and are anxious to secure the passage of a law prohibiting the granting of license in all cases.

But are temperance men making the proper effort to secure the passage of such a law? I fear not; and I am very much afraid that, through our apathy and negligence, a license law, with all its ridiculous absurdities, will be passed by our next Legislature, and the retail traffic legalized all over the State. Politicians are the last men to take hold of any reform. They wait to "feel the public pulse." Hence there is no prospect of reform until the people move.

There are a large number of printed memorials, in the hands of temperance men in all parts of the State; but it is feared but little effort is making to procure signatures. Is there not danger that the old maxim, "What is everybody's business, is nobody's business" will apply in the present case.

That a large majority of the voters of this State are opposed to any law authorizing license to retail liquor, I do not entertain a doubt; but how to get an expression of their wishes on this subject, is the question. It requires labor to do this; and whose duty is it to perform this labor? Evidently the duty of every lover of the temperance cause.—The obligation is just as strong upon one as upon another, and each has the same interest at stake. Then let us all take hold of this matter, and devote one day faithfully to the circulation of memorials for signature; and let us do it on Christmas day. Let it be a simultaneous action throughout the State; let temperance men everywhere devote that day faithfully to this business, and my word for it the result will be an array of names that our representatives dare not disregard.

True, all have not a printed copy of our memorial; but it is only a moment's labor to write one. The last number of the Chart contained the form, and I suggest that it be continued in the next. Then let each friend of the cause copy the memorial, and on Christmas day use his or her best efforts to procure signatures. Let each devote the whole day faithfully to this cause, and on the next day forward the memorials to some member of the Legislature, and there will be an end, in this State, to licensing men to make drunkards.

And what temperance man would not rather devote one day in this manner than to have a license law prevail? I hope there is not one to be found in the State. But now is the time to act. It is useless to "lock the stable door after the horse is stolen." If license hereafter prevails, it will be the fault of temperance men. We have the power to prevent it. It can be done in a single day, by united effort. What excuse have we for neglecting it? None whatever.—Then let us do our duty, and live in the enjoyment of the good effects produced by one day's labor.

Yours truly,
S. FISHER.

For the Temperance Chart.

The new Temperance Hall at Waveland, was dedicated to our glorious cause, on Saturday, 22d ult. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather and the muddiness of the roads, there was a very respectable turn out of both Sons and citizens.

The acting officers, as well as the speakers, acquited themselves with honor.

By order of Rescue Division S. of T.
CHAS. W. TALBURT,
WM. F. RHOADS.

There are 6200 Divisions of the Sons of Temperance in the United States and Canada; the number of contributing members is 238,909 and the number joined the order during the year 91,776.

The Daughters of Temperance in New York State are active and are about getting up petitions to the State Legislature to put down the liquor system.

RUSHVILLE, Nov. 12, 1851.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Having failed to find my last trip published from this place to your city, I sent a written appointment to each place mentioned in the Chart. I am now on that work, I have very many tribulations, sometimes I think the ball is rolling, I think I see evidences of renewed zeal on the subject of temperance, but just as soon as I ask the people to subscribe for the Chart or to purchase some of Bro. Goodwin's sermons on temperance, I instantly perceive a change in the visages of the dear creatures, and they say that they take so many papers and periodicals, that they cannot afford time to read them all. So I don't know what will become of the paper. Rushville is a considerable place, with many first rate temperance men, some very zealous, others lukewarm, and several stone dead. I am here trying to produce some effect, but may not succeed. My congregations are generally large. The Divisions in Wayne county are no great things. I find that opposition is the very life of our Order. At Washington the brethren had concluded to give up their Charter, while some of the religious ones were standing with one foot on the Bible and the other on a whisky barrel. They took no paper, knew not of my coming, nor did they care. The ladies where I called for dinner, urged me to stay until night and they would procure me a congregation, and so they did, (a large one,) mostly ladies.—They have resolved to advocate the cause of temperance, they had a protracted meeting commenced last Saturday, they sent to New Castle and Cambridge City for speakers.—I advised the men to write over the door of their Hall,

INGLORIOUSLY FLED.

Two drunkards there said that if the Sons would go to work, they would both send in their petitions and become members of the Order, whereupon the brethren resolved to go at it and do their duty. The brethren at New Port wished me to offer an apology for their backwardness, as they had been thrown off their duty by the Cholera.

I am dear Bro. yours, &c. E. H. P.

For the Temperance Chart.

Mr. Editor:—Let any one who is in the habit of drinking one five cent dram a day, look at the amount he wastes in five years, and consider that

"A constant drop will wear a stone,
And molehills often heaped to mountains rise,
The constant waste of half a dime alone
A day for thirty years would all surprise.',

Look at a calculation. The amount wasted in thirty years at only five cents a day, is for the first year $18,25. Now as this is given for an article that does neither the spender or his family any good, it is fair to count it at compound interest; and as he expends a like sum every year, it is also fair to add to the amount $18,25 each year. Now $18,25 at 6 per cent. in one year, gives $1,19,5 interest; to which add $18,25, and the amount is $19,34 and 5 mills, principal for the 2d year; but he has spent this year, $18,25, which added to the other, makes $37,59,5, the true principle for the 3d year. &c., in 10 years he has wasted $285,18; in 20 years, $749,80; and in 30 years, $1,583,26; enough to buy a farm sufficient to support a large family, and he is poor, and perhaps grumbles that he is so unlucky. Well, it is unlucky, that he has allowed himself to waste so much for a poison, that kills its 30,000 drunkards every year!! D. J. B.

COVINGTON, Nov. 8th, 1851

WORTHY BROTHER—I have the pleasure of sending you the names of applicants for a new Division of the Sons of Temperance at Chambersburg, in this county, eight miles south east from this place. We had a grand rally there on last Tuesday, Fountain and Attica Divisions were well represented, also some Daughters and Cadets from Attica. We made quite an imposing procession.—Bro. Pease (blind) was in attendance, and delivered two short addresses. The young misses of the place sang a number of temperance odes under the direction of Rev. Bro. Freeman. On Tuesday evening a Rev. Mr. Manning, of the United Brethren church, delivered an address at Chambersburg, in which he attempted to prove from the Bible, that the order of the S. of T. was anti-christian! Rev. Bro. Donaldson of this place was present, and so fully and clearly vindicated our Order, that the orgaization of a Division there was at once gone into. There is an unusual interest on the subject of the temperance reform awake in our community at this time, and we shall keep it in motion.

Yours, fraternally, &c. W. H.

VERSALLES, Nov. 12, 1851.

Bro. G. S.—Bro. Parsley was here last June, and gave general satisfaction with promise of farther usefulness, if he could then have tarried longer.

Four or five years ago we had five or six licensed liquor shops here, and one was built on wheels with a tongue for oxen to draw it about the public square of the town. No license is now granted, there is but little lounging about town, temperance, moral and religious interests are advancing, and our place bids fair soon to become one of the most prosperous and lovely.

Yours, in L. P. and F. A. C. B.

Charley's Half Dollar.

"Good, good!" exclaimed Charley Gray, as he ran down the smooth path leading from his father's cottage; "I shall have so much fun! How kind my papa is to give me this bright half dollar, and permission to spend it as I please!"

As he said this, his cheeks glowed with anticipation of the pleasure he expected to receive as the worth of his money. Charley soon reached the street gate, and as he cast his eye towards the gay flags floating over a large tent near by, he saw Edward H. sitting upon a spot of grass, working very busily at something. Charley ran up to him, and found that he was trying to tie down the crown of his hat, which was nearly torn out. Edward was so much engaged with his work, that he did not raise his head until Charley had called to him two or three times, but when he looked up, he tried to smile, although his face wore an expression of sadness.

Charley did not notice this, but showed Edward his money, and eagerly began to tell him about the enjoyment he meant to have at the circus during the afternoon, and in eating the cakes and candies that he could buy with the rest of his money.

To all this Edward said nothing, but, putting back his auburn curls, he fixed his large dark eyes on Charley's face, and then burst into a flood of tears.

Charley quickly asked what was the matter; why he felt so bad?

For a few moments Edward could not answer; but when his feelings became more calm, he told Charley that he had been trying in vain to find some work at which he could earn something to assist in paying the month's rent of the house in which his mother lived, and that he had just then thought how hungry his little brothers and sisters often were, and how tired his mother often looked when she came home, with hardly food enough to last them a day. Again Edward burst into a flood of tears.

This sorrowful tale was too much for Charley's benevolent heart, and the tears rolled down his cheeks, as he thought of his little friend's condition; but these were soon wiped away, and he said, "Cheer up, Edward; look happy again, for my sake. True, you have found no work to day, but my half dollar shall make it all up; take it and give it to your mother." So saying, he slipped the money into Edward's hand, and with a light step and heart made happy by an approving conscience, and Edward's look of gratitnde, he went towards home. That night Charley felt very happy, and resolved to relieve the distressed whenever he could.—S. S. Advocate.

NEW YORK, November 11th, 1851.

Mr. Editor:—The arrival to-day of the Canada, bringing news of an accident to the steam-ship Africa, and her return to Liverpool, has occasioned much and animated discussion in our city. The assurance also, that Kossuth has actually landed in England, and been received with vast enthusiasm—that he designs to remain there but ten days, and then come to this country in one of the regular steamers—adds to the very natural excitement on the subject of the welcome to be given here, to the great Hungarion patriot. He puts his children to school, it appears, in England; agreeably to a previous arrangement.

Miss Hayes, the distinguished vocalist, had some difficulty on Saturday evening with Maretzek of the Italian Opera. The proceeds of her concerts were attached by Sig. M. to pay for the use of one or two of the opera corps who assisted her.

The "American Illustrated News," a splendid paper with 10,000 circulation here, has been stopped. The owner had not time to attend to it, and could not dispose of it.

The New Yorker of this city, a penny paper, has been converted from a morning into an afternoon paper.

Silsbee, a celebrated actor of Yankee parts, well known throughout this country as a gentleman of ability, has been engaged at two theatres in London, and is doing wonderfully well. His success has been decided and extraordinary. He deserves it.

The election has passed, nearly a week, but we are yet in doubt as to the exact result throughout our State. The contest in some respects, has been close, and it is evident that more "scratched" tickets have been polled this time, than ever was polled before. We trust all will come out right in the end.

A murder occurred at a ball here, on Saturday night, at which one of the returned New York volunteers was figuring in the dance. A person with whom he had had a quarrel, stepped up to him, abused him, and then plunged a dagger into his stomach.—We fear that the "rum-fiend" had much to do with it.

Dr. J. Kearney Rodgers, a very eminent Physician, died here, yesterday.

The Fire Annihilator is to be tested this evening by Dr. Colton, in a public lecture at Tripler Hall. The public awaits its exhibition with much anxiety.

Father Mathew left us on Saturday in the steamer Pacific, for Liverpool. He gave us an address before he left, praising warmly the American people. He has made 600,000 converts to the temperance cause in the United States. The concert given for his benefit by Catharine Hayes netted the old gentleman nothing. So he returns as poor as he came. His Secretary, Father Mahoney, is about to publish, in Ireland, an account of their two years' tour in this country.

Miss Mary Taylor, the actress, called "Our Mary" by the Press, was married last Friday to Mr. Ewing, late manager of the National Theatre. She is a correct young woman and quite talented. Mr. E. is pretty well off, and we hope they will be happy.

Mr. Abraham Thompson, who died here a short time ago, bequeathed $300,000 to several charitable societies. There is quite a contest in regard to the money.

The winter is on us. It is quite cold, and looks like snow.

The U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi arrived here this morning, with a number of the Hungarians on board who were with Kossuth. No more to-day.

Yours truly. ST. JOHN.

☞ An effort will be made in the New York Legislature to put down the liquor business in that State by the enactment of an efficient law for that purpose. The "Tribune" in advocating such a law, says:

"Law should be the shield of the weak, the admonisher of the tempted, the hope of the fallen, the reprover of the vile, the fortress of the virtuous and good. A law which protects and encourages the manufacture of criminals and paupers — which says to the selfish and unprincipled, I authorize you to enrich yourself by stripping the poor laborer of his scanty earnings for that which only degrades and maddens him, and sending him home penniless 'to terrify and abuse his famishing wife and children'—has no just title to the name of Law, and ought to be erased from the statute book. This is a work which cannot be accomplished too soon."

We believe a vigorous effort will secure a very fair Temperance law this winter. We may not hope to obtain the full stringency of the Maine Law at once, but we may make a very long stride toward it. We can carry a law enacting all the penalties and means of discovery of the Maine law against all unlicensed sellers of Alcoholic liquors, and prescribing an Annual Election for three Commissioners of Excise in each County, who shall have the exclusive power of determining to whom, under what restrictions and for what purposes Licenses to vend Alcoholic Liquors shall be granted—all sellin without such express and unexpired l cense to be exposed and subjected to t penalties aforesaid. We believe such a l by energy and efficiency on the part of friends of Temperance, may be carried the approaching Session—that it wo clear two-thirds of the State of grog-sh at once; and that it would help to edu the people for an entire suppression of Liquor Traffic at an early day. Shal earnest effort be made for it?—N. Y. T

A POWERFUL DELINEATION.—The follo ing is an extract from the address of Judg Johnson, of Georgia, in sentencing G. D Cornet to death for the murder, without provocation, of W. W. HAILES, delivered on the 16th of Sept., 1851:

Not shall the place be forgotten in which occurred this shedding of blood. It was in one of the thousand antichambers of hell, which mar like plague spots, the fair face of our lovely State. You need not be told that I mean a tippling shop—the meeting place of Satan's minions and the foul cess-pool which, by spontaneous generation, breeds and nurtures all that is loathsome and disgusting, in profanity, and babbling, and vulgarity, and Sabbath breaking and bloodshed. I would not be the owner of the grocery, for the price of this globe converted into precious ore. For the pitiful sum of a dime he furnished the poison, which made the deceased a fool, and converted this trembling cnlpit into a demon. How paltry this price of two human lives! This traffic is tolerated by law, and, therefore, the vender has commited an offence not cognizable by earthly tribunal. But in sight of Him who is unerring wisdom, he who deliberately furnishes the intoxitating draft which inflames men to anger and violence and bloodshed, is particeps criminis in the moral turpitude of the deed. Is it not high time, that these sinks of vice and crime should be held rigidly accountable to the laws of the land, and placed under the ban of an enlightened and virtuous public opinion?

☞ A man buys rum, and while drunk, is killed by the cars. If he drank liquor, legally and honorably sold, he died legally. Who complains then, that a man has been killed? Is'nt it right to kill a man legally? Havn't men a right to sell him the liquor to kill him, so long as their moral characters are good and it is necessary that they should sell rum in order to keep beds for travelers and stabling for horses? What kind of a tavern would that be, where blue ruin is not sold to neighborhood soaks—men who have to travel every morning, noon and night, to get their drams?—Cayuga Chief.

DIED,

In Bowling Green, Ind., Dec. 6th, Bro. SHUBAL B. BOWLING, a member of Bowling Green Division, No. 300, Sons of Temperance.

The Division passed the usual resolutions.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—A few days since, Dr. Ford, of Sevierille, who was about leaving with his family for Chattanooga, where he intended residing in future, came to his death under circumstances truly distressing. Refusing to pay his taxes, the tax collector, Mr. Shields, levied upon a side-saddle and took it into the house. Ford pressed upon him, very improperly, and being a very stout man, was rather too much for him. Mr. Shields, however, extricated himself from the grasp of Ford, and retreated into the door of the house—Ford pressed upon him, and Shields, in self-defense, drew a large knife, and literally cut him to pieces, of which wounds he died almost instantly.

Now, we record this fact for the purpose of stating, that Ford had a bottle of liquor in his pocket at the time—was under its influence when he madly rushed upon an excellent officer of the law, and forced him to hurry him into eternity unprepared to meet his Judge. Let this be a warning to others who use intoxicating drinks to excess!—Knoxville Whig.

☞ Eighty-nine barrels of liquor were seized recently by the authorities of Augusta, Me., and condemned, partly to exile, and partly to the gutter. Dr. Jewett happened to be present, having lectured there the night before, and being summoned with some others by the officer to aid him, pulled off his coat,—laid hold of the demons,—and, with a hearty good will, rolled them out of the store and the vessel, to have their heads or bungs knocked in by the legal executioner!—Cataract.

The total receipts of the great exhibition at the Crystal Palace, are put down at $2,270,000, while the expenses have been just $1,062,600; which will leave as clear profits, 1,207,500.

☞ Twenty-eight of the thirty-one States celebrate their thanksgiving on the same day the 27th of November.

☞ Mr. Paxton has received £5000 for designing the Crystal Palace and been knighted by the Queen. It is not many years since he was a poor gardener.

☞ There are 1500 grog shops in Boston. 900 are kept by Irishmen, and 979 are open on the Sabbath.

☞ Hon. Wm T. Haskell, a Mexican war Colonel, late M. C. from Tennessee, is now lecturing through that State on Temperance, in behalf of the Sons.

SONG OF THE INEBRIATE.

BY WILLIAM P. BRANNAN.

Fill high, fill high the flowing bowl;
Let wassail madness rule the hour,
A frenzy grapples with my soul,
And riots with a Demon's power.
Let other's sing the woful wail
Of those whose steps take hold on hell,
Mine is a song to make men quail,
And hold them with a horror spell.

Should reason rise to stay my hand,
And dash the brimming goblet down,
The passion-furies at command
Annihilates it with a frown.
Then pour the Upas on my head,
Till Reason reels upon her Throne,
And every sense of shame is dead,
My better nature e'er hath known.

Fill high the bitter cup of wrath,
And drain the bubbling poison there;
We take the deep and downward path,
Where Demon's howl in dark despair!
Let driveling dastards prate of love,
And senseless joys their souls have known
Such feeble follies fools might move;
Our answer is—a scornful groan.

All hail!—thou Prince of Horrors hail!
The burning bowl hath made no friends,
Ha! ha!—the Demon's deadly wail
Now with our hideous laughter blends,
Drink deep as death: with horrid glee
We'll smite the world from pole to pole
Till all mankind shall quake to see
The DRUNKARD drown his Demon soul!

Miscellaneous.

"Take my Hats."

Some have supposed that "take my hat," is a saying which originated in this wise: A handsome young lady put upon her head a gent's hat, for which he enforced the penalty of a kiss, and another swain, eager to inflict the same punishment, said to the fair one, "take my hat;" whether she did or not is now the question, but this did not originate the saying; nor did it as some suppose, originate from the fact that a frolicking blade who had too many bricks in his beaver, insisted most earnestly that the town pump should "take his hat," but as near as we can ascertain, and it is a matter of history, the saying originated as follows:

About nineteen years ago, a fine looking old gentleman from Western Virginia, entered a store in Nashville, Tennessee.—Said store was owned by a bluff, honest old trader, who knew a great deal more about the quality of liquor sold at the back end of the counter, than he did about the fineness of the fabrics at the other; nevertheless, between the two extremities of that shelf, he contrived to make both ends very comfortably meet the necessities of the case. The old Virginian cast his eye around the shelves, and finally remarked—

"Well, neighbor, you, I see, hev got hats?"

"A slight sprinkling," was the answer, and then followed the query—"Whar are you from?"

"Old Virginia!" was the response.

"Right smart old State," replied the Tennesseean, but getting rather too old to keep her har on."

"What do you mean?" inquired the Virginian.

"Well, jest what I say uncle; it can't keep its har on—for instance, now, I should think, you hev been a right healthy child of the Old Dominion, but she has 'shed' you at last, and like Samson of old, that's jest the way she's losin' all the best har off her venerable head."

The old Virginan looked around the store rather bothered with the liberty this Tennessean was taking with his mother State, and finally remarked:

"I came here to talk about hats, and not har!"

"Well, well, uncle, don't git wrathy now, I was only venturin' a political opinion about population in gineral, and on that head we won't quarrel; but before we do look at the hats, as they are intimately connected with heads, s'pose we take a mite of baldface?"

The proposition was agreed to—the liquor was imbibed, and next followed the hats. The merchant tossed down four or five all wool hats of various sizes, and invited the old gentleman to select one that would fit him. He looked at them, examined the sizes, said they would do, and requested the store keeper to hand him down a few more.

"Thar's all the sizes I've got," said he, "but here's a few more ef you think you'd like 'em better," and so saying he tossed down three more.

"Them's all right," said the old Virginian, turning them around; and the stout old storekeeper, blowing with exertion, descended from his perch, where he was straddling from shelf to counter. As soon as he reached the floor, the old Virginian remarked that he had not got enough yet.

"Oh, you want 'em for your niggers?" says the storekeeper; "well, why did'nt you say so when I was up," and he again proceeded to perch himself up, like a mercantile colossus. When he had blowed himself into his former position, the old man quietly remarked:

"Why, stranger, I warn't talking anything about niggers." The fact is the old man was rather enjoying the extra trouble he had put the Tennesseean to.

"Well, what do you want with so many hats?" inquired the latter.

"I want 'em for my sons, said the old man.

The storekeeper began to count those on the counter—"Eight," said he, "a pretty big spread of boys already, but here goes," and he added one, and then another, and still another, and yet a fourth, and he picked off a fifth, and finally, seeing the old man immovable, earnestly counting the hats, he tossed down three more and was about descending himself, when the old man told him to hold on and throw down a few more.

"Oh, come, uncle," said he, "you are joking;" but to please him he threw down twenty.

"That's jest one too many," said the old man with much gravity.

"What!—you don't mean to say you hev nineteen sons?"

"Yes, I do mean to say so," was the old man's answer.

"And whar in the name of the State of Tennessee are they?"

"Well, they are in Tennessee," said the old man, "right yeer, in this city,—up at the hotel."

"Stranger," said the storekeeper, his incredulity making him stutter and sputter as he said it, "if you can show me nineteen boys of your make, thar's the hats."

"Hold on, then," said the old man, and off he started. In about ten minutes, down street he came, heading a line of nineteen boys, marching single file, each bearing a good gun, and followed by their venerable mother. They entered the merchant's store and ranged along the counter—the storekeeper ran his eyes along the line with astonishment.

"And you say," he inquired "that these boys are all yours?"

"Ask their mother," said the old man, "she says they are."

"Do you say so, madam?" he inquired.

"Yes, I do," was the reply, "and I oaght to know!"

"Well you ought indeed," said the storekeeper. "Old friend," he added, "I ain't got a word more to say, jest take my hats.

Brandy Drops.

Rum is a most ruinous affair, and the devil does not confine its operations for mischief to any one particular matter; and not only that, but he is constantly devising and planing some new method of decoying the unwary.

Our attenting was recently called to the exhibition, in a show window, of some small candy affairs, called "Brandy Drops," and other drops containing the accursed poison. This is an admirable invention! Nothing like getting children to imbibe a relish for alcohol, and the prospect of becoming drunkards is very fine! It is not enough that children arrive at the age of manhood, without decoy, and then run the risk of learning to love rum—no,—it must be put into something that is palateable for children, and what is more likely to catch the eye of a child, or to be wished for by it, than a fanciful candy? The devil is decidedly a cunning chap. He has but to venture a plan, and he will find ready agents to carry it into effect. We have no sympathy with any plea that may be set up in vindication of any such tempting and ruinous nuisances as those alluded to above. Sugared words will not do for the "drops."—Norristown, (Pa.) Olive Branch.

☞ When a young man puts the fire end of a cigar in his mouth and blows his nose and wipes it with a dirty shirt collar, we are suspicious that he has seen "some service." We saw such a young beauty trying to imbibe out of a bottle which had lost its goodness through a hole unfortunately knocked in the bottom.—Cay. Chf.

☞ We hear people incessantly growling about the hard world they live in. They never have seen a better—we hope they will not a worse one. If the world gives you hard knocks, buckle up and pay down.—Keep on the sunny side of creation and of human nature, or you will see the blankest waste ever "hearn tell on." Keep out of slough-holes and bad company and work for an honest living, and you will find that this world is considerable of a place to be got up in six days.—Cay. Chf.

From Sketches of European Capitals.

The Filthiness of Tobacco.

BY WM. WARE, M. D.

"One trait more, though with the risk of disgusting some, and offending more, though I will hope not. An Englishman, I believe, rarely chers, and, compared with the American, rarely smokes; but whether he does not secretly practice both those abominations I am not prepared to say. But with both these provocations, if it be so, one thing he never does, is to spit. That fact draws a line of demarcation between the Englishman and the American, broader and deeper a thousand-fold than any other, in politics, government, laws, language, religion. The Englishman never spits. Or if he does, he first goes home, shuts himself up in his room, locks his door, argues the necessity of the case; if necessary, performs the disagreeable duty, and returns to society with a clear conscience. The American spits always, and everywhere; sometimes when it is necessary; always, when it is not. It is his occupation, his pastime, his business. Many do nothing else all their lives; and always indulge in that singular recreation when they have nothing else to do. Sometimes in a state of momentary forgetfulness he intermits; but then, as if he had neglected a sworn duty, returns to it again with conscience smitten vigor. He spits at home and abroad, by night and by day, awake and asleep, in company and in solitude, for his own amusement and the edification of a spitting community. On the freshly painted or scoured floor, on the clean deck of a ship, or steamboat, on parlor floors, covered whether with ingrained, Brussels, Wilton, or Turkey, even there he voids his rheum; upon the unabsorbent canvass, so that one may see, where numbers congregate, the railroad cars to run in more ways than one. The pulpits and pews of churches are not safe.—The foot pavements of the streets, the floors of all public places, of exchanges, hotels, of Congress halls, are foul with it; and in railroad cars, it must always be necessary for a lady to shorten her garments, as if about to walk in deep mud of the street, or the snow and water of spring, if she would escape defilement to either her dress or her slippers. As the power of direction of these human missiles is by no means unerring, notwithstanding so much practice, one's own person, and all parts of his person, are exposed to the random shots of this universal foe of American civilized life; and often he finds on different parts of his dress proofs abundant of the company he has kept.—The only single spot, absolutely secure is a man's face; and that would not be, were it not for the fear of a duel.

That there is not the shadow of exaggeration in this description, coarse as it is, and coarse as it has been my intention to make it, all Americans, and all travelers who have ever been within an American hotel, steamboat, or rail-car—all will testify. And the result of it all, I suppose, is that we are the most enlightened people on the face of the earth! But, for one, republican as I am in principle, I think, on the whole, I would prefer the despotism of Austria, Russia, or Rome, to the freedom, if I must take with it the spit, of America. It is vice enough to tempt one to forswear home, country, kindred, friends, religion. It is ample cause for breaking acquaintance and friendship, for a divorce. In a word, it is our grand national distinction, if we did but know it. There are certainly parts of the country comparatively, but only comparatively, free from this vice. Here, at the North, there is much less than the West and the South, though here enough of it to disgust one with his race. In proportion as general refinement prevails, the custom abates. At the South, no rooms, no presence, affords protection. Here, in the best rooms, the best society, there is a partial exemption; though not often enough from the presence of that ingenious, fearful patent, the brazen, china, or earthen box.

Would that my country could be induced to pause in this, its wonderful career. Pity some public effort could not be made by way of general convention, or otherwise, for the abatement of this national mischief—certainly as worthy of attention as very many of our political reforms. The advice of the London surgeon, Abernethy, to an American sea-captain, was at any rate useful to us all, and pregnant with good medical philosopy. 'Keep your saliva in your mouth, to help digest your food with,' said he, 'and not spit it all over my carpet.' Very wholesome counsel. And, seriously, who can say, how much the palid face, the proverbial indigestion of our country, even consumption itself may not be owing to this constant drain which deprives the stomach of a secretion which nature provided for the most import purposes in the manufacture of the blood, and which she certainly did not provide to be wasted and thrown about in the manner of Anglo-Americans."

A Saving Wife.

A NewYork cotemporary boasts of having had an introduction to the heroine of the following shetch—an acquaintance of which to be proud, and a wife such as is a glory to her husband.

Mr. ———, a merchant now residing in Philadelphia, who formerly lived in rather an extravagant style, was in the habit, every Monday morning of giving his wife a certain sum of money for table and other household expenses during the week; he never mentioned his business to his wife, and she, deeming him sufficiently capable of attending to his own affairs, never inquired into them. About five years after they were married, through a slight mismanagement, and the rascality of his confidential clerk, Mr. ——— suddenly broke, and his fall was mentioned sympathizingly on 'Change, and—like all such matters—there it all ended. The merchant kept the affair a secret, and the first intimation the lady had of it, was by a paragraph in the Ledger. Shortly after dinner was over on the day of the discovery of the startling fact, Mrs. ——— requested her husband to remain in the parlor a few moments as she had something to say to him She then left the room, hurried up stairs, and shortly after returned with a splendid bound Bible in her hand. Handing it to her husband, she said, "George, the day after our marriage you gave me this precious book, as a token of love, and as a rich fountain to look to in the day of trouble. Its pages have been precious to me; and as your brow looks sad to-day, I now return it to you, that you may glean from it some consolation in the hour of gloom. She then left the room.

The merchant opened the book carelessly and a bank bill fell out of it. He picked it up and glanced at its face—it was a ten dollar bill. He opened the book again, and another note of the same amount was before him. He opened it at the first page, and continued to find an X between every two leaves, till he arrived at the commencement of the book of Revelations. He was saved—could again commence business, and had a capital of $9,000 to commence with!

He rang the bell—a servant appeared.

"Request your mistress to come to me immediately!" said the merchant.

The lady obeyed, entered the room with something between a tear and a smile.

"Kate! Kate! where did you procure all this money!"

"'Tis the weekly saving of your household expenses for the last five years," was the modest reply. "Every week I put ten out of the twenty dollars which you gave me into our Bible bank, that when a day of trouble came upon us, we should have something to save us from the wolf."

"But why put it in the Bible, Kate?"

"Because it is a good bank, and one that will not suddenly break."

"You are an angel, Kate," cried her delighted husband, clasping her to his heart.

And so she is. Does any one doubt it? There are thousands of such angels, despite the failings of our miserable woman-slandering bachelors.

☞ Had Temperance men been consistent in their conduct, the cause would have been in a far greater state of advancement than it now is. There is much said about supporting Temperance Houses. It is a notorious fact, and most humiliating, that a great mass of the Temperance people, never put a foot out of the way to act out their profession. Where the best of hotels, meritorious and well tried, demand a generous support, we huve known much-talking temperance men determinedly shy around such houses and give their countenance and money to those places where they could enjoy more freedom, and fish for bar-oom. No reform has been wounded more in the house of its friends, than has been ours. We want more friends, than has been ours. We want more coosistencs—more reliable integrity.—Cay. Chf.

☞ Whisky is a most excellent thing in a poor family where there is a sick mother and a large family of children to support. This is probably the reason why the sale is made legal by conscientious members of the excise boards. Such men do not act without reasons. | Cay. Chf.

☞ The London Punch makes itself merry over the defeat of the English Yatches. The triumphs of the Atlantic Steamships, did not so unhinge the gravity of John Bull as did that of the America.

The Temple.

What do you think of the Temple of Honor, is a question often put. Some other opportunity, we will answer the question more in detail. But we can say at this time, that we love and admire the Institution. We know that there is prejudice against it among good and honest Sons of Temperance. But the Sister Institution deserves it not. It is not as extensively known as the older Order—its principles are not as well understood. But once thoroughly known, it will receive the confidence and enthusiastic support of every friend of the Temperance Reform. Once extended, and some of our brightest trophies of our Revolution, will be found upon its altars.

The Temple marks another phase in the advancement of our Reform. Another banner is unrolled whose silken folds are like the brazen serpent to the afflicted. It is a TEMPERANCE banner, and old and well tried veterans, are bearing it on. There may be a new device upon its ground, but not more new than eloquent to every heart which beats for his "fellow man." The old emblems and old mottoes are there, watchwords which have been battle-scripture on a hundred fields, and are hallowed for their associations in the conflicts and triumphs o the past. As a Temperance man from the earliest commencement of the actively organized Temperance Reform, baptized in the tears of a mother who was driven out homeless from a desolate home in her youth, and to-day wearing the harness which has never been laid by even in the darkest hour; we ask that the Templar's flag shall float in PEACE side by side with the older banners in the field. We must guard it with a Templar's honor!

Harmony should ever characterize the course of Temperance organizations. How many of our old friends have abandoned the field because the Orders have outstripped them in the fight. All wrong. We wish we could arouse all the old hearts which have beat so devoutedly in times past. We wish we could urge them into the Order of the Sons, or of the Temple. They would find a home and a band of kindred spirits, and conspicuous in that band, some of the oldest and most active of the old organizations. Harmony, friends, with unflagging zeal in a common cause.

Temperance men should not be jealous of the Temple. Its star burns with all the fervid radiancy of love to mankind and to God. Its teachings are beautiful with the sublimity and purity of Divine Truth. The flame upon its altar, lights the wanderer from the darkness of error and in instructions and ceremonies the most chaste and beautifiul, impress upon his mind the loveliness of a better life. Fraternal interest and regard draw more closely within its walls. Its very dome is a beacon-light of hope upon a troubled sea. The Templar is a life soldier, and by everything that is sacred in honor, he stands pledged to his God, his fellow, and native land. In fine, a fairer fabric stands not among us. May its pillars abide firmly forever. Templars need but be true the blessings of the Institution, and the fruits of their combination shall win confidence and esteem.—Cayuga Chief.

RUM AND RATTLESNAKES.—Two individuals named Ellenwood and Briggs, were arraigned last week at Northfield in this State for selling liquor under the guise of an exhibition of rattlesnakes. The coupling of he two poisonous things together was exceedingly appropriate, for they are about equally destructive in their use—though perhaps rum can exhibit more victims than the rattlesnakes. The trial was held at Northfield, Sept. 6, and it appeared upon evidence that the defendants, residing at Irving, went to Northfield on the 18th of August, at which time a circus was exhibiting in it, set up an exhibition of Rattlesnakes, to which they charged an admittance fee of six cents, and that they gave to each person who came, in a glass of liquor. There being an express decision of our courts to the point, this ingenuity did not avail them, and they were bound over upon their own recognizances, in the sum of one hundred dollars, to appear at the November term of the Court of Common Pleas.—Norfolk Democrat.

☞ It is asserted that there is not a farmer in the United States who is a Jew. That may be, but we know of a farmer who jews every body. He will skim his milk until it curdles, and then feed his own young ones on potatoes and salt.—Cayuga Chief.

☞ Let every one look out for themselves. A wife and mother should never complain for the want of a decent dress while her dear husband has a jug of whisky in the house.—Cayuga Chief.

STATE LIBRARY INDIANAPOLIS

TEMPERANCE CHART.

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY BY THE GRAND DIVISION S. OF T., STATE OF INDIANA.

TERMS:—50 cents a year, in advance.

Edited by C. WOODWARD, G. S.

OFFICE—At Adams & Co.'s Express Office, near the Court-House.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., JAN. 1, 1852.

State Temperance Convention.

We hope our friends will not forget the State Temperance Convention, which assembles in this city on the 7th of January. Let each county, each township, and each Division of the Sons of Temperance, each Temple of Honor, and each section of Cadets, be fully represented. Arrangments will be made here for a large meeting, and we hope not to be disappointed.

Bring in the memorials filled with names, and let us make such a demonstration as no Legislature body can withstand. If our friends are active, we can do it, if not, we shall fail. Let every one consider that if he is not here, the convention will fail, and then act accordingly. We hear of large delegations from various counties, and hope they will all come.

The legislature is wating for our action, and will very much influence the temperance legislation of the session.

Indiana Legislature.

Our Legislature is as yet doing but little. A Bill has passed the House authorizing the Masonic fraternity to erect a Monument on the Tippecanoe battle ground, in memory of the brethren of that order who fell in that engagement.

The Senate have passed a resolution fixing the number of Judges of the Supreme court at three, and the House has one under consideration fixing the number at five. Many of our memorials numerously signed, have been presented to both houses, and referred to Temperance committees. A Bill has been introduced which will doubtless pass, excluding negroes from the State.

Both house have adjourned for the holydays.

Legislative Committees on Temperance.

In our last we gave the House committee and made some comments upon it. We have seen nothing to change our mind so far as that committee is concerned. We consider it on the whole a pretty fair committee. On the 17th ult., the President of the Senate appointed the following commit- on Temperance in that body: Messrs. Milliken, of Dearborn, Crawford, of Decatur, Holloway, of Wayne, McCarty, of Marion, and Goodman, of Dubois, &c. This we consider the very best selection that could be made in that body, and the thanks of the Temperance community are due Lt. Gov. Lane for giving us such a committee.—Messrs. Mlliken, Crawford, and Holloway, are acting and efficient Sons of Temperance. Mr. McCarty is a decided temperance man, and has sustained every temperance bill since his election, three years since. With Mr. Goodman we are not acquainted. We shall look for something worth while from this committee.

Legislating for Railroads.

The Vermont Legislature are willing that the cars shall go by steam, but not the conductors. So they passed an act at the late session which forbids the employment of conductors, engineers, brakemen, or switchmen, "who shall make use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage," and the employment of such a person exposes the company to a fine of $300 to $3000, besides being liable for all damages that may result.

This is right. There is not a sensible man in the community, that does not believe that one half our Railroad and Steamboat accidents, are caused by drunken engineers, captains, pilots, conductors, &c., and it is right that every Legislature should pass the most stringent laws, to guard the lives of the millions who travel on our public conveyances. Let us have such a law on our Western Waters, and the lives of hundreds, and property of immense value, would be saved annually.

Better put a crazy man on a Locomotive to run it than a drunken one, for the law of self preservation, would make the one careful while the other is so stupid as not to know danger, or so reckless as not to care. The Vermont Legislature have passed a sensible act.

John B. Gough.—We are sorry to learn that owing to failing health, Mr. Gough is compelled to discontinue lecturing for the present and return home. We had hoped that we would have been favored with a visit from him, and that he might be able to spend some time in this city during the present winter. He is needed very much here at this time, and if it is possible we hope yet to see him before our legislature adjourns. We know there is no man that can accomplish so much as he can, and at the present time when a law is about to be passed on the subject of license, his persence would be very desirable. We do not yet despair.

New Divisions.—Since our last the following new Divisions have been chartered: 273 Father Matthew, Portland, Fountain Co. 275 New Columbus, New Columbus, Madison Co. 281 Hesperian, Newport, Vermillion Co.

The Traveling Card.

One lovely morning in July, a boat touched at Wheeling, and the senseless form of a man in the prime of life was borne from its deck and laid upon the planks of the wharf. The stranger thus left to die like a dog, was suffering the tortures of that fever peculiar to our western waters, and the delerium was raging in his brain. Fancy carried him back to his home, where sat his loving wife praying the blessings of heaven upon her absent lord. This memory, as much as the fever, caused him to utter a deep groan, which attracted the attention of two police officers who were passing, and who at once advanced to the spot where he was lying, and began turning him over with their sticks to ascertrin who he might be. Just at that juncture, Pat Malone, an Irish drayman, passed, and observing that there was some fun on hand, stopped his horses. Pat left his dray for a few moments and advanced towards the man; as he did so, he detected a small piece of paper which had fallen out of his pocket upon the wharf. Pat scanned it narrowly, and after ascertaining, that his first surmise was correct, said to the officers:

"You need'nt be afther poking the poor man about in that fashion, Mr. Perlacemen; he'll be tinded to," and rasing the sufferer upon his dray, he bore him to a hotel.—Once there he ordered a good bed, and took his departure for a physician, who was soon by the bed-side of the sick man. Night came, and with it two men, who nursed him until morning, and were then relieved by a woman, whose business it was to attend upon the sick.

Several weeks passed ere the demon of fever removed from the system of the stranger; and then, when conciousness returned, he gazed around, and inquired of his nurse. "Where am I?" She told him, and also of the situation in which he was found, but did not inform him who his benefactors were. At his suggestion, a letter was dispatched to his wife, and in a few days she arrived. The scene was deeply affecting—the interview between the wife and husband. At night, when the hour of retirement was come, a woman entered the chamber and urged the lady to retire to rest while they attended her husband. At length he arose from his bed, snatched almost from the jaws of death by the kindness of those who found him a stranger and took him in.

"My husband," said his wife, "where are we, and what kind of people are these among whom we have come? Every night two men have been here and sent me to my room, while they watched over you until the nurse or myself came in the morning.—Pray tell me what this means?"

"These," said he "are my brothers of the Sons of Temperance."

"Thank God," said she, while tears of gratitude streamed from her eyes; "thanks be to God for such a noble institution—surely He will prosper it."

During the day she heard the whole story, and when at night Pat came into her presence, she rushed to him, threw her arms around his neck, and with uncontrolled emotion, cried out, "God bless you, sir! God bless you!"

A few days thereafter they left for their home, and the last words that fell upon the ears of those who followed them to the wharf, was the heartfelt prayer of the grateful wife: "God bless you, Sons of Temperance!"

The Rum Army.—It is thought by some that great good might result to this city, if not to the whole country, by calling out all the liquor dealers in the city of New York. Let every man and woman that is concerned in the liquor traffic meet in some convenient place, and form in such order as would be convenient for the Mayor and Aldermen to inspect them. This rum army would number not less than fifty thousand. This would be a sight worth seeing; 50,000, no doubt all "honorable persons," for none other would be concerned in the liquor trade. The law requires that they should be of good character.—N. Y. Cadet.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Rushville, Dec., 23d, 1851.

Bro. Woodward:—

I am alarmed to find the people as I do find them. The best of men, the most zealous Temperance men, such as are found in Rush and Shelby counties, and I expect nearly every where else, all anxious to do something for the cause, but entirely ignorant as to the method—and as soon as the plan of canvassing the counties by employing men is proposed they see into it instantly, and call a meeting, and employ men immediately to go ahead. I tell you that two-thirds of the voters, and more too, can be procured on this plan. People here think you ought to send an Extra or hand-bill right off, to each county. If you could, we perhaps would gain forty thousand or more names. The people do not know how to act or what to do.

All the Divisions, within my knowledge, will send delegates to the Temperance Convention at your city on the 7th Jan.—They come there to counsel as to what law will most effectually restrain the liquor traffic, and when they agree amongst themselves, I understand that it will then be the work of that convention to urge the passage of such a law. This may be the work of more than a week, or less. I am sent by Invincible Division, to push and pull, to lift up and pull down, to entreat and order, to command and exhort,. One day will not do for me. The people are coming there to do something. You may rely on that.

Your Brother,

E. H. Parsley.

The above letter of Bro. Parsley's, speaks for itself. We think the people are right on this subject of a License law—at any rate we are satisfied to trust them. Let the Legislature repeal all License laws, and then let the people direct the issue, and if the Maine law is not put in force in two years we have greatly mistaken public sentiment. We hope, however, that the present Legislature will pass such laws as will entirely do away with the traffic, and we are not by any means sure they will not.

Our impression of the present Legislature is rather favorable. We think there is less intemperance in the present Legislature than in any one that has assembled in this city for the last ten years, and much very much less than there was in the constitutional convention of last winter, and if they are properly petitioned we shall be much disappointed if they do not pass such laws as temperance men will not be ashamed of.

Let then our Memorials be well filled with names, and our State Temperance Convention on the 7th inst., be a perfect crowd, and we can not fail to accomplish much.—Brethren be awake and active, and we fear not the result.

For the Chart.

Friends of Temperance:—I rejoice that it is my privilege to announce to you, that your labor have not been in vain, your Father in Heaven has blessed your labor of love far above your most sanguine expectations. All your earnest efforts have been crowned with the most signal success. Let every heart be glad, and every tongue rejoice! The public mind is right on the license question. Had I the voice of a thousand trumpets, I would sound them all abroad. Behold the harvest is ripe! The fields are white. Where are the reapers? The pleasant fields are waveing their rich abundant fruit. Where are the husbandmen? But the storm threatens and in a few, very few short weeks all will be lost! Thank God, the reapers are setting in, and oh! what a crop! In the poorest places two-thirds of the legal voters, and nineteen-twentieths of the women are signing the Temperance memorial to the Legislature. Let God be praised. He has stretched out his arm in our behalf. Our good farmers and mechanics have detected the evil policy of the liquor traffic. They see that it is a fruitful source of unnecessary taxation, and brings in no correspondent benefit in return, and no sensible man is willing to vote money out of his own poeket. The mechanic sees that it shuts up every avenue to happiness and prosperity, and therefore as sensible men they oppose it.

And as to the dear Women, they always have been foremest in the accomplishment of every good. The men if consulted, are now ready to co-operate with us, I have ascertained these facts to be true. But now the great question arise, Who will go and wait on each man, and each lady in these several counties? Whose business it it? I answer and you will answer. It is the business of every man who wishes to promote peace, plenty, good order, happiness, purity, piety, and the glory of God in the world. How can every man operate in this case? Let every Division of the Sons of Temperance, and every Union Society, and every Washingtonian Society employ some good man to canvass a certain district or township, and let them by contribution or otherwise pay that man. Let every Minister of the Gospel make this subject his theme during this great conflict. And further, let each Division send a strong delegation to the Temperance Convention, on the 7th day of Jan'y. next, at Indianapolis. Let these things be promptly attended to, and so sure as ours is a Representative Government, so sure we will get the license system set aside, and the reign of peace established. But if we neglect these things, the chains of vice will be rivited on us more strongly. Our cause must languish the next two years, and the guilty bloodhounds, if expelled from Ohio, will rally their dark legions, around our sons, brothers and fathers. The prince of darkness will triumph, and our land be left to mourn.—Question:—Will those men who said prayers, asking the Lord to destroy the works of darkness, and the kingdom of the devil, remain inactive during the next six weeks?—If they do, will they find one man hereafter, so great a fool as to have any confidence in their piety? Let all the earth answer NO.

Dear Brethren, think that now you can easily succeed, but in fifty days it will be utterly too late. Think of the future. Think of the dark disgrace that may setle down on a dear Son. Think of the tears that may bathe the cheek of that dear Wife of yours. Think that that dear pretty little Girl you love so well, may be killed by a drunken husband, think like a man, a christian, and then act, and God will bless you- And think now is the only accepted time.

In Love, Purity and Fidelity,

E. H. PARSLEY.

NEWS, MISCELLANY, &c.

The Maine Law.

The State of Maine has doubtless a good many laws—some higher, others lower—but there is one honored throughout the length and breadth of the land as preeminently 'The Maine Law.' It is the act of her present Legislature at its late session whereby the traffic in Alcoholic Liquors is cut up root and branch—not merely forbidden but eradicated or compelled to hide in deep holes and skulks about the darkest corners. This law has now been some six months in operation, and has already affected a vast amount of good. Drunkenness is dying out, Pauperism is drying up, and Murder is scarcely heard of or dreaded. All honor to Maine and 'The Maine Law!'

There seems to be hardly room for doubt that the Law will not only be enforced but sustained. A meeting was called in Lisbon, Lincoln Co. a few days since, to instruct the representative of that town to vote for its repeal. The voters generally attended, and voted as follows: For the Instructing Resolve, 33; Against it 147, or more than four to one! A similar meeting was lately held in Ellsworth with an equally favorable result. Up to this moment, we have not heard of a single town instructing its representative to vote in favor of repeal.

The People of Maine are compelled to maintain a constant warfare with the liquor merchants of Boston especially, who, though 'lower law' with respect to Slave-catching, are 'higher law' as relates to Rum-selling. Surrounded by Rum-selling and Rum-tolerating States, they have an unequal fight to maintain; and they will maintain it; but they justly appeal to other States to dry up the desolating flood which now assails them on every side and threatens to sweep over them. That appeal must and will be responded to. Every New-England State will make a gallant struggle in her next election for a No-License Law based on that of Maine. We trust most of them will carry it, and that New York, New Jersey and Ohio will do likewise. Why should we lag behind? Is it the Empire State that needs an impulse from Maine to induce her to diminish the load of Pauperism, Misery and Crime now pressing upon her?—N. Y. Tribune.

Encampment.

The order of Encampment of Temperance actually deserves more attention than we have of late paid to it; to neglect so good an institution as this is, cannot be justified on any ordinary consideration. We are frequently asked what kind of a work have the Encampment order? we answer this question in short hand, by saying it is as good as any on earth; it is in every respect a most sublime work, and is destined to become a great and powerful order, and will yet do a vast amount of good; to know its principles and workings is to admire it; it is now planted in many of our States, doing well. The object of this institution is to benefit the young; it will do its work. Any information may be had by application to D. Cady.—N. Y. Cadet.

The Sons in New-Mexico.

A letter from M. W. S., Dr. Fickardt to M. W. P., John W. Oliver, gives the following intelligence:

"I have just had a visit of a very interesting nature from the Hon. Grafton Baker, Chief Justice of New-Mexico, formerly G. W. Patriarch of the Grand Division of Mississippi, and now resident at Santa Fe. He informs us of the institution of Astec Division No. 1, Lot of New Mezico at Santa Fe. The organization took place on or about the 20th of September last. Mr. Baker was elected W. P. Mr. Baker also states that both of his Associate Justices, Hon. John G. Watt and Hon. Horace Mower, are members of the Division. Hon. John G. Watt was formerly a member of the Grand Division of Indiana. Amongst other names of members of the Astec Division, he mentions D. V. Whiting, Dep. M. W. P. for New-Mexico, and translator for the Territory, of whom he speaks in high terms, E. P. West, U. S. District Attorney, Joseph D. Ellis, Clerk of the 3d District Court, Rev. Mr. Nicholson, a missionary of the Methodist persuasion and an excellent man, Mr. Sabine, an active and influential merchant, &c., &c. The names show that the interests of the Order have fallen into right hands in New-Mexico, and also show what I have predicted long ago, that the Order of S. of T. from its high moral and mental discipline will rapidly supply the Judicial Legislative and Executive Officers of the nation. Mr. Baker speaks confidently of the progress of the Order in New-Mexico, and already looks to the formation of a Grand Division."

The John G. Watt spoken of in the above paragraph is the Hon John S. Watts formerly of Bloomington in this State.

Ed. Chart.

End of a Fellow Student.—To-day I saw F., who was a classmate in the—— Academy, in 1840. He was S's associate in opposing the temperance cause, and branding the friends as being weak-minded. What was he then? and what is he now? He, the only child of a widowed mother.—On him that mother had placed her hope, and lavished her little means, that he might become educated, and even eminent.

While a student in the institution, he took a noble stand in learning. He had no rival in studies, no equal in composition or declamation, and was looked up to by all.—Those emblems of the greatness and brilliancy of his youthful mind, that was emerging into manhood, excited a love in the mind of that fond mother, and often caused her to revel in imagination on the greatness of the joy of her heart, to see that son, the lone star of her existence, rising and expanding into future greatness, probably to leave a name that would be chronicled among our greatest men, and an example worthy to be patterned by the world. This, however, was not to be. That mother's fondest hopes were blighted. Her idol of future eminence, refused to sign the pledge; had nothing to restrain his genial heart from partaking of the social glass, of which he drank and became a victim to vice. He is now a reeling, imbecile inebriate, ready to plunge into any iniquity, or commit any crime that may pervade his frenzied mind. Go to the bar-rooms of New Winsor, of ——, of——, and ask for the once bright and promising youth; and they in wonder will ask you if you do not refer to poor bloated, fighting and drunken Sam——. Go to——Church, and witness that mother, as she sits in the sanctuary of worship, and behold her deeply furrowed cheeks, grief-depicted, and sorrowful countenance, and ask the cause of her distress, and the answer will be, "Oh! my lost! my erring son!"—Maine Temp. Watchman.

Temperance Movements.—Marshall Division of the Sons of Temperance, at their regular weekly meeting on Thursday evening last, adopted resolutions instructing their representatives to the Grand Division to agitate in that body the subject of the passage of a liquor law by the Legislature of this State similar to that now in force in the State of Maine. Also urging upon all friends of law and order to procure, by a faithful discharge of duty at the Primary Elections and at the Polls, such enactments as will interpose an effectual barrier to the further prosecution of the Rum Traffic—that fruitful source of poverty, degradation, and crime. We understand that other divisions of this numerous, useful, and influential order have adopted similar resolutions. If, as these resolutions suggest, the friends of temperance will do their duty at the nominating caucuses, and at the Polls on election days, they will find no difficulty in securing the election of such men as will enact proper laws, and who shall possess moral courage sufficient to see them rightly enforced.

Marshall Division, referred to above, is one of the most prosperous and influential in the State, having the names of nearly two hundred contributing members on its books, and a fund of over $3,000 in its Treasury.

A Touching Scene.

The following affecting narative purports to have been given by a father to his son, as a warning derived from his own bitter experience of the sin of grieving and resisting a mother's love and counsel:

"What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suffered, failed to move me! She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till she reached her own door.

It is school time now, said she. Go, my son, and once more let me beseech you to think upon what I have said·

'I shan't go to school,' said I.

She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied, firmly:

'Certainly you will go, Alfred. I command you.'

'I will not!' said I, with a tone of confidence.

'One of two things you must do, Alfred—either go to school this moment, or I will lock you in your room, and keep you there till you are ready to promise implicit obedience in the future.'

'I dare you to do it,' said I: 'you can't get me up stairs.'

'Alfred, choose now,' said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently, and was deadly pale.

'If you touch me I will kick you, said I in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said.

'Will you go Alfred.'

'No!' I replied, but quailed beneath her eye.

'Then follow me,' said she, as she grasped my arm, firmly. I raised my foot—oh, my son, hear me!—I raised my foot and kicked her—my sainted mother! How my head reels as the torment of memory rushes over me! I kicked my mother—a feeble woman—my mother! She staggered back a few steps, and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. 'Oh! Heavenly Father,' she cried, 'forgive him,' he knows not what he does!'

The gardner just then passed the door, and, seeing my mother pale and almost unable to support herself, he stopped; she beckoned him in, 'Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his room,' said she, and turned from me. Looking back as she was entering her room, she gave me such a look—it will forever follow me—it was a look of agony, mingled with the intensest love—it was the last, unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

In a moment I found myself a prisoner in my own room. I thought for a moment I would throw myself from the open window and dash out my brains, but I felt afraid to do it. I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued, but my stubborn pride rose in an instant, and bade me not yield. The pale face of my mother haunted me. I flung myself on the bed and fell asleep. Just at twilight I heard a footstep approach the door. It was my sister.

'What may I tell mother for you?' she asked.

'Nothing,' I replied.

'Oh, Alfred! for my sade, for all our sakes say that you are sorry. She longs to forgive you.'

I would not answer. I heard her footsteps slowly retreating, and again I flung myself on the bed to pass another wretched and fearful night.

Another footstep slower, and feebler than my sister's disturbed me. A voice called me by name. It was my mother's.

'Alfred my son shall I come? Are you sorry for what you have done?' she asked.

I cannot tell what influence, operating at that moment, made me speak adverse to my feelings. The gentle voice of my mother that thrilled through me melted the ice from my obdurate heart, and I longed to throw myself on her neck, but I did not.

But my words gave the lie to my heart when I said I was not sorry. I heard her withdraw. I heard her groan. I longed to call her back, but I did not.

I was awakened from my uneasy slumber by hearing my name called loudly, and my sister stood by my bedside.

'Get up Alfred. Oh, don't wait a minute! Get up and come with me. Mother is dying!'

I thought I was dreaming, but I got up mechanically, and followed my sister. On the bed pale and cold as marble, lay my mother. She had not undressed. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest; arising again to go to me she was seized with a palpitation of the heart, and borne senseless to her room.

I cannot tell you my agony as I looked upon her; my remorse was tenfold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believed myself to be her murderer. I fell on the bed beside her. I could not weep. My heart burned within my bosom; my brain was all on fire. My sister threw her arms around me and wept in silence. Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand—her eyes unclosed.

She had recovered conciousness but not speech. She looked at me and moved her lips. I could not understand her words.

'Mother, mother!, I shrieked, say only that you forgive me.'

She could not it say with her lips, but her hand pressed mine. She smilcd upon me, and lifting her thin, white hands, she clasped my own within them, and cast her eyes upward. She moved her lips in prayer, and thus she died. I remained still kneeling beside that dear form, till my sister removed me. The joy of youth had left me forever.

Boys who spurn a mother's control, who are ashamed to own that they are wrong, who think it manly to resist her authority, or yield to her influence, beware! Lay not up for yourselves bitter memories for future years.

Questions for Liquor Dealers.

BY PRESIDENT WAYLAND.

1st. Can it be right for me to derive my living from that which is spreading disease, poverty, and premature death through my neighborhood? How would it be in any similar case? Would it be right for me to derive my living from selling poison, or from propagating plague and leprosy around me?

2d. Can it be right for me to derive my living from that which is debasing the minds and ruining the souls of my neighbors?—How would it be in any other case? Would it be right for me to derive my living from the sale of a drug which produced misery or madness; which excited the passions, and brutalized the mind, and ruined the souls of my fellow-men?

3d. Can it be right for me to derive my living from that which destroys forever the happiness of the domestic circle—which is filling the land with women and children in a condition far more deplorable than that of widows and orphans?

4th. Can it be right for me to derive my living from that which is known to be the cause of nine-tenths of all the crimes which are perpetrated against society?

5th. Can it be right for me to derive my living from that which accomplishes all these at once, and which it does without ceasing?

6th. Do you say that you do not know that the liquor which you are selling will produce these results? Do you not know that nine hundred and ninety-nine gallons produce these effects, for one which is used innocently? I ask then,

7th. Would it be right for me to sell poison on the ground that there was one chance in a thousand that the purchaser would not die of it?

8th. Do you say that you are not responsible for the acts of your neighbors? Is this clearly so? Is not he who furnishes a murderer with a weapon considered an accomplice?

If these things are so—and that they are so who can dispute?—I ask you, my respected fellow citizens, what is to be done? Let me ask, is not this trade altogether wrong? Why, then, should we not altogether abandon it? If any man think otherwise, and choose to continue it, I have but one word to say, My brother, when you order a cargo of intoxicating drinks, think how much misery you are importing into the community. As you store it up, think how many curses you may be heaping together against yourself. As you roll it out of your warehouse, think how many families each cask will ruin. Let your thoughts then revert to your own fireside, wife, and your little ones, then look up to him that judgeth righteously and ask yourself, my brother, IS IT RIGHT?

Cadets.

There is no Temperance order on earth that the rum-dealers stand so much in fear of, as they do of the Cadets of Temperance; and yet it is not strange, because they well know that it is the Cadets and other kindred juvenile orders that will put an end to their wicked rum-traffic. No man of common sense, who will look upon the subject with candor, can help coming to the conclusion that the only way to rid this, or any other country from the curse of intemperance is to train up the young and rising generation under strictly moral Temperance principles. Nothing under Heaven short of this, will accomplish the great work. The old tipplers will soon be out of the way; the young men will take their places, and if their habits are correct, all will be well.—All must look upon this important subject in this light. The rum-dealer looks upon it in this light, and trembles and fears lest the friends of Temperance should come to the same conclusion, and go to work to save the young from being contaminated with liquor. We have, time and again, laid this subject in its true light before parents, and warned them of the danger their young sons are in, of becoming miserable outcasts upon earth; and yet we have not been able to wake them up to their duty. But we are not without hope that God, in his infinite mercy, will yet awaken them, that they may see and know the awful danger which their sons and daughters are in, of being ruined, and all their earthly hopes blasted forever. We earnestly invite all young boys to become Cadets. Don't delay one moment. Parents, will you heed the warning of one that has your best interests, and that of your children, at heart, and delay no longer? Bring forward your sons, and make Cadets of them. You may depend upon it, it will add to your and their happines· N. Y. Cadet.

ECCENTRIC PREACHER.—The discourse, from which the annexed passage is taken, was actually preached in the town of Zanesville, Ohio, some years ago. The name of the reverned divine, who was a colored gentleman, and we believe a sincere and humble Christian, we have forgotten, but the Judge Harper to whom he refers, we remember well. He was, we believe, at that time, President Judge of the 15th Judicial Circuit of the Court of Common Pleas—has since represented the District in Congress, and is, if we are not mistaken, the present Representative. The Judge was present at the delivery of the sermon and was brought in by the preacher, by way of illustrating a certain position, then and there taken by him. But to the passage:

"My dear frens and bedren," said the preacher, "de soul ob de brack man is as dear to de Lord, as de soul ob de white man.

"Now you all see Judge Harper, a settin dah leanin' on his gold headed cane—you all know de Judge, niggas, and a berry fine man he is too. Well, now, Ise gwine to make a little comparishment. Supposin' de Judge some fine morning' put his basket on his arm, an' goes to market to buy a piece ob meat. He soon finds a nice fat piece of mutton, an' trots off wid it. Do you s'pose de Judge would stop to 'quire wedder dat mutton was ob a white sheep, or ob a brack sheep? No, nuffin ob de kind—if de mutton was nice an' fat it would be all de same to de Judge—he would not stop to ax wedder de sheep had white wool or brack wool.

"Well, so it is, my frens, wid our hebenly master. He does not stop to ax wedder a soul belongs to a white man, or a brack man—wedder his head is kivered wid straight har, or kivered wid wool—de only question he will ax, will be, 'Is dis a good soul?' and if so, de Massa will say, 'Enter into de joy ob de Lord, an' set down on de same bench wid de white man—yo'se all on a perfect quality.'"—Decatur Gaz.

THE REFORMED CROWS.—Col. B. had one of the best farms on the Illinois River.—About one hundred acres of it were covered with waving corn. When it came up in the spring, the crows seemed determined on its entire destruction. When one was killed, it seemed as though a dozen came to its funeral, and though the sharp crack of the rifle often drove them away, they always returned with its echo. The Col. at length became weary of throwing grass, and resolved on trying the virtue of stones. He sent to the druggist's for a gallon of alcohol, in which he soaked a few quarts of corn, and scattered it over his field. The blacklegs came and partook with their usual relish, and, as usual were pretty well "corned;" and such a cooing and cackling; such strutting and swaggering. When the boys attempted to catch them, they were not a little amused at their staggering gait, and zigzag way through the air.

At length they gained the edge of the woods, and there being joined by a new recruit which happened to be sober, they united at the top of their voices in haw-haw-hawking, and shouting either praises or curses of alcohol, it was difficult to tell which, as they rattled away without rhyme or reason. But the Col. saved his corn. As soon as they became sober, they set their faces steadfastly against alcohol. Not another kernel would they touch in his field.

A TEMPERANCE HORSE.—At a camp meeting in this county a few weeks since, a certain man hitched his horse on the Sabbath, leaving his saddle bags on him, fastened as usual by the strap. The motive for so doing was discovered in the fact that he had a bottle of liquor in them, and intended to visit it frequently through the day, under the pretence of looking after his horse. The horse, in his absence, but in the presence of several gentlemen, laid down and rolled, breaking the bottle and spilling the whiskey. On rising to his feet, and feeling the "distilled essence sf damnation" run down his side, put his nose to it and got the scent, and instantly fell upon the other side and rolled again, in the hope of breaking another bottle, but failed in the effort, as there was nothing but a stone to ballance the bottle already broke!

Now if this horse was not at heart a Son of Temperance, his conduct was such as becomes every horse in the land. Ardent spirits have given many a faithful horse trouble and suffering. They cause a poor horse to stand tied too long to a dry stake—to be rode too hard over bad roads, and to be cruelly beaten over the head without just cause. Our advice to all horses is break all the jugs and bottles that come in their way, and throw all the drunken riders that may mount them. They will be doing a good work, and have the approbation of all good citizens.—Brownlow's Whig.

Advertisement of an Honest Rumseller.

Friends and neighbors! Having just opened a commodious shop for the sale of 'Liquid Fire,' I embrace this early opportunity of informing you that on Saturday I shall commence the business of making drunkards, paupers, and beggars, for the sober, industrious and respectable to support.

I shall deal in 'familiar spirits,' which shall excite men to deeds of riot and robbery, and blood; and by so doing diminish the comforts, augument the expense, and endanger the welfare of the community.

I will undertake at short notice, for a small sum, and with great expdeition, to prepare inmates for the asylum, the poor house the prison and the gallows.

I will furnish an article which shall increase the amount of fatal accidents, multiply the number of distressing diseases, and render those now harmless incurable.

I will furnish a drug, which shall deprive some of life, many of reason, most of property, all of peace; which shall cause fathers to be fiends; wives widows; children orphans, and all mendicants.

I will cause the rising generation to grow up in ignorance, and prove a burden and a nuisance to the nation.

I will corrupt the ministers of religion, obstruct the progress of the Gospel, defile the purity of the church, and cause temporal, spiritual and eternal death; and if any be so impertinent as to inquire why I had the audacity to bring such accumulated misery upon a comparatively happy land, my honest reply is, MONEY.

The spirit trade is the most lucrative, and some professing Christians give it their cheerful countenance.

I have license from the court, and if I do not bring these evils upon you, somebody else will.

I live in a land of liberty.

I have purchased the right to demolish the character, destroy the health, shorten the lives, and ruin the souls of those who choose to honor me with their custom.

I know that the Bible says thou shall not kill; that it pronounces a woe upon him who giveth his neighbor strong drink; and I also read in the Divine record that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, and I cannot expect the drunkard maker to share a better fate. Yet what can I do.—Temperance Messenger.

That two-thirds of the crime committed may be traced to intemperance we do not pretend to deny. No man who has looked over the criminal calendar of our state can deny it. * * *

When temperance men as a body will break loose from their parties and labor to sustain temperance principles by electing temperance men, we may hope to see good resulting from such a movement, and not before. * * *

We wish not to be understood as opposing the movement, but on the contrary bid the work God speed, All we ask is that the ticket selected may be worthy of the support of every man, and that its friends will break loose the political bonds which fetter them, and work for it manfully, that the temperance cause may not suffer in consequence thereof—for surely Justice and Mercy pleads in its behalf.—Bordentown, (N. J.) Register.

FATHER CHINIQUY.—The "Joliet (Ill.) Journal" is gratified to learn that Rev. Mr. Chiniquy, the French Catholic Apostle of Temperance, has emigrated to that State, and intends locating in the Kankakee Valley. He will be joined in the spring by about 1,500 French families from Montreal and Quebec. The reverned gentleman, we understand, is highly pleased with the country, and his locating among us will attract hither a large accession to our population. "There is room enough for all."

'THAT'S THE WAY TO HELL.'—A few years ago, an Elder of a certain congregation would keep a distillery. He was believed to be a good man. His preacher was grieved and resolved to have a talk with him. A visit was paid him for the purpose; and after a conversation of rather a general nature on the subject of religion, the Elder looked out of the door upon a grave yard near at hand and observed, 'I love to look there, it seems to be the way to Heaven.' Yes, said the preacher, pointing to the disullery, 'and that's the way to Hell.' This was enough. The business was soon abandoned.

☞ A City Temperance Society has been formed in Albany composed of some of the best and most influential of the population. The measure was needed. Our cities and larger pleces, are reeking ulcers. Their drunkeries are the great armories of corrupt politicians. Churches sleep lazily over the craters. The thunders of the desk are not often truthfully and boldly leveled at pews where wealthy liquor dealers are wont to set. Success then to every effort which shall help to restrain the great evil.—Cayuga Chief.

The Postmaster General of Canada, has abolished the postage on provincial papers passing between Canada and Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland.

A FOX'S REVENGE.—Rev. J. Murray in his works on Creation, tells the following story:

An old and respectable man of the County of Montgomery used frequently to relate an anecdote of a circumstance which he saw. In his youth he resided on the banks of the Hudson River. One day he went to a bay on the river in order to shoot ducks or wild geese. When he came to the river he saw six geese beyond shot. He determined to wait for them to approach the shore. While sitting there, he saw a fox come down to the shore and stand some time and observe the geese. At length he turned and went into the woods, and came out with a very large bunch of moss in his mouth.—He then entered the water very silently, sank himself, and then keeping the moss above the water, himself concealed, he floated among the geese. Suddenly one of them was drawn under the water, and the fox soon appeared on the shore with the goose on his back. He ascended the bank and found a hole made by the tearing up of a tree. The hole he cleared, placed in the goose, and covered it with great care, strewing leaves over it. The fox then left; and while he was gone, the hunter unburied the goose, closed the hole and resolved to await the issue.

In about half an hour the fox returned with another in company. They went directly to the place where the goose had been buried and threw out the earth. The goose could not be found. They stood regarding each other for some time, when suddenly the second fox attacked the other most furiously, as if offended at the trick of his friend—During the battle the man shot them both.

ON HAND.—A farmer hired a sailor to dig a patch of potatoes upon condition of being allowed a bottle of whiskey to begin with.

In about an hour the farmer went to see how the son of Neptune had progressed with his business of farming, when he found him holding to a stump, the bottle lying empty at his feet, and no potatoes dug.

"Hallo, you rascal," said he, "is this the way you dig potatoes?"

"If you want your potatoes dug," said the sailor hiccuping, "bring 'em on, for I'm not going to run all round the lot after 'em."

COST OF RUM IN NEW YORK.—There are 6,003 liquor establishments in the city of New York, or one for every 85 individuals. The amount received from these for the sale of licenses is $44,980. If, as esumated, two thirds of the police, criminal, and almshouse expenses are cause by intemperance it costs the city in taxes $750,000.

At a sale of a parson's effects, recently, his library sold for $10 and his wines for $300. His wife quoted—"The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

A drop of water has the properties of the sea, but cannot exhibit a storm.

NEW VOLUME OF THE

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE MAGAZINE.

COMMENCING JANUARY 1, 1852.

ON the first of January, 1852, the new volume of the American Temperance Magazine, edited by Gen. S. F. Cary, will be commenced. The first number will contain three beautiful engravings, one of which will be a splendid portrait of Hon. Neal Dow, (the Napoleon of the Temperance Army,) with a Biographical Sketch, and giving the operations of the Maine Liquor Law. Our New volume will open with several marked improvements; and we intend to render each succeeding number more and more worthy the generous patronage of the public.

☞ We have the happiness to inform the readers of the Magazine, that an original story, written expressly for our pages by Mrs. C. W. Denison, will shortly appear. It will be entitled—

HOPE STERLING—A TALE OF NEW ENGLAND.

In view of our arduous exertions, and of the large expenses we are constantly incurring in this good work, we confidently appeal to the friends of temperance, and of a sound American Literature for their generous support. We really feel that our Magazine deserves it; that it is, and will ever continue to be, under our direction, a guide, a counsellor, a companion, which the lovers of sound morals, and human happiness ought to aid in introducing to every temperance organization and family in the land.

TERMS—$2 per annum; 10 copies for $16; 20 for $30; and one gratis, to the brother sending a club in advance. Money to be remitted at the publisher's risk. Please address—

NEW YORK POST-OFFICE. — There are made up daily in this post-office 4,480 mails a considerable part of which are made up thrice each day, making over 7,000 mails made up for separate places daily. About 200 large canvass bags of newspapers are despatched daily; and on Wednesday and Thursday 250 extra bags are despatched each day, and on Friday nearly as many more. The average number of letters received at and sent from the office daily is between 50,000 and 60,000. The daily average of newspapers is about 112,000.—There are 76 clerks employed, and 30 carriers with their assistants. The above work is exclusive of the mails sent and received by foreign and California steamers.

IMPROVEMENTS IN TRAVELLING. — The Hudson River Railroad, built at a cost of about $9,000,000, was opened October 8.—The distance is 140 miles, and the engine, with a heavy train, traveled it in three hours and fifty minutes, including stoppages; the speed in some instances exceed 50 miles an hour. In 1804 it took three days by the accommodation stage to go from New York to Albany. In 1814, the steamboat Fulton made the passage in 18 hours and 25 minutes. In 1824 the distance from New Orleans to Washington was accomplished in 24 days. By the Nicaragua route, letters are now conveyed from New York to San Francisco within the same period.

BETTER THAN SILVER PLATE.—James Boorman, Esq., President of the Hudson River Railroad Company, has declined to receive a service of plate costing $5,000, in recognition of his arduous and unpaid labors for the company. He proposes, with a thoughtfulness worthy a Christian man, that the cost of such a service shall be set apart as a fund for the relief of men employed on the road who shall be disabled in its service.

THE MAILS IN THE OLDEN TIME.—The first post in New York for Hartford and Boston was begun January 1, 1673, and went monthly. In 1704, the only posts on the continent were from New York to Boston and Philadelphia. In 1753 Benjamin Franklin was appointed the first postmaster, at a salary of $1,000. New York was the first colony which established posts by law. The Boston and New York posts started on Monday morning, and met at Saybrook on the Saturday evening following.

NOBLE.—The late Dr. Thomas Hartford bequeathed $50,000 to the Pittsburgh and Alleghany Orphan Asylum. He also left $10,000 to the poor of Canton, Ohio.

THE LIQUOR SELLER'S DREAM.

Room in a wholesale liquor store in Cincinnati.

Enter two liquor sellers from Indiana.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
O, I have passed a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
That as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days;
So full of dismal terror was the time. [me
What was your dream, my friend I pray you, tell
2. Methought, that I had started from my house,
And was embarked for Cincinnati;
And in my company, my brother Tapster:
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the decks; thence we saw Gaff's distillery
And cited up a thousand heavy crimes
During the war 'gainst innocence and peace
That we had done. As we paced along
Upon the giddy footing of the decks
Methought, that Tapster stumbled; and, in falling
Struck me, that thought to stay him, overboard,
Into the tumbling billows of the flood,
O Lord! methought, what pain it was to drown
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand murdered men that fishes gnawed upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearls,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scattered in the bottom of the stream,
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mocked the dead bones that lay scattered by.
1. Had you such leisure in the time of death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?
2. Methought I had; and often did I strive
To yield the ghost, but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast, and wandering air,
But smothered it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.
1. Awaked you not with this sore agony?
2. O, no, my dream was lengthened after life;
O, then began the tempest to my soul!
I pass'd methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my neighbor, whom I poisoned years agone,
Who cried aloud—what scourge for liquor-selling
Can this dark monarchy afford thee, villain?
And so he vanished. Then came wandering by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood, and he shrieked out aloud,—
The grocery-keeper's come at last,—false, perjured wretch!
That robbed me of honor, wealth, and life
That by his dreadful trade killed my poor wife
And left my little ones to starve and perish,
In sight of his murder-shop, and blood-stained palace,—
Seize on him, furies take him to your torments!
With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd, and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell;
Such terrible impression made my dream.
1. No, marvel, friend, though it affrighted you!
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.
2. O, my dear friend, I have done these things—
That now give evidence against my soul,—
For Lucre's sake; and see, how it requites me!
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be avenged on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:
O, spare my guiltless wife, and my poor children;
I pray thee, gentle fellow-dramshop keeper, stay by me;
My soul is heavy and I fear to be alone.
1. I will my friend; God gives us grace to-day,
That we may not see, and feel forever,
The dreadful torments that we dream of nightly.

Exeunt. The two murderers silently musing, and without making their purchases.

Miscellaneous.

Winter.

We copy the following beautiful description of a sleighing party from that excellent paper, the Cayuga Chief.

It reminds us of olden times when in our childhood home among the hills of New England we enjoyed many such a sleighing party as is here so graphically described. But those happy days are gone.

Winter is passing away, and the treacherous mantle of Spring will soon undermine its rigid sway.

As the bright dreams of youth drift along, how changed are all things. The winters are not as they once were. They speed by like a winter cloud, still faster as years sweep along.

What joys we used to have in winter time! How many pleasant and sacred associations are linked with the annual coming of this season of the year.

There was the old school house on the hill-side, and the pond below. We are told that the old weather-beaten structure has passed away. We love to cherish the memory of its moss-grown roof and well worn door-sill—it was our only alma mater.

"What sports at "noon spells," gliding down that steep hill with our hand sleds, or battling behind our mimic battlements of dampened snow! And then on the pond with skates! or in the bright moonlight evenings, when girls and boys were packed upon a chain of sleds, and shot away with laugh and shout. Ah! jolly tumbles there were in the crispy snow. And how carefully we watched over and seated some little miss upon the best sled, and felt proud of being a protector! Childish love! as pure as the dreams of childhood, budding unconsciously in mid-winter, to bloom only in the past.

But we cannot here write of winter all that floods up in the heart.

Youth stood on the threshold of manhood, and yet winter was a season of joy. Singing schools, spelling schools, evening parties, &c., made many a sunny spot in the pathway of young life. The heart holds no brighter dreams than those woven in winter times long since gone by.

A sleigh ride in winter! Such an event was a whole history of enjoyment. The snow came down silently as excited young genis commenced preparations. A sleigh was rigged with seats all round, buffaloes and bells engaged and horses harnessed. The team was soon on the move, and then the gathering up of the girls. It was a pleasure to help the creatures, mere bundles of cloaks, tippets and muffs, into the sleigh.

All are in, and a merrier load were never launched on a winter's night. Tongues wagged, and throats gushed with clear, silvery laughter, bells jingled and the happy hearted load sped away over the well-beaten path.

A light ahead, glimmering through the darkening snow. With a sweep, the load stands at the door, and the reeking horses champ their bits impatiently. There are heads at the windows peering out and are already in the door. There is no cessation of talk, one after another leap upon brawny arms and light upon the ground. Midst the buzzing of merry greetings the girls are hurried into the house and their shawls and bonnets taken care of. Curls have been twisted awry, and each of the dear creatures must have a chance at the glass to make all straight.

The parlor door is thrown open, and the sight sends a most pleasant glow to the very heart! There is a bright cheerful blaze, and every thing is so comfortable!

And now for a happy time! After quick, searching glances to see that some "particular star" is not missing, the tide of talk bursts out. Tongues all run together until there is a regular bedlam of sounds and and laughter. Groups gather in different parts of the room, and even in the midst of that hurly-burly, many a sly glance and whispered word go out on their errand, and cause young hearts to strangely beat.

Refreshments are handed round and the fire replenished. The fun goes on, unabated and unclouded, till the small hours of night give warning. Some mischievous girl has turned back the old clock in the hall; but winter parties must break up.

Little groups here and there continue their amusements until there is a shout and a sound of bells at the door. Then what a hurrying. Things are put on with nimble fingers, while now and then some more ventursome fellow volunteers to tie on a certain little bonnet, not forgetting to be seen and test the face that's under it as the light is momentarily borne into the hall for some stray glove or "comforter."

Good bye! Hearty, soul-felt, joyous good bye! There is a touch of feeling in the sobered tones, for such are happy meetings. A thousand good wishes are left with the people of the house.

Ah! one of your load has been playing the truant in the hall, and now comes blusteringly forward, followed by one of the girls of the house, with a tell-tale flush on her warm cheek! We'll bet—but no. we won't tell. But we know what has been going on nevertheless. We side up closer to one in the sleigh and say nothing. We would have done just so too.

Whoop! Away we dash at a sweeping pace, the bells jingling and the iron grumbling on the cold track. The load is somewhat sobered, but yet a low hum of hushed voices is heard. How strangely the load has gathered into pairs! and as a matter of safety, there is an arm around every half. Ah! how many hopes were lit up in the heart—how many blessed dreams as careless hands met in those muffs!

A girl is left. And another, and another. The rest have relapsed into silence, after bidding the low "good bye!" We will not tell how many hands were pressed as the girls were guided to their doors. Or lips, if out of sight of the load in the sleigh.

The last one is out. "Drive ahead, I'll be along in a moment," says the chap who stands with her on the door-step. How he lied! He did not intend to be along, for a light struggled through the treacherous rush curtains until the blush of day-light. So a little sister said the next morning at school. And the next day there were two subdued, yet happy countenances on the back seat. A grave question had been put and answered behind those rush curtains. So we guessed.

Such evenings are gone! But we love winter for their sake. He wore a thousand smiles in those days, and we greet him with smiles now!

Tom Nokes.

HOW HE BECAME A TEETOTALLER!

It was in the summer of '42, when the Washingtonian cause had reached its highest pitch of excitement, that our friend Tom, according to long established custom, resolved upon one of his old-time sprees.

Now Tom was a mechanic, a painter by trade, and withal an excellent workman in his line, when sober; but it so happened, whenever he received his wages, which were paid to him semi-monthly, that he generally left a goodly portion of them in the rum-seller's till.

At the time of our young friend's adventure which we are now relating, he was boarding with a worthy widow lady, to whom, for fear of giving offense, as she is still living somewhere on the 'earth's wide domain,' we will call her Mrs. Snocks; this worthy matron had two sons of her own, who had grown up to be men, had gone out into the world, and had unfortunately fallen victims to the intoxicating bowl; consequently she knew how to sympathise with Tom, who had, at an early age, been deprived of both parents, and turned out upon the 'cold charities of the world.'

The good lady took him in, and acted the part of a mother to him; and whose kindness towards him accompanied by another circumstance, which we shall relate in this place, was the means of making a sober man out of him as long as he lived, which was some seven or eight years after the commencement of our story.

Our young friend, whom we call Tom Nokes, was very careful about the hours he kept, and was never out after ten in the evening, except he was engaged in a midnight orgie, and then the old lady who understood him perfectly well, usually prepared his supper for him, and, if the weather was cold, would build a fire and place the 'tea fixins' and viands alongside, so that he might have them warm when he came home.

About twelve o'clock one night, Tom came home 'pretty well tore,' and repairing to the side-board where his supper was deposited ready for him, he at once commenced sad havoc amongst the eatables.

Knowing that the old lady had a jar of very fine preserved pears, he made a terrible onslaught upon them, and had eaten two or three of them, when he fancied one was preserved whole, stem and all, he made several ineffectual attempts to disengage the stem from the pear, which for some time baffled all his skill, but, making one desperate attempt, it yielded, and Tom looking at it, fancied it a very singular stem for a pear, and going to a lamp which sat upon a table hard by, after a critical examination, found it was a mouse's tail; and in the place of sweetmeats, which he had supposed he was eating, he had made his supper on a mouse! who had been to the jar of preserves before him, and had accidentally lost its foothold—fell into the jar, and was drowned in the sweet liquor.

This was too much for Tom. he went at once and signed the total-abstinence pledge, became a lecturer, and wherever he went related this anecdote about himself. He caught the gold-fever some three years ago, went to California and died there.—Dollar Newspaper.

OREGON.—The official statement of the Oregon census shows that there are 2374 dwellings, and exactly the same number of families, in that territory; and that while the white males number 8142, the white females only number 4946. The colored males numbered 119, colored females 87. Farms 1164, manufacturing establishments 51. Total population 13,293, and deaths during the year 17.

The Liquor Law.

Opinion of the U. S. S. J. Court.

A correspondent requests us to publish the opinions of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Massachusetts case, argued against the Massachusetts law by Mr. Webster and Mr. Choate. The Judges were unanimous in sustaining the Massachusetts law, and in affirming the power of the States, not only to restrain and regulate the liquor traffic, but to prohibit it.

Chief Justice Taney said, "If any State deems the retail and internal traffic in ardent spirits injurious to its citizens, I see nothing in the Constitution to prevent it from regulating and restraining the traffic, or from prohibiting it altogether."

Mr. Justice McLean said, "No person can introduce into a community malignant diseases, or any thing which contaminates its morals or endangers its safety."

Mr. Justice Catron said, "If the State has the power of restraint by license to any extent, she may go to the length of prohibiting sales altogether."

Mr. Justice Daniel said of imports that are cleared of all control of the Government, "They are like all other property of the citizen, whether owned by the importer or his vendee, or may have been purchased by cargo, package, bale, piece or yard, or by hog-heads, casks, or bottles." In answering the argument that the importer purchases to sell when he pays duties to Government. Justice Daniel continues to say, "No such right is purchased by any importer; he cannot purchase from the Government that which it could not ensure to him—a sale independently of the laws and policy of the State."

And Mr. Justice Grier said, "It is not necessary to array the appaling statistics of misery, pauperism and crime, which have their origin in the use and abuse of ardent spirits. The police power, which is exclusively in the State, is alone competent to the correction of these great evils, and all measures of restraint or prohibition necessary to effect the purpose are within the scope of that authority. All laws for the restraint or punishment of crime, or the preservation of the public peace, health, and morals, are, from their very nature, of primary importance, and lie at the foundation of social existence. They are for the protection of life and liberty, and necessarily compel all laws on subjects of secondary importance, which relate only to property, convenience or luxury, to recede when they come in contact or collision. Salut populi suprema lex. The exigencies of the social compact require that such laws be before and above all others. It is for this reason that quarantine laws which protect public health, compel mere commercial regulations to submit to their control. They restrain the liberty of the passengers; they operate on the ship, which is the instrument of commerce, and its officers and crew, the agents of navigation. They seize the infected cargo and cast it overboard. All these things are done, not from any power which the State assumes to regulate commerce, or to interfere with the regulations of Congress, but because police laws for the prevention of crime and protection of the public welfare must of necessity have full and free operation, according to the exigency that requires their interference. If a loss of revenue should accrue to the United States from the diminished consumption of ardent spirits, she will be the gainer a thousand fold in the health, wealth, and happiness of the people."

Thus all the Judges of the United States Supreme Court, reaffirmed and corroborated the decision of each subordinate State Court, that the entire control of the sale of intoxicating drinks is within the legitimate province of the State Legislature.—Augusta Age.

THE TEMPLE IN ENGLAND.—This beautiful Order has winged its way across the broad Atlantic, and will shortly take its stand among the glorious temperance organizations of the day—destined finally to regenerate the world. An application and fee for a subordinate Temple Charter has been received by the M.W.R. of the National Temple, for St. George Temple, No. 1, to be located at Liverpool, England. This is an important era in the history of the old world, and we hail the introduction of the Order as the harbinger of better days in "merrie England."

HOW THEY BITE.—Two druuken men were attempting to light a cigar from one already ignited; once in a while as they tottered and bobbed together the lighted cigar came in contact with the man's nose. At length making a desperate pass with his hand, over the annoyed member, he sung out—'Blast the musquitoes! how do bite!'

DOWN WITH THE TRAFFIC.—The war cry from all quarters now is down, down with Satan's great master of art, the liquor traffic. It is delightful to contemplate the unity of purpose and effort in this direction. All over New England, New York, Ohio, and the entire west, the same operation in the same form finds a ready and hearty response. We don't meet a temperance man any where who has any other remedy for the liquor traffic but the Maine law. There are croakers and doubters to be sure, but even these "would like the law if it could be executed." The Maine law and nothing else is the great panacea. It is suited to all meridians, and is sure death to the monster wherever he is attacked. Numerously signed petitions are now before the Rhode Island and Vermont Legislature for a law identical in substance with this for the entire and perfect overthrow of man's worst and bitterest foe. Petitions for the same thing are in circulation among the people of Massachusetts, and will be in a few days among the people of Connecticut. Let them be numerously signed. We are accustomed to present the petitions of about ten thousand legal voters annually to our own Legislature, for a prohibition of the liquor traffic. Now let there be at least thirty thousand men sign these petitions, for a law to crush, not regulate, this terrible traffic. Let the motto in every place, now be the one familiar to Sons of Temperance, 'Down with the liquor traffic.' The secret is out, and with it as a public motto we must work every day till the great Moloch is slain.—Connecticut Fountain.

HOW TO KEEP DRY.—Dow Jr. says: "To keep dry, always wear an oil cloth dress, carry a good umbrella, and practice rum drinking. The first two articles are only essential in protecting the outside from superabundant moisture, but the latter keeps the inside dry as a stove-pipe. I never knew a drinker but he was eternally dry. He goes to bed dry, gets up dry, and keeps himself dry through the day. It is not to be wondered at; for how can he be otherwise than dry when he keeps the blue blaze eternally burning in his bosom, by pouring distilled destruction down his throat forever. In fact, my friends, the more he drinks the dryer he grows. On his death bed he cries for more drink, for the last time, and then he goes out of the world as thirsty as if he had lived on cod-fish all the days of his life."

NEW USE FOR ICE.—The scientific men of France, are at present speculating on a recent instance of a young man brought to life after being frozen up, eleven months on the Alps. It has given rise to a revived belief in the theory, that life can be suspended at pleasure, and criminals are about to be demanded of the Government, to be frozen on experiment. The reader will already have inferred what a relief this offers to such unhappy ladies as find themselves not contemporary with the hearts they sigh to win. They have only to be iced till overtaken! We should add that the above is by no means a joke, however. The blood of a living man was infused into the veins of the frozen youth, and he moved and he spoke. The experiment was afterwards tried on a hare, frozen for the purpose, and with complete success.

The Home Journal suggests a plan for putting this idea into practical use, thus—put out $500 at interest, have yourself packed in ice and stay frozen, with suspended life till it amounts to a fortune.

A carpenter named Miller, in a fit of delirium tremens, threw himself into the Alabama River, at Cahaba, on the 7th inst., and was drowned. The unfortunate man had only been in Cahaba a few weeks previous to his melancholy end.

Who killed this man? He died by his hands, some will say. True, but it was done under the effects of a deadly poison, named alcohol, that fired his brain and dethroned his reason. How came he in possession of the poison? It is presumable it was sold to him, and that, too, under the full conviction that he would drink it. If this liquor had been known under the name of arsenic or prussic acid, instead of alcohol, would the seller, in the eyes of the law—the world—and God himself—been held justifiable? Would he have been held an innocent man? He assuredly would not; but as the law does not recognize alcohol as a deadly poison the vender is not chargeable to the law. But does this lessen the offense in the eyes of a just and righteous God, who has pronounced "wo unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's mouth?" What a solemn and awful responsibility rests upon the vender of ardent spirits.—Crystal Fount.

To Subscribers.

We still owe an apology to some subscribers for not sending them the last number of the Chart. As we announced in the No. of Jan. 15th, we issued 2,200 copies, but such was the increase of subscribers that we run out again.

We will increase the edition to 2,300, and see if we are overtaken again.

Our list has increased about one hundred in the past two weeks, and if our friends are only faithful, we shall get up to 2,500 before the session of the Grand Division in April. We have subscribers in twelve States and one territory.

A Whisky Murder.

During the recent cold weather, a well known citizen of this city, Mr. John Foley, after supplying himself with whisky from one of the murder mills with which our city abounds, (thank God they are not licensed,) got intoxicated and was found in a stable near Little's hotel with both feet and parts of his body badly frozen. He was removed to the alms house, where he died. Now, who murdered Foley?—for he was murdered. Why the man that sold him the liquor, and no one else, and of him will his blood be required at the last great day. Oh! the awful responsibilty of the liquor seller!

A New Temperance Bill.

Mr. Hester, of Monroe, has introduced into the Senate, a Bill understood to contain the principal features of the "Wisconsin Law." We shall inform our readers of its fate. A bill will also soon be reported to the House, from its Temperance committee. We are not discouraged.

Bro. M. H. Pease.—Bro. Pease, the blind lecturer, has been spending several days in this city, delivering temperance lectures. He is an able lecturer and well deserves encouragement. He will do good wherever he goes.

☞ Rev. D. Simpson and Gen. Cary are advocating, at Cincinnati, the adoption of the Maine liquor law. A series of Temperance meetings are being held in that place.

A Strong Temperance Argument.—The number of idiots in Massachusetts is computed at 1200, three-fourths of whom are the children of intemperrte parents—having the appearance and gait of drunkards.

A Pie that was a Pie.—A Mr. Ward, of Rochester, N. Y., on last Thanksgiving day, sent to the orphans of that city a chicken pie which weighed two hundred pounds!

Temperance Revival.

Our city has been for about two weeks past, the scene of one of the most powerful temperance revivals it has ever been our lot to witness. About the first of the present month, several of our prominent citizens, many of whom had been in the habit of drinking to excess, met and formed a temperance society called the "Social Order of Temperance." This Order is composed of any person, of either sex, who will sign the pledge of the Order.

They have held meetings every evening since their organization, in private dwellings, churches, school houses, the court house, Temperance Hall, and in the street, and all have been attended by large numbers of our citizens. The following extracts from our city papers, will give our readers an idea of what they are doing. Success to them:

War Against Alcohol.—A new temperance society has been started in this city with an excellent pledge; and many of our good citizens, who had been giving character to the rummeries, having enlisted, and are working manfully in the right cause. Indeed, our people are becoming on this subject "like the handle of a jug, all on one side." The fact is, if we keep on, we'll soon not have a drunkard left, to "serve as a frightful example."—Journal.

Temperance Revival.—There is just now a great and glorious excitement among our temperance friends. A new society has been organized, and hundreds have signed the pledge. Meetings are nightly held and the work goes bravely on. Moral suasion is the great lever which is uprooting the mighty evil of drunkenness. The meeting Wednesday evening at the Fifth Ward School House was large and enthusiastic. Hon. Wm. M. Saffer, of Harrison county, addressed the people in his usual happy manner. He is one of the most effective speakers, in this cause, which we have ever heard. His humor and his anecdotes will always attract attention. He abuses nobody, but draws all by the cords of love. "A soft answer turneth away wrath," is his maxim.—Sentinel.

The Temperance Movement.—Another meeting in behalf of the crusade which has recently commenced in this city against the traffic in spirituous liquors, was held last evening at the Court House. At the meeting in the 3d ward school house Tuesday evening, 104 persons signed the new Society of which we spoke yesterday, the "Social Order of Temperance." One hundred and thirty joined at the meeting of Wednesday evening at the 5th ward school house. To-night their meeting is to be held at Temperance Hall. Large numbers of our citizens attend these meetings, who appear to take a deep interest in the proceedings.

What is our Legislature doing to allay this curse which crowds our prisons, and fills our alms-houses with criminals and paupers? Very many of our citizens, all over the State, are favorable to the enactment of a liquor law similar to that of Maine, and doubtless such a law would be almost unanimously approved by the friends of temperance in this State.—Journal

We have attended nearly all the meetings of this Order, and the interest still increases. About 900, many of them the hardest cases in our city, have signed the pledge and joined the Order. They have unanimously petitioned our Legislature, for the Maine law. God grant that they may get it.

MARION COUNTY TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

We, whose names are hereunto subscribed hereby pledge to each other and to the public our faith and honor, that in all future elections, we will withhold our suffrage from every man who does not use his influence in promoting the cause of Temperance Reformation; and who does not actively favor Legislative enactment for suppressing the making, rectifying, and selling of intoxicating liquor as a beverage.

This pledge is the one adopted some weeks since by the temperance meeting on the street. At a meeting held pursuant to adjournment, in the basement of Wesley Chapel, on the night of Wednesday the 4th, a committee was appointed, charged with the duty of engaging suitable persons in each township to circulate and obtain signatures to the Pledge.

The committee appointed consist of Messrs. M. Secrest, C. G. Downey, Jas. Blake, C. Fletcher, J. Greer, and M. Hand.

The friends of Temperance throughout the county may expect to be waited upon soon, and it is confidently hoped that a sufficient number will be found to secure thorough temperance candidates by both political conventions.

Mr. Claiborne Rice, of Todd county, Ky., had his tobacco-house, with thirty thousand pounds of tobacco, consumed by fire some days ago; and suspecting his neighbor, Mr. Riley, as the incendiary, he procured a gun, proceeded to his residence, and shot him dead on the spot, after which he gave himself up.

Our Temperance Bill.

On Friday, Feb. 6th, Mr. Holloway, from the cselet committee on temperance, returned the ptemerance bill with amendments, to imprison the vender of liquor violating the law until his find and costs shall be paid or replevied.

Mr. Emerson moved to recommit the bill with instructions to inquire into the constitutionality of imprisoning men for the non-payment of costs.

After some discusiion, the motion to refer with instructions was lost—ayes 22, noes 22. The President gave the casting vote in the negative.

Mr. Eddy moved to postpone the consideration of the bill until Tuesday next at 2 o'clock; lost.

Mr. Emerson moved to postpone it until Friday next; lost.

On Saturday morning, Mr. McCarty of Marion, presented a petition from reformed drinkers of Indianapolis in favor of the passage of the "Maine Law," for the suppression of the liquor traffic. Laid on the table, and on motion of Mr. Saffer, one thousand copies ordered to be printed.

The temperance bill came up in order, and the question was again put on postponing the further consideration of the subject, until Friday next, and again lost.

The question was then on concurring in tne amendments of the committee.

The question was divided, and the Senate voted to strike out the 14th section, as follows:

Sec. 14. That in all judgments under the provisions of this act, against any person either for damages or fines, all the property in the house in which the liquor is sold or given awey, shall be liable to execution to satisfy such judgment; and if not enough personal property can be found, then real property on or in which such liquor is sold, shall be liable to execution to satisfy such judgment: Provided, That real estate not belonging to the offender shall not be thus subject to execution for the first offense either against the State or individuals.

Ayes.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Athon, Brugh, Cravens, Crawford, Davis, Dunn, Eddy, Goodman, Henton, Hester, Hickman, Hicks, Holloway, James, Kendall, Logan, Marshall, McCarty, Mickle, Niblack, Odell, Reid, Slack, Sleeth, Walker, Washburn. Winstandley, and Witherow—30.

Nays.—Berry, Dawson, Defrees, Dougherty, Hanna, Kinnard, Knowlton, Miller, Milliken, Spann, Teegarden, and Turman—12.

The question then was on inserting the following substitute:

Sec. 14. That in all cases under this act where judgment shall be rendered against any defendant, that he or she stand committed until the fine and costs be paid or replevied; if such fine and costs are not paid or replevied the defendant shall remain in prison until such imprisonment shall amount to said fine and costs at fifty cents per day, counting as nothing any fraction less than fifty cents; and upon all other judgments the personal property of the defenbant alone shall be liable to execution.

Mr. Millikin said he was sorry this section of the bill was stricken out, because he was fearful it was done for the purpose of defeating the objects of the bill. He voted against it for that reason. Many then pretended to be shocked with the idea of imprisonment for offences of this kind, and he was fearful there were those here who would make this a pretext for defeating the bill itself. But the section was stricken out, and the question was on filling the blank with a section substituting imprisonment, and it would be a test question, one which would decide the fate of the whole bill, and he would have the world see what disposition was made of this deeply interesting subject. Sixty thousand petitioners had demanded the decision of the Legislature against the inhuman liquor dealer, and they would see by the vote now about to be taken, so far as the Senate is concerned, whether this decision was for or against them. Mr. M. warned Senators, if they decided now against the temperance men of the State, that they would hear a voice in these Halls before many years which would be obeyed. No new political party was to be organized, but temperance men would compel the nomination of such men by each party as would carry out their principles here, or they would defeat the party refusing to nominate such men.

Mr. Spann replied to Mr. Milliken. He said that in his county many of these temperance petitions were signed by schools, including all the children as well as teachers. Many of them were signed by ladies. A third class of signers, consisting probably of voters, but many of even these names were signed by a single person, and in some instances one person's name was on the same petition several times. He was certain that at least two-thirds of the 60,000 persons signing these petitions wer not such as should govern legislative action, nor would he permit these instructions to govern his conduct as a Senator. He hoped the amendment would not be adopted.

Mr. Dunn thought the bill was an intemperate rather thau a temperance measure. It was calculated to create agitation and excitement, and would, therefore, do more harm than good. He had hoped that the temperance men would have been satisfied with moderate measures, but as this bill, which was one wholly of pains and penalties, was the only one they would be satisfied with, he should be constrained to vote against it.

Mr. Holloway defended the bill and especially the imprisonment amendment proposed by the committee. He went fully into the merits of the question. In regard to the caution to temperance men here, administered by certain Senators, he would say for himself he had no fears. He intended to discharge his duty to the State, and if he was certain it would be the last vote he ever should give, and he was the only one here to give it, it should nevertheless be given freely and fearlessly for the temperance cause. If it should wean every friend from him on earth, he would still give it. There were some legal objections to the provision just stricken out which he was willing to acknowledge, but he could see no good reason why the one now under consideration should not be adopted. It was right and proper, and ought to pass.

Before any vote was taken, the Senate, on motion of Mr. Spann, adjourned until Monday morning at 9 o'clock.

Monday February 9.

The Temperance Bill came up in order. The question was on inserting the imprisonment section reported by the committee.

Mr. Saffer made a speech—a long one, and a strong one—in favor of the temperance cause, and in support of the most stringent measures to sustain it.

Mr. Mickle moved to amend the amendment by striking out so much as relates to imprisonment for costs; carried—ayes 29, nays Messrs. Crawford, Dawson, Millikin, Odell, Saffer, and Teegarden—6.

Mr. Reid moved to amend the amendment further, by excepting women (who sell liquor) from imprisonment for fines, in case they are not paid; lost—ayes 17, nays 18.

Mr. Dunn moved to amend the amendment by providing that no liquor dealer should be imprisoned where he has not property enough to pay the fines assessed against him.

Mr. Berry moved to lay this amendment on the table; lost—ayes 16, nays 20.

Mr. Milliken opposed the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. Dunn favored it, and denounced the extreme measures proposed by the bill as fanaticism and the advocates of extremely stringent temperance measures as fanatics. He instanced some provisions of the Maine law as meeting his approbation.

Mr. Holloway replied to Mr. Dunn.

Mr. Milliken also replied to Mr. Dunn and spoke in opposition to the amendment proposed by Mr. Dunn. If Mr. Dunn favored the Maine law, the friends of temperance were willing to accept it instead of the bill under consideration.

Mr. Dunn replied that he did not favor the Maine law in detail, but only the provisions he mentioned.

Mr. Mickle moved to lay all the amendments to the bill on the table, and that the bill be read and voted on by sections, which was agreed to.

Mr. Mickle movod to strike out the second and third sections, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

It shall not be lawful, after the date aforesaid, for any person engaged in making or vending of intoxicating liquor to sell, barter, or give away intoxicating liquor, in any quantity, to a minor, or when said liquor is in whole or in part to be drank by a minor under the age of eighteen years, without the consent of the parent or guardian of such minor, nor to a person who is at the time in a state of intoxication, or who is in the habit of getting intoxicated, nor when said liquor is in whole or in part to be drank by a person who is at the time in a state of intoxication, or by a person who is in the habit of getting intoxicated. And any person or persons, by themselves or agents offending against the provisions of this section, shall, for the first offence, be fined not less than one nor more than five dollars, and for each subsequent offence the court or jury trying the cause shall add imprisonment; the first imprisonment shall not exceed forty-eight hours, and each subsequent imprisonment shall not be less than three nor more than thirty days.

Mr. Spann moved to amend the amendment by striking out all which relates to imprisonment.

Mr. Eddy moved to lay both amendments on the table. Carried—ayes 26, nays 12.

Mr. Eddy then moved a verbal amendment to the third section, which carried.

Mr. Hester moved to strike out all after the first section of the bill and insert another in lieu thereof, which purposes to repeal all license laws; requires the liquor dealer to give bond with security to the amount of Five Thousand Dollars for the payment of all damages arising from the sale of liquor to minors and habitual drunkards, to be assessed by a court or jury.

Mr. Hester spoke in favor of his amendment. He predicted that if the law asked for by the temperance men should be enacted, a revulsion would take place in public sentiment, and the next Legislature would be called upon to enact laws as extreme in the other direction.

Messrs. Milliken and Holloway opposed the amendment.

Mr. Spann being obliged to choose between the proposition of the Senator from Monroe and the bill before the Senate, chose the former. He thought it impolitic to restrain the manufacture and sale of liquor, because such restrictions were just so many restrictions upon the agricultural interests of the country. As this is a grain-growing State, he thought no laws should be passed to restrain in any degree the growth or sale of agricultural products.

Mr. Holloway moved to lay the substitute on the table. Lost—ayes 15, nays 22.

Mr. Holloway then moved to amend the substitute by providing that the person so fined shall stand committed until the fine is paid or replevied. Lost—ayes 18, nays 21.

Mr. Holloway moved to amend by providing that the usual implements of a tippling house, such as decanters, &c., shall be taken as evidence that defendant sells intoxicating liquors. Lost—ayes 14, nays 22.

Mr. Reid moved to amend the amendment by adding the following additional section:

Sec. —. That hereafter it shall not be lawful for any person or persons, by themselves or agents, to barter or sell any kind of intoxicating liquors whatever, in any quantity less than one quart at one time, or keep what is commonly called a tippling house, in which spirituous liquors are either sold, bartered, or given away, to be drunk in said house, out-house, garden, yard, or appurtenance thereto belonging; and if any person or persons shall violate any of the provisions of this section, every such person shall be fined for the first offense the sum of ten dollars, and for each and every subsequent violation thereof, in any sum not less ihan ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, to which may be added, in the discretion of the jury or court trying the same, imprisonment in the jail of the proper county not exceeding 30 days; lost, ayes 16, noes 25.

Mr. Milliken moved to amend by adding the following additional section:

Sec. —. That in all trials of cases for the violation of the second section of this act, it shall be sufficient in the absence of more direct testimony to prove that the accused keeps the usual implements of a tippling house, or a part of them, or that drunken persons are frequently seen in or about his or her house, or that the witness verily believes that the article drank in his presence was intoxicating liquor. But the defendant shall have the privilege of answering under oath or affirmation in all the cases, whether intoxicating liquor has been drank in or about his house or not, and the credibility thereof shall be taken into consideration by the court or jury trying the case. Lost—ayes 16, noes 25.

Mr. Holloway moved to amend by adding the following additional section:

Sec. 14. That in all judgments under the provisions of this act, against any person either for damages or fine, all the property in the house in which the liquor is sold or given away, shall be liable to execution to satisfy such judgment, and if not enough personal property can be found, then real property on or in which such liquor is sold shall be liable to execution to satisfy such judgment; Provided, That real estate not belonging to the offender shall not be thus subject to execution for the first offense either against the State or individuals. Lost.

Mr. Dougherty moved to amend by substituting an act repealing all laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors. Lost—ayes Messrs. Dougherty, Kinnard, Slack, and Washburn—4. Nays 35.

Mr. Eddy moved the previous question, which was seconded, and the question was on adopting the substitute offered by Mr. Hester, to the bill reported by the committee on temperance. The substitute contains substantially the provisions of what is known as the Wisconsin Law. The substitute was not adopted; Ayes 17, Nays 24.

The question was then on engrossing the bill of the committee (amended by striking out the second section and altering the phraseology of the third section) and lost—as follows:

Ayes.—Messrs. Crawford, Dawson, Eddy, Holloway, Marshall, McCarty, Mickle, Millikin, Odell, Reid, Saffer, Teegarden, Turman and Washburn—14.

Nays.—Messrs. Alexander, Athon, Allen, Berry, Brugh, Cravens, Davis, Defrees, Dougherty, Dunn, Goodman, Hanna, Henton, Hester, Hickman, Hicks, James, Kendall, Kinnard, Miller, Niblack, Slack, Sleeth, Spann, Walker and Witherow—26.

Absent.—Messrs. Winstanly, Hunt, Delevan, Woods, Knowlton, Logan, Emerson, Hatfield, Secrest, and Longshore—10.

Thus has failed our temperance bill. Of our friends we will say, they did everything that men could do to accomplish the aim of temperance men—of our enemies we will also say, they left no stone unturned to accomplish its defeat. Let the people mark them.

The course of no man has so much surprised us as that of Hon. Geo. G. Dunn of Lawrence. A professed temperance man—a member of the Temperance Convention, and yet he has sought every opportunity to defeat the bill—first advocating imprisonment and then spurning it and offering various amendments as riders to kill the bill, he at last, after favoring the Maine law, votes against one not half as severe. We leave him to his constituents. Mr. Spann of Jennings and Bartholomew, has also been a deadly enemy of the bill. We ask his district to look at his recorded vote.

We must also confess our surprise at the vote of Mr. Witherow of Hendricks.

We have much more to say on this subject at another time.

A Petition

On Wednesday, Jan. 21, Hon. Horace E. Smith presented to the Massachusetts Legislature a petition bearing the names of one hundred and thirty-three thousand five hundred and twelve persons, praying that body to enact in that State a law similar to the far-famed liquor law of Maine. The memorial from Lowell, containing fourteen thousand names, was stolen. Had this been presented with the others it would have increased the names to nearly one hundred and fifty thousand. This "Monster" being placed in the open hall and in front of the Speaker's chair, Mr. Smith, who was a member of the House, addressed the Speaker as follows:

Mr. Speaker:—Leave has been asked and granted to introduce a petition—may I not say the petition—of a large portion of the inhabitants of the State, and it seems proper to make at least a brief statement of the character of the petitioners, and the nature of their prayer. It will be seen at a glance that the petition is one of no ordinary magnitude. I believe that in point of numbers it has never been equalled in this country. It enrols the names of more than 130,000 of the best citizens and inhabitants of the commonwealth, among whom more than 57,000 are known to be legal voters. And it is believed, also, that many more of the signers are of this nature, though owing to various circumstances that fact is not stated. Standing at the head of all these names is the honor of one of George N. Briggs, and following his are those representing all professions, all trades in the commonwealth. Woman also, is represented, and rightly too, for she has peculiar claims to the sympathy and protection of the Legislature, as being the subject of laws in whose enactment she has no voice—but more as the peculiar subject of the dire evils which the traffic in intoxicating drinks has brought upon community. It is right, therefore, that her voice should be heard.

The petitioners ask for no class legislation, no act of incorporation, no protection for commerce, agriculture or manufactures, but for protection to man, to religion, to our halls of learning, our temples of legislation, our courts of justice, and above all, to our domestic altars. They believe that the traffic in ardent spirits has peopled our houses of correction, our jails, our lunatic asylums, our grave yards, with uncounted numbers of premature victims. They further believe that the Legislature has the power to remedy the evil, and having that power, it ought to exercise it. The boon they ask is no selfish one, and this petition of theirs is the result of the pulsation of the great heart of the commonwealth. And, sir, I trust I may be permitted to express the hope that their prayer will find a response here. I present, Mr. Speaker, the petition of George N. Briggs, and 133,512 others, for a law prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors. And also these several other petitions of the male and female teachers of the Wesleyan Academy in Wilbraham; of the teachers and pupils of Amherst Academy; of the officers and students of Amherst college; of the town officers of North Bridgwater, and the officers of the Normal school there; of 30 prisoners of the Norfolk county jail; of 28 prisoners in the house of correction at Dedham—all for the same object. And I move their reference to a joint special committee.

The motion was unanimously adopted, and the joint special committee appointed.

The "Mammoth Petition" was escorted by twelve of the city police, who, as teetotallers and members of the Temple of Honor, volunteered their services on the occasion. It was rolled on an axis, so suspended on a wooden frame, as to rotate freely, and was about three feet in diameter. Of the 133,512 names attached to the petition 57,067 were those of legal voters, being very nearly a majority of all the legal voters of the whole commonwealth, although about one-third of the towns in the State had not sent in their returns.

It was taken to the State house in a procession of over five thousand persons, headed by the large "Jenny Lind" sleigh, drawn by four spirited steeds, and bearing the petition, and the presentation committee, with a banner waving aloft, announcing in large capitals—

"THE VOICE OF MASSACHUSETTS—
130,000 PETITIONERS FOR
THE MAINE LAW."

Then followed Bond's Cornet Band, whose sweet music was harsh discord to the rum-sellers' ears, the "Central Executive Board," Grand Division Sons of Temperance, subordinate Divisions, of which Shakspeare Division of Boston bore off the palm in regalia, banners, and numbers—other temperance organizations—members of the Mass Convention, and other citizens, making in all a long and solid column, four a-breast, of about 5,000 petitioners, that made the spirit mongers, as it moved along in front of their stores, feel, and look much more sober and blue than their "liquid fires" were in the habit of making their customers and victims.

We have no doubt that before that Legislature adjourns "The Maine Law" will be placed upon the statute books of the "Old Bay State."

For the Temperance Chart.

Dear Sir:—Though deaths and funerals under circumstances like unto the one set forth in the annexed lines are every-day occurrences, yet they are passed by, perhaps on account of their frequency, almost unnoticed, I thought that perhaps these lines might meet the eye of some one running a similar course to the one whose death suggested them to me, and although of little force, might be the means of his rescue. If so, I and you would have our reward—I for writing, and you for publishing them. Drunkenness is not peculiarly the vice of the low and illiterate; some of the brightest, as you are aware, are and have been the worst of topers. The person spoken of here, was once a respectable man, enjoying the pleasures of a home of plenty and cheerfulness, made so by his prosperity in business and the society of an intelligent wife and daughter. He unwisely contracted the habit of taking a social glass, which grew upon him as it does on others, in such a degree that he became a confirmed drunkard—squandered his property in gambling and other vices. His wife being a delicate woman, was unable to bear up against such heavy sorrows, and died soon after his fall. He, too, is now dead—he died the death of a debauchee. His funeral was scantily attended, for even those who worked his ruin—robbed him of his fortune, perhaps his soul—at least his earthly happiness—refused to follow him to the grave, and only mourned him as a lost customer. Those who once respected him had ceased to do so—not without cause. Who then could imagine the feelings of that daughter, who was his only mourner—yes she mourned, for although a drunkard yet he was a Father, and once a kind and indulgent one—She also is now disregarded by all who once respected her, as is the custom in this flinty world. She is poor and disgraced. What a pity that the consequences of other's errors will some times fall upon the child.

This was the work of strong drink assisted by the vender. Very truly yours,

FRED.

PLEASANT VIEW, Jan. 22, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—As yet nothing has appeared in your most excellent paper concerning our Division. But suffice it to say we are not idle. The good cause of temperance is still progressing with a steady course among us.

Our Division has been organized a little over three years, during which time we have seen some dark hours; but with Love, Purity and Fidelity as our motto, we have increased steadily, in spite of all opposition, and now Pleasant View Division, No. 187, has a fine, comfortable hall, that is weekly sealing the death warrant of the liquor dealer in our midst. We still have some opposition from a few of the "baser sort," yet there is scarcely a meeting passes without an initiation. In our Division, as in some others, we have a few drones whose faith seems but little larger than a grain of mustard seed, still we hope they will finally be saved, even "though as by fire."

The most of the members of our Division are temperance men of the first character and integrity, and faithful in the cause, not fearing their popularity.

With this encouragement, we are confident of winning the day.

There is one unfortunate being who still lifts his hydra head among us, thinking it more honorable to sell whisky and make drunkards, paupers and criminals than to steal sheep and live on the mutton.

Recently a Union of the Daughters of Temperance has been organized in our town, which promises to effect even more than we have done, and with whose assistance we expect to send the liquor traffic back to the devil, from whom it emanated, with the seal of Temperance on it, never to be broken.

This praiseworthy organization now numbers some twenty members of intelligent, efficient and persevering ladies, who are now doing a noble work among us. This is cheering to us, as the final triumph of temperance in Indiana depends, in a great measure for its success, upon the influence and labors of the female portion of community.

Yours, in L., P. and F., V. R. S.

ECONOMY, Wayne County, Ind.,
January 25th, 1852.

Dear Bro. Woodward:—A word or two from this part of the field, may not be uninteresting. The war rages terribly, but our bright and glorious star is bearing us on to certain victory. Never before has our Division been in so healthy and prosperous a condition as at present. We have had initiations weekly, for a month past; last night we initiated two and have four, for the next evening. Be it known that we are not a new division,—that our rapid increase and prosperity at this time, is not owing to the novelty of the thing, by any means, but rather to sober second thought and calm deliberation. These are the men we want, sir, to help us guide our staunch and well-built vessel, through the present contest.

Yours, in bonds of fraternal feeling,

W. W. GOOD, R. S.

RUSSELVILLE, Feb. 19, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD.—I have visited all the Divisions in my district, and find them, with one exception, in a prosperous condition. There have been thirty six additions to them during the past quarter, and we have dedicated two new halls. The Order is doing great good in this section, and will tell in after days.

At a meeting of the P. W. P.s, and W. P.s of my district, the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves from this hence forth, not to support any person or persons, that may become a condidate before the people for office, from the Governor down to a representative in our State Legislature, who will not openly pledge themselves to give their aid and support to carrying out the principles of temperance reform in this State.

By this we mean they must be decidedly in favor of such measures as will secure the passage of such temperance laws as the people desire on the subject of temperance, and have recommended each Subordinate Division in said district to pass said resolution. Russellville Division has passed it, and I feel assured in my mind, that all the Divisions in the District will fully concur in said resolution, as above set forth.

If you think the above worthy of publishing in the Chart, please to publish it.

Yours in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,

JACOB DURHAM, D. G. W. P.

For the Temperance Chart.

MILROY, Ind., Feb. 4, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD—DEAR SIR:—For the encouragement of Sons of Temperance every where I am induced to give you a short account of a glorious reformation which has lately been effected in our village.

With a population of some 250 bodies, (I hardly think we have that many souls,) Milroy, by means of the "great destroyer," had for the last two or three years, gained a reputation abroad, second to no other town of like size in the State of Indiana, for wickedness and drinking. It was, to say the least of it, decidedly "hard," and "King Alcohol" had gained an ascendancy over many of our citizens truly alarming. Their condition was by many considered almost hopeless. But thanks to the beautiful and glorious organization of the Sons of Temperance, we have now a different state of things. The sun of "better days" has arisen upon us, and already dispelled and driven back the black fogof intemperance.

Some four years ago a small Division was organized here under unfavorable auspices. It struggled on for about a year through many difficulties, but at last was compelled to surrender its charter, and our devoted village relapsed into a condition worse than at first. A prejudice against the order among our best citizens too, arose so deep and strong that the best friends of Temperance thought it folly to undertake to overcome. But, as Byron says, "when things are at their worst they sometimes mend," and so it has been with us—the evil has worked its own cure.

Through the exertions of those whole-souled, devoted friends of temperance, E. H. M. Berry, Eld. R. B. Roberts, and others, a new charter was obtained, and on the 15th of January we commenced operations with fifteen members. In a very few days all the liquor sellers in town (who, unlike most of that tribe, happened to have souls,) were initiated into the blessed privilege of "sons." The night following, the whiskey barrels with their contents mysteriously disappeared. Some think that the devil in a fit of despair snatched up his darling instrument for the destruction of souls and spirited it away!! However, be that as it may, we have in our Division at this writing over fifty enthusiastic members, with an absolute certainty of increasing the number to eighty within the next three or four weeks. All prejudice against the Order is gone. Every man in our midst who really loves his fellow man, if he does not join us, bids us "God speed," and tries with all his might to influence the dram drinker to join us. They only wait to be convinced that they can do more good by coming into the Division than by staying out, in order to do so. This is indeed a glorious victory—one that will weigh well in our favor in that great day, fixed for the final rendering and canceling of our accounts.

We have the enemy under, and with God's good help we intend to keep him under; and instead of having our little village a hissing and a by-word for wickedness, we intend that it shall be a pattern of sobriety and morality.

And here I will say to old Father Havens, should this meet his eye, that if he ever visits our town again, he need have no fear that his buggy wheels will be carried off.

Yours in love, purity, and fidelity,

N. TOMPKINS, M. D.

LEXINGTON, Scott co. Feb. 4, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD—Temperance is on the advance in this county. Our Division is doing a good work in the glorious cause. Liquor men are afraid, and begin to tremble for fear their strong prop may be knocked from under, and they thrown out to buffet with the temperance army, without the strong arm of the law to protect them. God speed the time.

Bro. Woodward, keep us posted up with our law makers, and mark the man that opposes a good temperance law, so that we may remember him hereafter.

Yours in L. P. & F., J. H. P.

Of the famous band of patriots who destroyed the tea in Boston Harbor, on the memorable 10th of December, 1773, seventy-nine years ago, one is still living. When the present century dawned, he had almost reached the goal of three score years and ten! And now, at the age of one hundred and fifteen years, David Kinnison, of Chicago, Illinois, holds the eminent position of the last survivor of the Boston Tea Party!

THE FINALE OF A DRUNKARD'S CAREER.

BY FRED.

See yonder hearse proceeding on its dreary way,
Conveying the remains of one whose loss seems little felt
Save but by one, in whom sorrow has its sway—
Whose heart does this decease occasion thus to melt?
It is an orphan girl now left alone to buffit with the world
By that Parent's folly in the indulgence of intoxicating drink
Shortened his days, died wretched, and on that poor daughter hurled
The consequences of his appetite, and left her on the brink
Of a Drunkard Father's grave, weeping the tears of solitary grief,
Her last friend by nature's ties now gone, left without even a Father's blessing;
Poor in purse and spirit, to her it seems, all that could give relief
To the troubled Soul on earth are with that parent among the missing.
Death years since had kindly called her angel mother away—
She was spared this scene of mortality and distress,
And was, perhaps, interceding at the throne on that day
With prayers to her Lord the poor Drunkard's soul to bless.
Inebriate he was called away a drunkard to meet his God,
Without athought of Hell or Heaven, future punishment or bliss
Through the troubled stream of life he giddily did ford;
Mark, I tell thee thy end must ever be like this.
Then wilt thou not put down the fatal glass and think?
Think, and surely if thou art sane, thou wilt at once amend
And not bring endless wo upon thyself or thine, or thus to sink
Drink by drink deeper into degradation regardless of thy end.

Indianapolis, Jan. 26, 1852.

ANOTHER VICTIM.—New Orleans has again been the scene of another atrocious and bloody murder, committed under the maddening influence of strong drink. The parties were named Wm Fagan, a tailor, and Frederick Donovan, a steamboat hand. It seems that both were in the habit of sleeping in the house, a place of low resort. A few nights at a late hour, in a Fagan went to his home demanded admittance, of intoxication, and tired to bed, but on hearing van had regot up and let him in. As soon as call, he admittance, he commenced to abuse ned van in a most hostile and violent manner challenging him to fight. Donovan was not disposed to quarrel, and tried to avoid a difficulty. He was, however, at length provoked, and finally gave Fagan a severe beating. Smarting with pain, and excited by liquor, Fagan went in search of a weapon, and returning with a long knife fastened to a stick, he pierced Donovan to the heart, as he lay in his bed. The unfortunate man died almost instantaneously. How many more instances of this kind will we have to record, inflicted by accursed drink? "Is there no balm in Gilead—no physician there?"—Crystal Fount.

FATAL AFFAIR.—We understatd that a fight came off Tuesday night a mile or two north of Kane, in Greece Co. Ill., between two men named Robt. Batey and Z. Mays, which resulted in the death of the latter.—It seems there was an old grudge existing between them, and several fights had before taken place, in which Mays always proved the victor. Tuesday they met at a doggery known as Widow Green's and commenced quarreling. Finally, they went out in the road to have a fight, when Batey struck May a heavy blow, and felled him to the ground. He lay a moment or two, and the bystanders told Batey he was dead, when he swore that "he was glad of it, and wished he had struck harder." May was picked up and found to be insensible. He was carried into the doggery, and died in a few minutes.

Batey was taken before a magistrate for examination, and while in the office, pretended to be sick. He went to the door, and somehow managed to escape, and at last accounts had not been captured.

As usual, rum had a hand in the business. May was thoroughly intoxicated at the time, and Batey had been drinking pretty freely.

Another temperance lecture!—Prairie State.

THE GOVERNOR'S OPINION.—We understand that Gov. Hubbard, who at the time of the passage of the Maine temperance law in June last entertained some doubts whether it was not a step in advance of public opinion, is now satisfied that the people of the State will sustain and execute the law, and freely expresses his opinion in conversation in favor of its continuance, and against repeal. He does not wish to see the law in any way strained in its execution, or extended by construction, but confined within its fair and legitimate meaning and intention. He thinks some modifications might be made, but that none should be allowed which would impair its efficiency. From what we have heard from gentlemen who have recently conversed with him on the subject, we feel authorized to regard him as a decided friend of the law, and in favor of its being judiciously enforced.—Fountain and Jour.

LADIES WHO SMOKE.—There is a beautiful story told of a pious old Quaker lady, who was much addicted to smoking tobacco. She had indulged herself in this habit until it increased so much upon her, that she not only smoked her pipe a large portion of the day, but frequently sat up in bed for this purpose at night. After one of these nocturnal entertainments, she fell asleep, and dreamed that she died, and approached heaven. Meeting an angel she asked him if her name was written in the Book of Life. He disappeared, but replied, upon returning, that he could not find it.

'Oh,' said she, 'do look again it must be there.'

He examined, again, but returned with a sorrowful face saying, "'tis not there!'

'Oh,' said she in agony, 'it must be there, I have the assurauce it is there! Do look again!'

The angel was moved to tears by her entreaties, and again left her to renew his search. After a long absence he came back his face radiant with joy and exclaimed:

'We have found it, but it was so clouded with tobacco smoke that we could hardly see it.'

'The woman upon waking immediately threw her pipe away and never indulged in smoking again.

THE STRIPED PIG UNDER A NEW NAME. A letter from a traveler through Vermont, states that while he was sitting in a village tavern, another traveler came in, and stepping up to the place where the bar once was, intimated that he should like a glass of brandy. "Don't keep it," was the gruff reply. The traveler was off in quick time. Presently an old farmer came in, and blustering up to the landlord, when the following dialogue ensued: Farmer—"Good mornin', Cap'n B." Landlord—"Good mornin' Squire." Farmer—"How is your family this mornin'?" Landlord—"Pretty smart, thank'ee." Farmer—"Is the baby well?" Landlord—"O, yes, very. Would you like to see it?" Farmer—"Well, I don't care if I do." Landlord—"Walk into the kitchen, Squire. Mrs. B. will be glad to see you." So out they go, says the traveler, and returned after a very short visit to "the baby," who seems to have kissed them rather roughly, judging by the manner in which they licked their chops.—Lowell Courier.

DEATH FROM COLD WATER!—A black man a hand Island, drank a pint of brandy on state of sixteen hours he remained in a called for water. On being roused, he died. The coroner drinking freely, soon that the proximate jury found a verdict cold water. his death was

NORTH CAROLINA.—One hundred and thirteen new Divisions have been added to the Order of the Sons of Temperance in North Carolina, in the year ending last month; so says the report of the Grand Scribe. At the celebration at Raleigh on the 30th, one thousand persons, ladies and gentlemen, attending the evening festival.

A fire occurred while we were in Fulton. A drunkery was totally burned, and considerable rum left carelessly to run out upon the ice. What a loss! The proprietor was once a Son of Temperance—and an honored citizen, but at the time of the fire, the proprietor of one of the lowest drunkeries in the place. Judas Iscariots will stoop the lowest.—Cayuga Chief.

EVILS OF THE TRAFFIC.—There were 505 arests in Philadelphia last week, of which 405 were for drunken and disorderly conduct, 24 for destitution and vagrancy—no doubt occasioned by the same; 39 for larceny. No doubt a majority of these thieves were made such, either directly or indirectly by the same prolific parent crime. What forbearing people those of Philadelphia must be to suffer by, and pay for all this crime and mischief, without trying to get rid of it. It looks like encouraging and approving it.

An intoxicated man fell helpless in North Pearl Street, late on Thursday night, completely overcome by his deep potations. The cold was intense, and he would inevitably have perished in a few minutes, had not a chance passer-by discovered him and handed him over to the night police. He was roused with great difficulty, having fallen into a slumber that would have known no waking this side eternity, but for his fortunate rescue.

Less than a score of years ago, this debased man was a thrifty citizen, fortunate in his domestic relations and all his business pursuits, and basking in the sunshine of prosperity, with a bright prospect for the future shining in his path. Now he is a beggar and a sot, self-exiled from his happy home, degraded almost to the level of the brute, ruined beyond redemption, lost beyond reclaim.—State Register.

THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.

Published in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and devoted to the Interests of the Order of the Temple of Honor.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

THIS Popular Magazine, having met with the hearty approval of the Temple Order, wherever it circulated during its first year, will commence its Second Volume on the first of September, 1851. It will as heretofore be issued on the first of every month, each number containing

THIRTY TWO PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER,

in pamphlet form, convenient for binding—making at the end of the year a volume of three hundred and eighty-four pages—at the low price of

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The established character of this Magazine—its approval and recommendation by National, Grand, and Subordinate Temples—the liberal terms on which it is published, placing it within the reach of every member of the Order—and the will render it a desirable companion for every Templar who wishes to supply his family with good temperance reading, and keep himself posted in the doings and progress of the Order of which he is a member. This Magazine is the first and ONLY publication ever devoted particularly to the Temple Order, and is not confined to any locality, but is designed to be the Organ of the whole Order. This gives it a peculiar claim on the Fraternity for encouragement and support.

While it aims to be the expositor of the Temple Order, it will give an impartial and faithful history of all important temperance movements, whether by individual or associated action, or legislative enactments and thus form a valuable journal for every friend of temperance and morality.

The services of several able writers are already secured for its pages; and, as the subscription list increases, more will be added. No labor or expense, consistent with our means, will be spared to make it just what the temperance portion of community desire: a good family Magazine not surpassed by any in the country.

Poetry.

From the Olive Branch.

AN APPEAL TO THE FRIENDS OF TEMPERANCE.

Friends of Temperance—ye are sleeping,
Sleeping while the foe is here;
Rouse ye up and forth to battle,
Be your motto—Persevere.

Then, as men, be up and doing—
Press ye onward in the strife;
Every effort howe're feeble,
Saves perhaps a brother's life.

On each fertile hill and valley,
On the mountain and the plain,
Ye can trace the fell destroyer—
Ye can count his victims slain.

Genius bright—hath gave him homage,
Heroes brave—have bowed the knee,
Wealth—has brought her golden tribute,
Have ye grown more wise than they?

Think ye now that men are stronger
Than they were in olden time?
Have ye not yet youth and manhood,
Falling round you in their prime?

Then, oh! how can ye be sleeping,
While ye have the power to save;
Many a wretched, fallen brother,
From the loathsome drunkard's grave.

Think the talent God hath given
Ne'er will be required of you?
Oh! forget not—you should bring it
Back to Him with interest too.

"Fold it not within a napkin,"
Lest ye should its value dim—
But whene'er a fallen brother
Claims your aid—then lend it him.

For perchance it may redeem him
From a life of sin and shame,
To return once more to virtue,
And assist ye to reclaim.

Others who like him have fallen,
While they drained the flowing bowl,
And are madly rushing onward,
Drinking death unto the soul.

Then arouse ye forth to action—
To humanity be true;
God will give you strength to conquer,
If ye but your duty do.

Then for you shall grateful prayers,
From the heart of woman flow—
And the lisping voice of childhood,
Bless your path where'er you go.

Then awake and sleep no longer—
Sleep not—for the foe is here,
Arouse ye up and forth to battle,
Onward—Onward—Persevere.

Miscellaneous.

"The Wife for Me."

Horace Hastings was a sober, sensible, enterprising bachelor, of some seven and twenty years, who having obtained an excellent reputation by his industry and integrity, and having made himself useful to the mercantile firm in Boston, with whom he had served an apprenticeship, was at length invited to a partnership in the concern. For sometime he had been encouraged to anticipate this elevation, and he soberly and energetically entered upon the new duties of his position. When business crowded, he had but little leisure to mourn over his celibate condition, but when the hurrying season was over, and hours each day hung heavy upon his hands, he could not help thinking how delightful it would be, had he but a house and a gentle wife of his own. Pecuniary circumstances now warranted such luxuries, and he resolved to marry when he could find a lady "just suited to his mind."

Near a country village in Maine, not a thousand miles from Bangor, lived an old friend of his father, and being on a collecting tour in that region during the autumn months, he determined to accept an oft-repented invitation to spend a few days with the old gentleman, and sent a note announcing his coming.

At the appointed time he reached the residence of his old friend, and found that the family were prepared and pleased to welcome him as a guest. In the parlor were two young ladies, well dressed and quite handsome. He was duly introduced to Misses Jane and Charlotte, and found them accomplished and sensible young ladies.—Being just now very susceptible to the tender passion, he was easily pleased, and exerted his powers to render himself agreeable to the flattered maidens. He succeeded of course. Sensible men of his age and prospect, always do, when thy try. And as his eye wandered in conversation from one handsome intelligent face to another, he caught himself several times mentally inquiring, "Which would make the better wife?"

The mother, and a neat looking maid, were seen at intervals passing from the kitchen preparing the supper. The girl who set out the table and spread the white stainless cloth, and arranged the plates, seemed to do it so gracefully and quietly as if she had made such duties a study as a science, won a passing glance of admiration as a very neat and pretty servant—a model of a "help." Altogether he thought it was a charming family. When they sat at the cheerful supper, and he tasted the light home made bread, and the sweet butter, and the thinly sliced, home cured beef, the hot, well flavored tea, the excellent and good taste manifested in the whole ordering at home, delighted him even if it was only for a few days.

After the supper was over, and the table was cleared, a third young lady, very neatly dressed, entered the room, and was formally introduced to him as one of the sisters, Miss Sarah. He was not a little surprised to find that the neat servant girl whose handy work had won his admiration, was one of the sisters. He found her sprightly, cheerful, as accomplished, and he thought a little more graceful, than Jane, who was the elder or Charlotte, who was younger than herself.—He thought a little more meanly of himself for having taken her to be a hired girl in the family, but not a whit more meanly of her for having revealed herself in that capacity. And his perplexity was somewhat increased as he sat down on his bed side in the chamber to which he was shown by his host and said to himself "Which of the three?"

In the morning, after a night's sound sleep—for he was not sufficiently in love to keep him awake—he entered the breakfast room, and was joined by the two young ladies, who had first welcomed him. Sarah was not yet visible, but when they sat down at the table, and Jane had poured out the coffee, Sarah came smiling in behind a clean white apron, and with a steaming pile of hot buckwheat cakes in her hand which from the hue of her cheeks she had just been baking. If there was a blush on her cheeks, any eye might see it was forced there by the fire, and not by any sense of degragation, on account of the office she so gracefully filled.—She greeted the guest with a welcome smile deposited her load of edibles, and returned to the kitchen, whence she tripped again in few minutes with another plate of cakes, most beautifully baked, by her own skill.—Horace eat a large quantity of them, more than enough merely to satisfy hunger, because of the beautiful little hands that had made them. And then he wandered over the farm with the old man, and prated of horses and cows and crops, as though he knew something about them as well as broadcloths and calicoes. At dinner time, Jane and Charlotte were in the parlor waiting for him, and Sarah, as usual, was bustling about the kitchen. "I do wish," said he, sotto voice, "that one of those girls would take Sarah's place in the kitchen a little while, that I might find out some of their housekeeping qualities, and that I might have a little more chat with her."

But he waited for such a chance in vain, though he found some opportunities of conversation, and discovered all he wished to know just then, about her mental qualifications and acquirements, and at the close of the fourth day, just before he got into bed, he slapped the white counterpane emphatically and said to it—as there was nobody in the room, I suppose he must have spoken to the counterpane or bed post—'She's the wife for me.'

The next day was the outer limit of his visit, and as he stood at the window after breakfast, he saw Sarah, with that witching white apron, trip out into the orchard to shake down some apples—for it was baking day and pies were to be made. Horace strolled out after her, and shook the apple tree, and helped pick up the apples, and carried the basket as they returned slowly, very slowly, to the house. What it was he whispered in her ear she never told, but seemed not displeased, but evidently surprised and a little frightened.

A year after Horace was at the house of his old friend again and this time Sarah was not in the kitchen so much. There were great preparations for a wedding going forward, in a few days Sarah became Mrs. Horace Hastings—and in a splendid Boston mansion she fully justifies the wisdom of her dear husband's choice by being to him a most excellent wife and superlative housekeeper.

Man Frozen.—We learn that a man by the name of Simonsen was frozen to death, in the vicinity of Edwardsport, a few days ago. He is said to be a man of industrious, honest habits, but was unfortunately addicted to the vice of intemperance occasionally. On the day of his death he became intoxicated, and in attempting to return home, mistook the way, and was frozen.—Vin. Gazette.

The Drunkard's Wife.

BY E. BURRITT, THE LEARNED BLACKSMITH.

There are new developments of human character, which, like the distant stars, are yet to visit the eye of man and operate upon human society. Ever since the image of the Godhead was first sketched in Eden, its great Author and angels have been painting upon it; men have tried their hands upon it; influences like the incessant breath of Heaven, have left each its line upon the canvass; still the finishing stroke of the pencil will not be accomplished until the last lingering survivor of "the wreck of matter and the crush of words" "is changed in the twinkling of an eye."

The hemisphere of the present age is studded all over with such pearls "and patines of bright gold," as never shone before in the heaven of the human soul. In these latter days the waves of time have washed up from depths that angels never fathomed, "gems of purer light serene" then were ever worn before in the crown of man. We are now but half way advanced in a new cycle of human society. The race is but just emerging from the long-reaching shadows of an iron age, and coming out into the starlight and sunlight of new influences. If, as we are assured, scores of new stars have taken rank with the heavenly hosts, during the last two centuries, stars brighter than they, have in the same period, kindled up new lights in the moral firmament Among these new stars, one a little lower than that of Bethleham, has just appeared above the horizon. It is the star of woman's influence! Influential woman is a being of scarcely two centuries; up that period, and almost hitherto, her influences have fallen upon human character and society, like the feeble rays of a rising winter's sun upon polar fields of ice. But her sun is reaching upward. There is a glorious meridian to which she shall as to-morrow's sun will reach his in our natural heavers. What man will be when she shall smile on him then and thence, we are unable to divine; but we can found an anticipation from the inflences of her drawing rays. Her morning light has gilded the visions of human hope, and silvered over the night shadows of human sorrow. There has been no depth of human misery beyond the reach of her ameliorating influences, nor any height of human happiness which she has not raised still higher. Whoever has touched at either of these extremities, or at any points, could attest that "neither height nor depth, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present or to come," could divert or vitiate the accents and anodynes of her love. Whether we trace the lineaments of her character in the mild twilight of her morning sun, or in the living beams of her risen day, we find that she has touched human society like an angel. It would be irreverent to her worth to say, in what walks of life she has walked most like an angel of light and love; in what vicissitudes, in what joys or sorrows, in what situations or circumstances, she has most signally discharged the heavenly ministrations of her mission; what ordeals have best brought out the radiance of her hidden jewels; what fruitions of earthly bliss, or furnaces of affliction, have best declared the fineness of her gold. Still, is a scene which has escaped the "vulture's eye," and almost every other eye, where she has cast forth her costliest pearls, and shown such qualities of her native character as almost merit our admiration. This scene has been allotted to the drunkard's wife. How she has filled this most desperate outpost of humanity, will be revealed when the secrets of human life shall be disclosed "to more worlds than this." When the history of hovels, and of murky garrets shall be given in, when the career of the enslaved inebriate shall be told, from the first to the lowest degree of his degredation—there will be a memorial made of woman, worthy of being told and heard in heaven. From the first moment she gave up her young and hoping heart, and all its treasures into the hands of him she loved, to the luckless hour when the charmer wine, fastened around the loved one, all the serpent spells of its sorcery—down through the crushing of her young born hopes—through years of estrangement and strange insanity—when harsh unkindness bit at her heart-strings with an adder's tooth—thence down through each successive depth of misery and disgrace, until she bent over the drunkard's grave. Through all these scenes, a halo or divinity has gathered around her, and stirred her to angel deeds of love. When the maddened victim tried to cut himself adrift from the sympathy and society of God and man, she has clung to him and held him to her heart with hooks of steel. And when he was cast out, all defiled with his leprous pollution—when he was reduced to such a thing as the beasts of the field would bellow at—there was one who still kept him throned in her heart of hearts: who could say to the fallen, drivelling creatures, "Although you are nothing to the world, you are all the world to me." When that awful insanity of the drunkard set in upon him, with all its fiendish shapes of torture; while he lay writhing beneath the scorpion stings of the fiery phantosies and furies of delirium trement—there was a woman by his side, endowed with all the attributes of lovelines. There was her tearful love beaming eye, that never dimmed but with tears when the black spirits were around him.

There she stood alone, and in lone hours of night, to watch his breathings, with her heart braced up with the omnipotence of her love. No! brute as he was, not a tie which her young heart had thrown around him in his bright days, had ever given way, but had grown stronger as he approached the nadir of his degradation. And if he sank into that dark, hopeless grave, she enswathed him in her broken heart and laid it in his coffin; or if some mighty angel's voice or arm brought him from the grave of drunkenness the deepest that was ever dug for man, he came forth, Lazarus-like, bound fast and for ever in the cerements of her deathless affection.

Such is her sceptre; such are the cords which she throws around the wayward and wandering, and leads him back to virtue and to heaven, saying as she gives him in: "Here am I, and he whom thou gávest me."

Letter from Ethan Spike.

Hornby, the 30th of October.

Mister Editor:—I calkilate that you an' Miss Partinton has been all of a pucker to have that 'ere jennyology of the housen of Spike and Partinton finished. S'pose you thought it was rather onharnsum to break right off in the middle of a story, an' allow an interval of so many months to roll clean away into the inscrewtable futer. Wal, I allow it does look rayther ragged agin me, that is, afore you have heern the excuse.

* * * * * * *

You've heern tell of the Maine licker law. Wal, don't you think, we never knowd the gineral court had apinted any statoote for more'n tew months arterwards, an' every body had got jes when he was a mindter. And dun it tew with a conshuntz void of offence, cos he thought 'twas legal. Bime by, however, we got a copy of the Argus, with the law intew it. Tell you what, you'd better b'lieve it made a stir.

When anything anyways aout of common course happens anywheres the fust thing we does in Hornby is to call a taown meetin'. I s'pose fust and last, we've had more taown meetins than any other place in the state. So when I fust heern tell of this 'ere law, bein' taown clerk, I called a meetin at onct.

The meetin' met, an' organized by callin' Deacon Peltiah Peabody to the cheer, an' appinting Eld Josh Seckerterry. The Deacon gin the Elder the Argus, to read the new law to the meetin', an' at it the Elder went in reglar camp-meetin' tone. But somehaow or 'nother it didn't seem to be at all to the pint, an' at last the cheer sang out to hold on. Cum ter look, ef the elder hadn't got in the wrong place, an' had bin and gin us abeout tew collums of wonderful cures done by Rooshy-sarve! Haowsever, the Deacon got him on to the track arter a while, an' he red the law. Then the Deacon riz, and said—

"This here statoote," says he, "is, as I understand it, a sort of a compermise of the Constitooshun," says he. "Naow, feller siuzens, fust and foremost, it'ill he aour dewty to find out what is meant by the statoote aforesaid, by this tarm 'intostercating lickers,'" says the Deacon, says he. "And I perpose, "continered the cheer, "that some one that's used to the bizness be selected to stand trial of the different kinds of lickers." That is," said the Deacon, "somebody shall drink some of all, an' that which gets him tight is, of course, pyson, accordin' to the meanin' an' intent of the statoote. Naow, will any body cum forrerd, and sarve the cause?"

"Who pays the expense of the licker for the trial?" asked Elder Josh.

"The gineral court, of course," said the cheer.

At this, more'n a dozen sprung up to offer their sarvices, but the cheer decided that Insine Ephe Libbey, of the Faylanks, spoke fust.

Wal, we all ajerned over to the tavern to put the Insine threw. Neaw-rum was tried on fust, but though Ephe took it in egg nog, milk punch, as black strap, an' in a state of nater, without no water, it didn't seem to start him a mite. Gin and syder was next put on pretty thick, an' the Insine begun to wink like a toad under a tetter vine; he hollered tew, and I felt sartin that he'd abaout gin aout. But at the first swoller of whisky he seemed to cum right raound agin, jest as good as when he set aout. Wal, here was a fix. We'd gone through the whole cattylog of lickers, an' still the subject didn't seem to be in more'n a fair ordinashun or gineral trainin' trim; he warn't hot in the gineral meanin' of the tarm, any how. Finally, Ike Peabody proposed tea, an' we made Ephe drink abaout a pin of shoeshawn. That done the bisness, short meter. 'Twarn't hardly down afore it cum, an' brought with it, the rum, gin, syder, whisky, and the poor fellow's breakfust into the bargin. I thought I'd seen pukin' afore, out this 'ere was a long chork ahead of any thing I ever seed, or expect to see agin.

The cheerman naow decided that Insine Ephe Libbey was naow drunk, tight and flummuxed, within the meanin' of the statoote. The Deacon then asked what did it. "Them," says he, "as b'lieve that rum had anythin' to do with bringin' abaout the orful sitooation in which aour respected fellow citizen is layin' daown there, will say, aye."

"Aye!" squarked Ant Judy Kyer.

"Contray minded," said Deacon Peabedy.

"No!" hollered the hull meetin'.

"Did gin, or whisky, or syder do it?" said the Deacon.

"Yes sirree!" piped Ant Judy agin.

"Contray minded."

"No-o-o-o-o-o-oh!" unanermously cried the meetin'.

"Was it shoeshawn tea that, to use the language of scripter, laid this here strong man of war low?" continered the cheer.

"Sartingly!" roared the independent and unterrified electors of Hornby, with one voice completely drownin' the feeble "No" which Ant Kyer croaked as she was leaving the house, mad all over.

The cheer then remarked that "it had bin unanermously decided that shoeshawn tea was the intostercatin licker spoken of in the statoote." And therefore ordered "that it should be peanull to drink it, an' any body convicted of touchin' the pyson stuff hereafter, shall stand treat all raound or be licked!"

We've naow got the law a-goin', and it works fust rate. Yours,

Ethan Spike.

To Correspondents.

We are overrun with favors, and our friends must have patience. We are doing the best we can. Some have not sent us their names, and therefore we cannot publish them, and one is so badly written we cannot read it.

A Temperance Law.

We are now fully satisfied that the present Legislature will not pass any temperance law which will be any better, if as good, as the present law in force. Our excellent temperance law having failed to pass the Senate by a vote of two to one against it, and Mr. Hester's bill, after being amended so as to have some little vitality, having also failed, and his substitute, providing that liquor sellers shall not sell to drunkards and minors, being of no force if it should pass, except that it repeals license, and the House bill granting license when over one hundred thousand petitions have prayed for its absolute repeal, what can the friends of temperance now hope for, but a total disregard of our petitions, and a determination on the part of the representatives of the people to enact their own laws, instead of those asked for by the people they *mis*represent.

Any one who will now calmly and dispassionately look at this subject, must come to the conclusion that to accomplish anything, we must look to the people, and they must be appealed to rather than the Legislature. Our next Legislature will be entirely new, a thing which has not occurred before for thirty-six years.

Our State officers will all be elected directly by the people, which is also a new thing in our State. When therefore has such an opportunity offered for the people to set themselves right on this great question as during the present season.

The candidates of the two great political parties of the State are now before the people and among them, we recognise some of the noblest champions of our cause and some of its bitterest enemies. What then is the duty of all true friends of temperance? In our opinion simply to select our friends from the candidates presented on both sides and elect them; and when we have the opportunity, as we shall have during the summer, select our candidate for the Legislature in the same way. They are easily selected—we can easily find them, and should it be our fortune to edit the Chart during the canvas, we will cheerfully lend our aid in the selection. Our mind in fully made up—we vote for no man, Whig or Democrat, who is not heart and hand with us. Let then, our friends, take a stand on this question and firmly maintain it, and our success is certain. We hold the balance of power, and if we are only united, must triumph.

The Legislature is not now in session. Most of its members are with their constituents. Now let our friends rally and see what they can accomplish with their own immediate Representatives. If by persuasion they can accomplish their object, let them use it. Tell them plainly what they want and what they intend to have, and before the final adjournment we may accomplish something, however little; but let us not be satisfied with anything which will not fully accomplish our object—the suppression of the liquor traffic. Unity of purpose will accomplish it. LET US BE UNITED.

Louis Kossuth.

On Friday, Feb. 27th, the great Hungarian arrived in our city, and was escorted to the State House by crowds of our citizens and strangers in the city, and welcomed to the State by Gov. Wright.

Kossuth replied in a very neat speech in which he recounted the wrongs of his native country, and her struggles for liberty. In the evening he attended, with his lady and suit, the Governors levee, where all who desired it were introduced to him. On Saturday he was presented to the Senate and House Representative, and in the evening visited the Masonic Lodge. On Sabbath morning he attended church at Roberts Chapel, (Methodist,) and visited several of the Sabbath Schools in the afternoon. On Monday he was busy in receiving the various committees &c., who called on him with donations, and in the evening he addressed the Hungarian Association, and the ladies of the city who presended him with a purse containing about two hundred dollars, and on Tuesday he left for Louisville. About one thousand dollars, in all, was collected for the cause of Hungary, during his brief stay.

Whatever we may think of the probabilities of his accomplishing the heruclean task of setting free his oppressed county, we cannot but admire the man, and most cordially wish him complete success in his holy mission.

A friend writing to us from Clark county, says:

"We have a good deal of interest in this portion of the State, in reference to our late Legislative action on the temperance bill.—Few of us are disappointed, but many of us are indignant to hear demagogue politicians denounce the whole body of temperance men as intemperate fanatics. Well let them go on, the hour of retribution approaches, a submissive but indignant people will not always forbear, and claim to know something of the public mind on this subject. I greatly misinterpret the signs of the time, if the next Legislature of Indiana does not hear a noise which will make the rum-sellers and all their humble advocates turn pale and tremble with fear. There is now a growing wish on the part of many of our friends, to form a Temperance ticket, and if we can do no more we can show our strength, and this once done we shall prove to the politicians that we hold the balance of power, and can control any election in the State."

WHAT MADE THAT FATHER TREAT HIS CHILDREN SO?—Mr. Turner having rode over a long prairie on a piercing cold day, came to the door of a cabin. Having hitched his horse, he went in, and inquired of a little girl, about twelve years of age, the eldest of three children whom he saw, if he could have a little refreshment for himself and feed for his horse. The little girl replied, "no." "Where is your mother?" inquired Mr. T. "I have no mother, she is dead," was the reply. "Where is your father, then?" "He's gone to mill—he's been gone three days." "Well has he left you nothing to eat?" "Nothing but some corn." Mr. T. looked around, and saw lying on the table an ear or two of hard corn, which had the appearance of being boiled. It was the only thing in the cabin of any kind that could be eaten.

Without obtaining any thing for himself or horse, he then rode across another prairie of 10 or 12 miles, to a little settlement, and there learned that the wretched father had been drunk one day of the three since he came to the villege! Now, we ask again, what made that father treat his poor little motherless children so? Nay, rather, what in the universe but intemperance could have induced him to treat them so?—Crusader.

The Social Order of Temperanre.

This as most of our readers know is the title of a new Temperance Association, which had its origin in this city about two months since. It was commenced by a few of our former drinking men, for their own protection, and the protection of their families. In this short space of time, and with this small beginning, it now comprises nearly one fourth of the population of our city, and has spread into several of the neighboring towns and cities.

The following is the pledge of the Order, from which our readers can learn more fully its objects:

PLEDGE OF THE SOCIAL ORDER OF TEMPERANCE OF INDIANAPOLIS.

WHEREAS, the custom of drinking spirituous liquors has ever been, and still is, of all evils that afflict the human family the most ruinous. It deprives us of our property, destroys our credit, injures our families, perverts our judgment, corrupts our affections, fills our neighbor's houses with scenes of bloodshed, separates the kindred ties of affection in families, alienates husbands from wife and wife from husband, parents from children and children from parents, sows the seed of disease in our very vitals, and does not withdraw its infernal influences until its laboring subjects worn out by sickness and pain, sinking forever in untimely and dishonorable graves; and even then its deadening withering blasts pursue the orphans and widows whom it has made and points them out the descendants of the drunkard, as suitable objects for the scorn of a cold unfeeling world. Therefore,

Resolved, That we do most solemnly pledge ourselves, that we will abstain from the use of all intoxication liquors, that we will not taste them, nor handle them, nor touch them, except prescribed by a reputable physician of temperance habits himself; and that we will do all in our power to discourage the use of them in others—that we will not visit the Coffee Houses or places where it is sold as a beverage without a reasonable cause for doing so.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves as a band of brothers united for self-protection, to stand by every member of this pledge in sickness and in health, and that we will use all honorable efforts to procure employment for any of our number who may desire business to support himself and family.

Resolved, That we hold temperance meetings as often as may from time to time seem profitable, at our houses, and if we think best, in public, for the purpouse of encouraging each member to keep his puedge, and to further spread abroad the glorious cause of temperance.

Resolved, That we do most affectionately invite all to join with us in our temperance pledge who may have fallen into the temptation of using intoxicating drinks.

Resolved, That this association be known as "The Social Order of Temperance of Indianapolis."

JOHN GREER, President.
ROBERT M. DEMPSEY, Sec'y.

No temperance society in our knowledge has spread so rapidly, and none, if strictly lived up to, is calculated to do more good.

Their pledge is strong and to the point, and binds them all into a strong brotherhood for life. Could our readers visit their meetings held nightly in this city, and see the joyous smile of a loving wife as she sees her husband redeemed from the degradation of the drunkard, and feels no longer the withering curse of being a "drunkard's wife," they would say from the bottom the heart, as we have often said "success to the Social Order."

Let our temperance friends give them every encouragement. Let our intemperate friends come forward and join them, and neither will ever regret it. Again we say success.

In Minnesota territory there is a lake called Spirit Lake, the outlet of which is Rum River.—Crusader.

There are several Spirit Lakes is Indiana and a few Rum Rivers, but more Whisky Rivers. Some of them, however, are nearly dry.

St. Joseph Total Abstinence Society.

We have received a full report of the proceepings of this society, at its late meeting at South Bend, and regret that our space will not admit them entire. We cannot refuse to publish the following as it is directly to the point and carries its own comment.

Mr. Orr presented the following preamble and resolutions, which, after being discussed by Messrs. Orr, Davis, Kelley, and Manfield, were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, the State of Maine has by its recent Legislative action, for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and by the success which has attended the administration of the law, demonstrated to the friends of temperance an effecual method of removing the evils of intemperance, and concentrating public effort in the contest with the rumocracy. Therefore,

Resolved, That we will use our best efforts to procure the passage of a law by our Legislature, similar to that known as the Maine Law.

Resolved, That should such a law be secured, we will, to the extent of our power, carry it into efficient operation.

Resolved, That as the chief obstacle to the passage of such a law, is found in the anti-temperance character our Legislature, we will henceforth vote for no man as Governor, Senator, or Representative, who is unfriendly to a law prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating drinks, under the most stringent penalties, or who will not pledge himself faithfully and dilligently to use his influence for securing such a measure.

TOO STRONG!—Our friends in Indiana, as we learn from the Temperance Chart, have holden in that State, a great convention, at which they discussed, and approved, the "Maine Law," by a vote on the naked question. Yet a majority of the Convention thought it not prudent at the present time, to recommend so strong a measure!

This is a grand mistake. "The Maine law and nothing else," should be their rallying cry. Anything less stringent than this will be a failure. We know it by experience, and bid our friends in other States beware how they tamper with this evil, by half-way measures in the form of legislative enactments. No compromise with rumsellers. Demand a law that will thoroughly break them up a route the whole crew, horse, foot, and dragoons. We have not time and space to discuss this matter at length, and show, as we can, by abundant testimony, and facts uncontrovertible, that a stringent law can and will be better sustained than a weak, temporizing statute, which allows two-thirds of the villains to escape justice by the evasions and subterfuges of ingenious lawyers. The Maine law is more than a match for the most wiley of the profession. They can't pick flaws in it. It destroys the critter and takes the pluck all out of the rummies. They are as white-livered as babies—as weak as water. We would like to introduce our Indiana friends to a half dozen of these gentry some morning, as they are summoned before Judge Fitch, or as they are seen crouching upon their marrow-bones, begging for a little mercy at the feet of his honor the Mayor. Don't talk about prudence—we have been prudent too long. Give the rumsellers no qnarter, and public opinion will soon be overwhelmingly on your side.—Maine Temp. Watchman.

This is exactly our opinion. Had the Convention which met in this city on the 7th of January stood firm for the Maine Law, we could have got one as strong as that lately defeated in the Senate; but fearing they were ahead of public opinion, they decided not to ask for much and will probably get nothing. Had we stood firm and determined, we could at least have secured a law one step in advance of the present one, and maintained our ground; but seeing us faulter and fall back, our enemies took courage and advanced. It was a bad movement, and will probably prove our overthrow. But we are not conquered—true we are cast down but we are not destroyed:

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again," and though the contest be unequal and the battle fierce and hope be long deferred, still we shall rise from the dust ere long, our banners still floating to the breeze—our watch-word onward—our victory sure.

Let no one be discouraged—our friends are aroused—a glorious dawn will yet succeed the thick darkness, and that glorious star of hope which has arisen in the East, in the glorious State of Maine, shall yet illumine our borders and lead us on "conquering and to conquer."

A Pawtucket paper has this—"A man made application, a few days since, for insuranced on a building situated in a village where there was no fire engine. In answer to the question, "What are the facilities for extinguishing fires? he wrote—"It rains some times."

☞ We perceive that the editor of the White River Standard has been recently defining his position on the subject of the great Temperance reform question. We have recently spent some days in Lawrence county, and being a stranger our presence was not much restraint on men in expressing their opinions, from which we ascertained that the advocates for the cause of King Alcohol claim him as a champion for the cause of his majesty, calculated to render them much good. Having been so long acquainted with the editor, we cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion that he would willingly lend "aid and comfort" to the advocates of the old King; and we feel confident that one day or other, when they undertake to count him, they will find him like the Irishman's flea—not there.—Orleans Com. Adv.

We have never been in Lawrence county but we have been a constant reader of the White River Standard, and regret to say that we have come to the very opposite conclusion from our friend of the Review.

We consider the course taken by that paper as giving more "aid and comfort" to King Alcohol than if it came out boldly and denounced our cause, for a false friend is much more dangerous than an open enemy.

The Way to Fortune, or "Better to Work than to Beg.

Let no poor boy, after reading the following interesting fact, ever despair of making a respectable living.

A gentleman was once walking down one of the streets of P———, when a beggar loudly craved for 'a few coppers for a night's lodging.' The gentleman looked earnestly at the poor man, and inquired, 'Why do you not work? you should be ashamed of begging.' 'Oh, sir, I do not know where to get employment.' 'Nonsense!' replied the gentleman, 'you can work if you will.'

'Now listen to me. I was once a beggar like you. A gentleman gave me a crown piece, and said to me, 'Work and don't beg; God helps those who help themselves.' I immediately left P———, and got out of the way of my old companions. I remembered the advice given me by my mother before she died, and I began to pray to God to keep me from sin, and to give me his help day by day. I went round to the houses in the country places, and with part of my five shillings, bought old rags. These I took to the paper mills and sold them at a profit. I was always willing to give a fair price for the things I bought and did not try to sell them for more than I believed they were worth. I determined to be honest, and God prospered me. My purchases and profits became larger and larger, and now I have got more than ten thousand crown pieces that I can call my own. One great thing that has contributed to my success is this, I have kept from drink and tobacco.'

As the gentleman spoke, he took out his purse and drew from it a five-shilling piece, and handing it to the astonished beggar, he said, 'Now you have the same chance of getting on in the world as I had. Go and work, and let me never see you begging again. If you do, I will hand you over to the police.'

Years passed away. The gentleman had forgotten the circumstance, until one day when traveling through P———, he entered a respectable looking bookseller's shop, in order to purchase some books that he wanted.

He had not been many minutes in conversation with the bookseller, before the latter, eagerly looking into the face of his customer, inquired, 'are you not the gentleman, who, several years ago, gave a five-shilling piece to a poor begger at the end of this street?'

'Yes! I remember it well.'

'Then sir, this house, this well stocked shop is the fruit of that five shilling piece.' Tears of gratitude trickled down his cheeks, as he introduced the gentleman to his happy wife and children. He was regarded as their benefactor. When gathered round the table to partake of a cup of tea, the bookseller recounted his history from the above eventful day. It was very similar to that of the welcome visitor. By industry, honesty, and dependence upon God's help, he had risen step by step from buying rags, to selling papers and tracts in the street, then to keep an old book store, and ultimately to be owner of one of the best circulating libraries in the place. Before the happy family separated the large old family bible was brought, out of which a psalm of thanksgiving was read, and then all bent around the family altar. Words could not express the feelings of those who formed that group. For some moments silence, intermingled by subdued sobs, evidenced the gratitude to the Almighty Disposer of all events, which was ascending to heaven.

When they rose and bid each other farewell, the bookseller said, 'Thank God I have found your words to be true, 'God helps those who help themselves.'' It is better to work than to beg.—The Friend of Virtue.

LEAVENWORTH, Feb. 23, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD: — * * * The day of decisive action in the great battle for temperance has arrived, and we temperance men cannot shrink from the conflict if we would, without, like cowards, abandoning the cause of suffering humanity. The enemy have been forcing the issue upon us for years. They have been pouring out the stream of liquid fire upon the suffering thousands of our State for years. and the widow and the orphan's cry has come up to our ears imploring us to fly to their rescue. Had the retailers and advocates of the cursed thing have reviled us with the bitterest curses because our hearts have been moved with pity for the sorrows and sufferings of the poor and needy. And they have followed, in political canvasses, every temperance man that has dared to offer himself as a candidate for the suffrages of his fellow citizens, with the most unrelenting persecutions and denunciations, no matter how pure and competent he may be, merely on account of his temperance principles. And in every canvass in the last twenty years in our State, this vile stream of corruption has polluted all our elections, and has been impudently used to control the votes of our people, and yet the unblushing perpetrators of such acts have got the hardihood to say to temperance men, you are bringing to bear your temperance principles to tell at the ballot-box.—Well suppose we are, who first set us the example? These very men who are creating such an ado about it. I was pleased with the sentiment of a resolution adopted by our State Convention, the import of which was, that we are not trying to bring temperance into politics but to turn intemperance out of politics, and it will be done. The people are awakened up to the enormities of the liquor-traffic. and its inflences. The truth is mighty and God is with us. The prayers of thousands of His believing children are daily ascending to the throne of heaven for the overthrow of this great evil. And the cries of the afflicted ones of earth have come up to God's ear, and He will speadily avenge their wrongs. Let us labor on in our glorious cause, and finally a blessed triumph shall crown our labors, and our enemies themselves we hope may yet live to see the error of their ways, and the blessedness of our principles, and be saved.

I had the pleasure a few days ago of assisting in the institution of a Section of the Cadets of Temperance in our place. The Section has commenced under happy auspices, and I have the highest hopes as to its future usefulness in our midst. Temperance principles are making converts in our county every day. Our people are convinced that we are right and that liquor-selling is wrong, and they want a law passed that will check the evil.

With the best wishes that your enterprize in sustaining the Chart may be successful, and it be the instrument of doing much good, I am yours in L. P. and F.,

J. H. T.

For the Temperance Chart.

CAMBRIDGE CITY, March 9th, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—Being a reader of the "Chart," and seeing communications from many points in the Hoosier State on the all important subject of Temperance, I wish a word with this people on the whisky subject.

We are situated in fair view of what we call "The Devil's Big Stew-Kettle." We have regular deadfalls and two or three that are doing business on the jug plan in our young city. The whisky boys have finished four subjects this winter, by delerium tremens, and one by being killed in a sleighing party.

We have boys in our town from ten to eighteen years of age, that will take whisky from their father's cellar and other places in town, and go out into the woods, get drunk and remain out all day.

Our Division is in a healthy condition—we number about fifty members in good standing. But here let me say to you, that we have a set of nominal Christians in our midst, who are furnishing corn, wood, and hogs, to this Big Stew-Kettle, and say that they are doing right.

On the subject of whisky sellers—we have some of the most hardenad, I think, in the West—for instance, on three or four occasions this winter, the wives of drunken husbands have endeavored to persuade them to refuse their husbands liquor, but alas, to no purpose. Moral suasion has no effect. We want the Maine Law in this State, or at least in this city. We hear, of late, that you are driving the monster from your midst.

Now, Bro. Woodward, I would be pleased to speak through the Chart, but think that others more able than myself will fill your columns.

If you think this worthy of a place on the Chart, please insert it.

In Love, Purity, and Fidelity. CATO.

BLOOMINGTON, Feb. 23, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I wish to inform you that we are moving on here gloriously in the good cause. Meetings are frequent in the town, and in different parts of the country, and many are signing away their liberties. We have formed a "Monroe County Temperance, and Anti-Liquor League," and had last night an enthusiastic meeting, at which the Maine Law was voted upon, and passed by acclamation, no one dissenting. We have now lost nearly all hope from the present Legislature, and intend to push the battle for future effect. In the Spring and Summer campaign we ought to spread light among the people, meet them and discuss the subject. I want to see Indiana in a perfect hurrah for the Maine Law. I hope, Bro. Woodward, that you will stir up the brethren on the subject of voting "No License," at the April election. This is a matter of special importance, as it will have an effect on the county nominations for the Legislature. My whole soul is on fire at the good news from Indianapolis, and I did say glory to God, when I read it last night. Please to keep us all posted in the distant parts of the State, on the movements of the Capital, and tell us the names of the Senators and Representatives who are yet rampant for devil-rule and Liquor-taxes. My rule hereafter and forever is vote for the best man, from President down to Constable, without respect to party. The battle just suits me now. I have long waited to see the thing come off in the open field, and now we intend to ask, and give no quarters until the world shouts victory over the great foe.

Yours, Fraternally, C.

TORONTO, Ind., Feb. 13, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD, SIR:—I take this method of informing you, and through the medium of the Chart, the brethren of the Sons of Temperance, how the cause of temperance is flourishing in this part of the country. Social Division, No. 328, was organized two years ago the 26th day of March next, with ten members, and with a country location, surrounded by the most deadly opposition, an opposition, from a class of citizens who should have cheered us on in our great work, instead of trying to impede our progress. But we never became discouraged at the prospect before us, we consider the opposition the life of the work, for let me say to you brethren, that if it was not for the opposition we would become luke warm and dilatory. We now number some thirty members, although we have initiated upwards of forty. We have risen above opposition, or rather have silenced it, for we shall have opposition as long as there remains a single dram-shop in the land, therefore let us not become discouraged because we find foes to contend with, but let us redouble our efforts, and keep our radiant star in view that its benignant rays may shine brighter and brighter until its brightness shall so enlighten the minds of those who are engaged in the unholy business of dealing out disease and death, that they may see the error of their ways and refrain therefrom. What a joy must thrill through the heart of every true Son of Temperance, when he considers the amount of happiness he has helped to bestow upon many a worse than widowed and fatherless family. We have now in this State near four hundred Divisions and I think we can safely say that each Division will average five members who were once in the very lowest depths of drunkenness, this will give us the number of two thousand, and we may add to this number as many more who were in a fair way to land, in a short time, in the gutter, and we have the sum of 4,000 men who have been saved from the infamy of a drunkards death and grave, in our State. What true Son of Temperance can think of this and not feel that he has received his reward for all of the trouble that he may have sustained in the work. Then let us continue on faithful to the duty we have taken upon ourselves.

Yours in L. P. and F.,

WM. P. HASKELL.

ALEXANDRIA, Madison County, Ia., March 1st, 1852.

The cause of Temperance advances but slowly in this town and vicinity, yet it gradually deepens and widens, and much good has been effected since the Division was first organized here. Very much however remains yet to be done. Our opposition here is of every hue and character, and we have to contest every inch of ground we gain. But judging from the past we have hope and confidence that error and self interest must ultimately give way to the light of Truth.

We say to you Bro. Woodward, go on—meet the tempest—fight with courage—and if you are but scantily rewarded here, you will one day hear the plaudit "well done thou good and faithful servant," &c.

Yours in L. P. and F., —— ——.

LAPORT, March 10th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—You will have a better account of Cataract Division. No. 167, at the close of this quarter, than heretofore, We are adding one or more members to this Division every meeting, but what is no less important, a more true and determined temperance spirit now prevails than at any previous time, since the institution of the Division. We plant our stakes for a law equally as effective as the Maine Law, and will never in my opinion pull them up. We must have a Legislature that will give us such a law, and redeem our noble State from the present low and degraded condition upon the subject of intemperance and the almost inseperable consequences of the liquor traffic. It seems to me that every temperance man and woman, and every temperance Journal should be uncompromising in favor of such a law.

I feel in hopes that the Chart will soon become a weekly paper. I am inclined to think that a weekly paper, at this time, would take better than a semi-monthly.

Yours in L. P. and F, J. D. S.

The Hardened Rum-seller.

When I entered the room, the doctor sat by the patient's side, while he appeared insensible. His face was turned towards the wall, and then said,

"Do you think I am in danger, doctor?"

The physician was loth to say so, as physicians usually are, and evaded the question. But death's tide was at its fall, and the sick man grew worse.

"Oh! doctor, doctor," said he, "there is something that preys on my mind — something more terrible even than this fatal disorder."

The patient tossed and tumbled about, his eyes rolled and flashed, his brow was knit, and mental hurricane swept over him. His wife attempted to soothe him, talked of heaven and mercy, but in vain. I told of the dying love of Christ, and the thief on the cross, but all would not do. The physician was equally unsuccessful in all his endeavors to calm the troubled mind of the dying man.

"Take away your physic, doctor! it is useless; it cannot cure a mind diseased!"

Again penitence and pardon were spoken of, and the physician and the sick man's family endeavored to pour oil upon the troubled waters. But they cast up mire and dirt.

"Can you tell me what troubles your mind so deeply?"

"Oh! doctor, doctor, do not speak of it! I knew it was wrong! I have sent their souls to hell! I made them drunkards!"

The doctor answered, 'You have done no more than others; they would have sold it if you had not.'

'Don't tell me that! Their blood is on my skirts—tear it out! Look; I see their faces, and their fiery eyes glaring upon me! horror! horror! horror!'

The physician soothed him as he would have soothed a child. 'It will relieve your mind,' said he to the sick man.

'Oh God! I wish I could get relief! see! doctor,—see them all point their skinny fin-at me!—Kill me! Kill me! There's Mrs. Briggs to whom I sold rum the night before her children starved. She asks for money to buy them bread—here she stands! — my God! my God!—I have not got the money—go to her—quick — quick — Oh! horror! horror! horror!'

'My dear sir,' said the physician, mildly, 'you are raving; you are talking of shadows!'

'Heavens! doctor, do you call those shadows? Keep them out! Keep them out! The they come into the room! — shut the window and bar the shutters!—I see old Griffin who froze to death, he's trying to come in. There's his winding sheet! Oh, don't, don't burn me!'

The physician then rose to humor his miserable patient, went to the window and closed the shutter.

'Look there, doctor! there's a young woman whose husband I got drunk, and he murdered her! I took her coffin to pay his grog bill! She cries out against me — she shrieks and tears her hair—oh! oh!'

All efforts were found fruitless; nothing could succeed in quieting the tumult in his guilty soul. As a last resource a clergyman was mentioned to him, and with the fury of a demon he shouted—

'Don't talk to me of a clergyman! My soul is lost! lost! lost! The spirits of all the damned whom I have made drunk are let loose upon me! — They pinch! — they burn—they tear me! woe! woe! woe!'

And his burning eye became fixed in its socket, the death rattle came in his throat, he clasped his hands convulsively together, and died; and amidst the howling of that fearful storm was heard the wails and agonizing cries of the heart-broken and the terror-stricken children of the rum-seller.

THE CHOLERA.—A gentleman of professional honor, in order to prove that he could procure brandy of a stricly temperate landlady, at a fashionable resort on our bay, the last season, assumed the symptoms of cholera, and with expressive sighs and groans called to her for Brandy! "Brandy," she exclaimed, "I have none!" "What, none for puddings and pies?" exclaimed the honorable sufferer. "None," replied the heroine, "My puddings and pies never have the Cholera!!!"

☞ The Boston rummies broke into the State Temperance Head Quarters, No. 9, State Street, on the night previous to the great presentation, to steal the great Petition, but they found it like the Paddy's flea,—when they put their hands on it, it wasn't there. In anticipation of such rum tactics, it had been carried thence to the house of Dr. Walter Channing for safe keeping.—Cataract.

"The Passion Strong in Death!"

Some years ago, a young man of Strafford county, N. H., acquired, by hard labor, a little fortune of about five dollars; and having a taste for "dickering," he laid out the sum in the purchase of merchandize, which he, on a hand-sled, retailed round the vicinity. He was a poor boy, with a good name, and everybody was kind to him. Every round increased his store, and it was not long before he was enabled to buy a horse and wagon. Betimes he set up a country store. His wealth continued to grow until it was told in thousands.

He kept the kind of store peculiar to the country fifty years ago—in which, from calico to New England rum, was always "kept on hand." He married, and married well. At the start he was too parsimonious to drink his own liquor, but as his wealth increased, his liberality (to himself) enlarged; and his stated drams became as necessary to him as habit could make them. At last he became en incorrigible sot, and then his property ceased to grow, and began to dwindle. His losses amounted soon to nearly the half of his large property; and then, to add to his misfortunes, he was laid upon a bed of protracted sickness. The clergyman and the physician took this occasion to remonstrate with him on the course he was pursuing.

"You will be food for the worms in less than a year," said they, "if you persist in this course."

"No," said he, "I'll have my rum and prevent that, too!"

He died soon after, and the neighbors were summoned to do the last officers to the misguided man. But of the worms. Did he leave any charm to keep them from his rum-saturated flesh? In his will was found an item, by which he appropriated $88 for building a tomb and monument, in the former of which his body was to be placed, enclosed in a leaden coffin, filled with rum! A certain sum was also left to defray the expense of refilling this coffin at stated periods which has been done once or twice already. The costly monument is still to be seen—and tells to heaven, what? Why, simply that he who lies beneath it made money by Rum—lost money by Rum—died by Rum, and was buried in RUM!

The facts of this story were stated by Elder Place, at Stafford County Temperance Convention. Let the rum-drinker read and ponder.—Crusader.

The editor of the Madison Banner, who listened to the debate in the Senate on Mr. Milliken's bill for restricting the sale of ardent spirits, says there is a very general disposition among the members to pass some very stringent laws to repress the evils of intemperance. Petitions, numerously signed, have been sent up from all parts of the State. The great danger is, that the Legislature will pass laws in advance of public sentiment, and that their provisions will be thus rendered ineffectual.—New Albany Ledger.

How far in advance of public sentiment, Mr. Ledger? The traffic is now universally denounced; and, this being the case, we cannot see how the Legislature can pass any law that will be repugnant to the feelings of the people, or which cannot be carried into effect. There may be a law passed a little in advance of public taste, but not the least in advance of public sentiment. For instance, Messrs. Editors, a good many like a taste of the "critter" occasionally, but their sentiments, publicly and privately expressed. would, undoubtedly, be against the liquor traffic, wholesale and retail.—Brownstown Observer.

RUM SPUNK.—On board the steamer St. Lawrence a trip or two back, a temperance man heard a passenger say that he "had on board the boat some liquors, and he would like to see any one put his hand on them. I have here (taking out a pistol,) something with which I would blow a hole through him instanter." Our friend thought he would be on deck to see the conduct of this rum-owner, when the hour of trial should come. When the boat came alongside the wharf, the officers were there to search and seize all contraband goods. The liquor owner was there also, and as the officers began their search they rolled out barrel after barrel, till at last they reached that of our hero. Then came the moment, when, if anything was to be done it must be done quickly; but not a shot was fired, nor a word of protest spoken by our valiant knight of the toddy-stick. His courage was great, no doubt, but could not be found just then.—Watchman.

☞ The friends of Temperance in New York, says the Herald, are resolved to wage a war of legal extermination against the 5,910 dram-shops in that city. The plan is to avoid making separate nominations, but to select candidates most favorable to their views, from the tickets nominated by the great political parties. The Philadelphia Ledger learns that the same plan will be tried there, if the Legislature refuses to enact the Maine law. The nicely balanced state of parties would render the measure very effective, if it should be adopted in good faith.

Individual Effort.

There is too much disposition among the friends of Temperance, to rely almost exclusively upon the efforts of public speakers to produce those results which can be more effectually accomplished by individual action. No public lecturer can know the precise state of the cause in the town and township he visits, as well as its citizens, who are compelled to know of the obstacles in the way of its progress. More good is to be accomplished by individual effort than by public lectures. Let individuals speak often to one another upon the subject, and thus produce a healthy excitement. Every temperance man in the State has some particular friends who may be redeemed by him, or whose names to the pledge or petition might be procured by him, and, perhaps by nobody else! Relate facts and individual experiences, and the results of personal observations; and in a mild and charitable spirit enforce the convictions of your judgments upon the minds of your fellow-citizens. Let all who are in favor of sobriety, law, order, temperance and prosperity engage in this work with a determination to carry it forward to its complete and ultimate triumph, and it will be done. It is a maxim of the money getting world, that property can only be accumulated by individual effort, and may not this maxim, with equal propriety be applied to this great moral enterprise? Personal efforts must be put forth in the temperance cause, or the reformation will never be accomplished. Let each man, then, gird himself to the work, and do his duty.—do with his might what his hands find to do!—Life Boat.

A SAD CASE.—We saw a little boy on Monday, apparently 12 or 14 years of age, so much under the influence of liquor as scarcely to be able to walk. He was supported by one or two boys of his own size, who were taking him home! We could not help thinking that the man who would be guilty of giving liquor to such a child, deserved the execration of the entire community. Yea, he should be dealt with in the same manner as they would with him who administers to his neighbor the poisonous potion.—Chrys. Foun.

THE BOAT FOR US.—The new Propeller Eastern State, for the Boston and Penobscot route, will take no liquor on freight. Let temperance men "make a note" of this, and let other steam-boat managers note it too. Here is an admirable deferene to law which should be encouraged and emulated.—Gardiner Fountain.

☞ The Pope has granted the permission of using "fat" in culinary operations on fast days during the year 1852. The time of Lent is excepted.

CONGRESSIONAL WINE.—A Washington Correspondent of the N. Y. Independent, giving an account of the Congressional Banquet in honor of Kossuth, remarks:—

"I regret to say that the most eloquent Mr. Gentry, from the South, had indulged too freely to speak as he might. The same may be said of numbers. What a disgrace to the nation! I noticed Gen. Houston drank only water."

GOV. BRIGGS, SELF-DENIAL. — A good story is related of ex-Governor Briggs, that many years ago, when expostulating with a young man about drinking and urging him to abandon the practice, the young man agreed to leave off if the Governor would leave off wearing a dickey. The latter agreed to the novel requisition, and in conformity with the bargain has never worn a dickey since.

A YANKEE PORTRAIT.

BY REV. J. PIERPONT.

The Yankee boy, before he's sent to school,
Well knows the mystery of that magic tool,
The pocket knife. To that wistful eye,
Turns, while he hears his mother's lullaby;
His hoarded cents he gladly gives to get it,
Then leaves no stone unturned till he can whet it.
And in the education of the lad,
Not little part that implement hath had,
His pocket knife to the young whittler brings
A growing knowledge of material things.

Projectiles, music, and the sculpter's art,
His chestnut whistle and his shingle dart,
His elder popgun with its hickory rod;
Its sharp explosion and rebounding wad,
His corn-stalk fiddle, and the deeper tone,
That murmur from his pumpkin leaf trombone,
Conspire to teach the boy. To these succeed
His bow, his arrow of a feathered reed,
His windmill, raised the passing breeze to win,
His water wheel that turns upon a pin;
Or if his father lives upon the shore,
You'll see his snip "beam ends upon the floor,"
Full rigged, with raking masts and timbers staunch,
And waiting, near the wash-tub, for a launch.

Thus by his genius and his jack-knife driven,
Ere long he'll solve you any problem given.
Make any gimcrack, musical or mute,
A plow, a coach, an organ or a flute,
Make you a locomotive or a clock,
Cut a canal or build a floating dock,
Or lead forth Beauty from a marble block;
Make anything, in short, for sea or shore,
From a child's rattle to a seventy-four:—
Make it, said I? Ay, when he undertakes it
He'll make the thing, and the machine that makes it.

And when the thing is made—whether it be
To move on earth, in air or on the sea,
Whether to water, o'er the waves to glide,
On the land, to roll revolve or slide,
Whether to whirl, or jar, to strike or ring,
Whether it be a pistol or a spring,
Wheel, pully, tube sonorous, wood or brass,
The thing designed shall surely come to pass;
For when his hands upon it, you may know,
That there's go in it, and he'll make it go.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thought has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.

Published in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and devoted to the Interests of the Order of the Temple of Honor.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

THIS Popular Magazine, having met with the hearty approval of the Temple Order, wherever it circulated during its first year, will commence its Second Volume on the first of September, 1851. It will as heretofore be issued on the first of every month, each number containing

THIRTY TWO PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER,

in pamphlet form, convenient for binding—making at the end of the year a volume of three hundred and eighty-four pages—at the low price of

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The established character of this Magazine—its approval and recommendation by National, Grand, and Subordinate Temples—the liberal terms on which it is published, placing it within the reach of every member of the Order—and the will render it a desirable companion for every Templar who wishes to supply his family with good temperance reading, and keep himself posted in the doings and progress of the Order of which he is a member. This Magazine is the first and ONLY publication ever devoted particularly to the Temple Order, and is not confined to any locality, but is designed to be the Organ of the whole Order. This gives it a peculiar claim on the Fraternity for encouragement and support.

While it aims to be the expositor of the Temple Order, it will give an impartial and faithful history of all important temperance movements, whether by individual or associated action, or legislative enactments and thus form a valuable journal for every friend of temperance and morality.

The services of several able writers are already secured for its pages; and, as the subscription list increases, more will be added. No labor or expense, consistent with our means, will be spared to make it just what the temperance portion of community desire: a good family Magazine not surpassed by any in the country.

Poetry.

From the Memphis Eagle and Enquirer.

THE IRON HORSE.

BY L. VIRGINIA SMITH.

From the caverns of Art, in the hills of the North
Sprang a proud crested courser, exultingly forth;
By the spirit of steam was his breathing upborn,
From the strong forest giants his sinews were torn,
And the gnomes of the mine shouted loud in their ire,
O'er his iron-bound bosom, and pulses of fire!

Away!—on his mission of power and pride,
As springs the bold eagle the tempest to ride,—
Or swift as the bolts of the far-flashing levin,
When the storm is abroad on the dark-rolling heaven,
Down, down on the nations the thunderer came,
With his cloud-breathing nostrils, and frontlet of flame!

Through the deep-crowded life of the populous mart,
The thick throbbing pulse of the great city's heart,
Where a swarming humanity wavers and reels,
All weary with urging life's fate-driven wheels,—
Like a black-bannered monarch from victory won,
The fierce plunging charger dashed haughtily on.

As a spirit of doom by the solitude lone,
Where death sets aloft on his grave-girdled throne,
Where slumbers a silent and shadowy throng,
The dark-boasmed steed came careering along—
And his neigh to the midnight was chillingly dread,
Like the wild-swelling trumpet that rouses the dead.

Where the wild-crested waves in magnificence toss,
The blue-ocean armies came sweeping across,
With their banner of darkness ahead on the breeze,
And their war-drum arousing the slumbering seas—
Then, white, winged courser, thy sinews of might,
Must be braced for the battle, and strong for the fight.

Hoarse howls the night-trumpet, and gathering fast
From their rock-bounded caverns, the king of the blast
Has marshalled his cohorts, yet pale with affright
Are the wild mountain genii, and feeble their might.
For the horse and his rider—a long, gleaming mass—
Through the heart of the mountain triumphantly pass.

Alone in the desert!—its denizens came—
Red riders of ruin on whirlwinds of flame,
The blasting sirocco—the deadly simoon—
With sand-serried spectres deep shrouded in gloom—
To HIM they are naught—for his limbs never tire,
Whose form is of iron, whose spirit is fire!

From the Central N. N. Journal.

THE MURMURING OF THE FOUNTAIN.

In ages long ago, I lay
Deep in the forest shade,
Where snows might come and melt away
And bright flowers bloom and fade,
Beneath the summer's cloudless sky,
Unseen by the white man's eager eye.

Lovely, yet lonely, was the place,
Where gushed the fountain clear,
Where stars looked down with eyes of love:
And oft the spotted deer
Would sport upon my flowery brink,
And of my cooling waters drink.

There came an Indian then, and built
His hut upon my grassy side;
And ere another moon he brought,
To share his home, his tawny bride,
Whose voice like fairy music fell
Around the gushing fountain dell.

THE JAR OF WHISKY.

BY FATHER MATHEW.

Here, only by a cork controlled,
And slender walls of earthen mold,
In all the pomp of earth reside,
Revenge that ne'er was satisfied—
The tree that bears the deadly fruit
Of murder, mourning, and dispute;
Assaults, and barbarous assails,
The images of gloomy jails,
The idle thoughts on mischief bent,
The midnight hour in jolly spent—
All these within the jar appear,
And Jack, the hangman, in the rear!

Miscellaneous.

Only Half Married.

A short time since a party of two young ladies and gentlemen visited Squire Curtis, at Creenland, apparently for the purpose of "uniting two fond hearts into one." The prospective groom appeared to be a young man of sanguine temperament, whose ruddy counterance, and glowing eye denoted the near approach of the happy hour when his fondest hopes were to be realized. He thrust a hand in each breaches pocket, placed the right foot firmly forward, and poising his head jauntily on one side, gazed at the squire, then at his heart's delight, as much as to say, "I've got her."

The lady sat, the picture of health, with an expression of countenance that told the casual observer "butter would not melt" between her rudy lips. There could be seen a suspicious little dimple, however, at each corner of her mouth, that came and went with every leer of a pair of bright but mischievous looking eyes, sparkling with roguishness, that told her lover he needn't count his chickens before they were hatched.

Now, we do not intend, in the absence of our young friend, Arthur Cannon, to report the dialogue phonographically, but we will take a reporter's license for detailing the following dialogue, which was commenced by the squire, who approached the parties and inquired, in the blandest manner:

"What can I do for you, my young friends?"

Groom. What can you do for us! Why a darned site—can't he Sary?

Bride. Well, I reckon it, if all's willin'.

G. Willin'? Why, what's up? Ain't goin' to gin' up now, I hope. You don't mean to say I shan't get married?

B. Oh, no, John. You've come to get married, and I wouldn't baulk you.

G. Good as goold: There, Squire, there's a pattern to begin with—(seizes her and plants a few that would rival Twitchell's pop beer)—puts on harness like a dove.—So, now, Squire, gear up your fixins and crack your whip.

Squire. (rising.) Well if you are in earnest I can marry you.

G. (impatiently.) In earnest! Of course we're in airnest. Don't p'laver so; go into it; rip out the sarvice. You know Solomon says delays are dangerous; keep the feet dry and the head cool and bid defiance to the physic.

B. La, John, there's no use of being in such a hurry.

G. Now, Sary, don't say boo! till it's over. Let 'em drive. Go it, Squire—hurry up the cakes; moderate, but don't splurge; slow, but all fired sartain. Wake snakes! Wont Bets Bradford howl when she hears I'm married?

The Squire proceeded slowly in the ceremony, keeping a watchful eye on the intended bride, whose mysterious manner excited a suspicion that a screw was loose somewhere. When, however, he came to the response of the groom, the solemn scene was disturbed by something like a stentorian yell—

G. Whoop! you better believe it! Of course I'll take 'er—who sputes it? What did I come here for? May bet your life on that. Go on Squire—now give her a haze.

The squire, in turn performed the service which was to extort acquiescence to her lover's wishes; but instead of the precious words "I will," gushing up from the pure fountain of a maiden heart, a "No!" blunted the senses of Squire and groom.

G. Great shakin' agers! Sary, what did you say?

B. No!

The squire looked perplexed, and Sary, laughing outright, began to move off.

G. Stand your ground, Sary! Squire, hold 'er. Go on with the sarvice—drive it through, and clinch on t'other side—rivit 'er now.

B. No you don't. You've no right to complain. You wanted to get married, but I'm not married! So pay the squire and run home before your "mamma knows you're out." And away skipped the little jilt, convulsed with laughter.

G. Great Cæsar, squire, its your fault. If you'd only put 'er right through, and hadn't stopped to mince matters, I'd had 'er.

The groom left with rather a rueful countenance, and appeared to be lost in deep meditation, which was only disturbed by the merry peals of a bevy of girls, who saluted him with boisherous laughter, a short distance from the Squire's; prominent among them, too, was Betsy Bradford. He is known as the young man who is only half married.

Devices to Evade the Law of Maine.

Mr. Hawkins at Albany in one of his speeches said the people of Maine resorted to amusing expedients to evade the law. If a man is intoxicated, they bring him up and compel him to tell where he got his liquor. On one occasion the drunkard told the house where he got it, but positively refused to say where in the house the liquor could be found, (the universal practice is to hide it.) The Sheriff found the woman of the house rocking her child, and singing it to sleep in the cradle. She told the sheriff to search the house if he pleased, but he would find none. He then examined the house thoroughly and found none. He then returned to the woman who was still there rocking and singing to her child, and asked where she kept her liquor? She said there had been none in the house since the law was made. He was about giving up in despair, and began to talk to her of her babe, and asked the privilege of looking at it. As he put his hand to raise the covering, she begged him to desist, for that it was a very cross child, and he would wake it and it would cry all the afternoon. He still sought the babe, and turned the covering from its face, and discovered that she was actually rocking and singing to the image of a baby filled with "the critter." He took it off, and left the woman childless and disconsolate.—Carson League.

LIFE EVERLASTING.—Dr. Homer Bostwick, of New York, maintains that death is not a necessary circumstance, and that a diet free from certain earthly particles which clog the constitution, will allow the human machine to run forever. The Doctor is now testing the experiment in his own person; if he succeeds in establishing his theory, although it will take some time, the rest of mankind will be duly informed.

THE FRIENDS OF TEMPERANCE MOVING.

The friends of Temperance are determined to make an effort to secure the passage of a Law similar to the Maine Law, during the present session of the Legislature. Five thousand copies of the following circular have been printed and will be sent all over the State. Tens of thousands of names will be attached to them previous to the meeting of the Legislature on the 20th of next month:

WE have arrived at a crisis in our cause—a crisis which if we are faithful, is full of promise and of hope. We have waged "a thirty years' war" against the most desolating and dreadful scourge of our race. We have gained many victories. We have redeemed thousands of captives. We have won trophies that angels might envy. But we have erred in a vital point, and hence have failed of complete success. We have left all his forts in the hands of the enemy. We have not spiked his cannon, destroyed his ammunition and broken his musquetry. Hence, as soon as we were off our guard we were again invaded. Our sons and brothers were seized and enslaved!

The time has come for a different contest—for A WAR OF EXTERMINATION!

The State on which the sun first shines in the morning has flung abroad this banner, and under it has marched to victory. Instead of chaining the mad dog, or selling licenses for keeping him, or fining his owners for letting him bite, or making them liable for the consequences of his bite, the temperance men of Maine cried "shoot the dog—catch him and kill him wherever he is found—let no man harbor him, for any sum or under any circumstances. He is dangerous. He will slay both body and soul. No money can compensate for his ravages."

We must up and follow this example! Until intoxicating liquors are outlawed and contraband, our work is not half done. We are liable to constant disappointment and reaction; for we leave the roots of the cancer in the body. Too much time has been spent in cutting and scarifying the surface—let us now make one united and vigorous effort for a complete and final victory. Let us resolve to ask for nothing less than a law that will BANISH and OSTRACISE this poison—that will set a mark upon it—that will turn every man's hand against it, so that whoever finds it shall destroy it. The day for modesty in this great movement has gone by. The land is full of light. The dreadful evils of intemperance are known to every child. The Legislature is bound to protect us from these evils! We must petition then. It is our right—nay, it is our DUTY. We must send up on the 20th of April all the names we can, asking for the MAINE LAW. We must not be trifled with while thousands are suffering and dying in order that a few may be enriched. In the name of humanity and of justice, and of the primal principles of society, we must demand protection—the only adequate protection for our friends and our children—a Law against the poison itself—againstit under any name or disguise, and in any place where it is not evidently needed for medicinal, or manufacturing purposes.

If this Legislature refuse our prayer, we must mark those who vote against it—we must attend primary meetings in order to prevent their nomination, or that of men of similar principles—we must refuse them our votes and labor for their defeat. For in this noonday of reform, no man can be a true patriot who sustains the poisoner of the homes, the bodies and the souls of his fellow citizens. Let him call himself a democrat, or a whig, if he will. Let party caucuses and conventions nominate him, if they will—we, Brethren, must reject him, or become traitors to humanity and to the best interests of our country. But we hope that we shall not be driven to such a contest. Send up your petitions by hundreds and thousands—get the name of every voter in your township—then on a separate sheet the names of their wives and sons and daughters—GIVE US THE SIGNATURE OF EVERY FRIEND OF TEMPERANCE, and the present Legislature will give us the Law.

We send you on the other side of the page a brief petition and also the pledge of the Social Order of Temperance, which has received about 5,000 signatures in this county, and is extending rapidly over the State. Circulate them promptly—act efficiently, for the time is short. Take a few days from your business, and devote them entirely to this work! Call your people together in the Court houses, the School houses, and the Churches. Read to them the Maine Law, and this pledge and petition! The cause is worthy of all the time and effort youcan devote to it. Better strike at once, and SLAY THE MONSTER, than have to defend your children, and tremble for their safety for years to come.

THE OPERATION OF THE MAINE LAW—MR. APPLETON'S LETTER.—The following is the letter of Mr. Appleton, alluded to yesterday:

PORTLAND, March 5th, 1852.

Dear Sir:—Your favor, making some inquiries in relation to the "Maine Liquor Law," was duly received, but I have been obliged to defer an answer until the present time.

The effect of the "Main Law" in diminishing crime and pauperism, and in preserving the quiet of the city, is most obvious to all. The City Marshal stated to me that it was impossible to estimate the difference between the good order now prevailing in the city, and that which existed before the law went into operation. Such, I understand, is the case in all the cities and towns in the State. The law works better even than its most ardent friends expected. It might, however, have presumed, closing all the rumshops in the State, and thus cutting off the means of intemperance, would effect a great change, in lessening crime of every kind, and in promoting the best interests and happiness of all classes of the community. Wherever intoxicating drinks are tolerated, crime and poverty and their attendant evils are sure to follow.

There is some opposition to the law, and comes chiefly from the dealers in intoxicating liquors, and moderate drinkers, but as far as I have been able to ascertain, it constantly increases in popularity; nor have I any apprehension that it will be repealed. The longer it remains on the statue-book the stronger it will grow in the approval of the people. It is an interesting fact, that among those who approve the law there are many who are notoriously intemperate, but who not now being able to supply a perverted appetite, having regained their self-control, and are now glad that the temptation is removed beyond their reach.

The great peculiarity of the Maine Law lies in the fact that it absolutely prohibits the sale of all intoxicating liquors, except for manufacturing and medicinal purposes. It has heretofore been the great error in all the legislation of the several States, relating to sale of strong drinks, that the sale has been authorized by law for the purpose of being used as a common drink. The only material restriction has been in respect to the number of persons who should sell.

We have tried the common system, granting licenses to select individuals, under various forms, for more than two hundred years, and the effect may everywhere be seen in the increase of intemperance. It is the necessary effect of the common legislation on this subject, to augment the evil which it proposes to restrain. Any legislation that tolerates the sale of intoxicating drinks is utterly worthless and impotent, in restraining intemperance. The experiment, it would seem, has been sufficiently tried to satisfy the most incredulous It were better to have no law on the subject than any which I have yet seen that tolerates the sale as a common drink. Entertaining these views, the friends of temperance in Maine could think of no legal remedy for the restrain of intemperance but its prohibition. To go back to the old system of granting licenses would savor too largely of the ridiculous, and would be in such utter disregard of the actual results of the system, that it could not be admitted for a moment.

The only question, it seems to me, now before the public touching this is, prohibiting, or the free sale everywhere. This is the issue to be met at the present time. And why should the sale not be prohibited? Prohibition is the rule in all other cases of wrong-doing. Why depart from this rule in relation to the greatest evil which can be inflicted on society. Very respectfully,

JAMES APPLETON.

LIQUOR SELLING.—A liquor seller at Bloomington recently determined to quit the business, and thereupon published the following manifesto:

TO THE PUBLIC:—I, Samuel W. Bonsall, do hereby publicly acknowledge that I have lately been engaged in the vilest and one of the most demoralizing occupations that was ever followed by any man, laying the least claims to respectability; I speak of the business of vending intoxicating liquors for gain. The time may have been when a man might have engaged in such a business without much compunctions of conscience; but how I could have engaged in, and so long followed, such an employment, in the present advanced state of civilization and moral reforms, is more than I can now account for.—When I have closed one of my most prosperous days in this business, and retired to rest, no tongue can describe the deep feelings of my heart, when none but God knew the emotions of my soul that stirred within.

When I closed my eyes to sleep, I could see before me my customers, and hear their bitter oaths and vulgar vociferations, almost as fresh as when they were uttered in my "Coffee house," (pardon the name.) The haggard countenances, the dirty and ragged forms; the reeling, staggering frames—the red eyes and bloated faces of my unhappy customers, all seemed to pass before my mental vision. And then the thought would come up in my mind, that perhaps at this very moment the wife of some of my customers may be weeping over a few expiring coals, while her little ones around her knee may be shivering with cold and crying for bread; and that all this wretchedness has been occasioned by my unhallowed business.

I therefore resolved that if my neighbors would help me to bear the sacrifice, I would offer the remnant of the "MONSTER" remaining in my hands as a burnt offering to Bacchus; not to his honor, but as an expression of the supreme contempt which I have contracted for his majesty, by too great intimacy with his bewitching person.

Well, my neighbors have done as I desired; and therefore I now promise, in this public manner, that I will never again engage in the liquor traffic, neither by the wholesale or retail, in this county, or anywhere else; and for the keeping of this promise inviolate, I hereby pledge my word and sacred honor as a man.

In witness whereof I hereunto subscribe my name in the town of Bloomington, in the county of Monroe, and State of Indiana, this 6th day of March, A. D. 1852.

Attest, S. W. BONSALL.
ELIJAH GOODWIN.

A POWERFUL DELINEATION.—The following is an extract from the address of Judge Johnson, of Georgia, in sentencing G. D. Cornet to death, for the murder without provocation, of W. W. Hailes, delivered on the 16th of September, 1851:

"Nor shall the place be forgotten in which occurred this shedding of blood. It was in one of the thousand ante-chambers of hell, which mark like plague spots the fair face of our State. You need not be told that I mean a tippling shop—the meeting place of Satan's minions, and the foul cess-pool which, by spontaneous generation, breeds and nurtures all that is loathsome and disgusting, in profanity and babbling, and vulgarity, and Sabbath breaking. I would not be the owner of a groggery for the price of this globe converted into precious ore. For the pitiful sum of a dime, he furnished the poison which made the deceased a fool, and converted this trembling culprit into a demon.—How paltry this price of two human lives! This traffic is tolerated by law, and, therefore, the vender committed an offence not cognizable by earthly tribunals; but in the sight of Him who is unerring wisdom, he who deliberately furnishes the intoxicating draught which inflames men to anger, and violence, and bloodshed is particeps criminis in the moral turpitude of the deed. Is it not high time that these sinks of vice and crime should be held rigidly accountable to the laws of the land, and placed under the ban of an enlightened and virtuous public opinion?"

THE SORROWFUL BOY.—A writer in the Vermont Chronicle relates the following as a fact which he learned from good authority,—"I wish I was dead," said a little boy to his mother. "Why?" asked his kind mother. "Why, the boys all pester me so about father, and I don't want to go again, in the night to the store after him." His mother talked to him, but though: he did not feel in earnest about it. But one day, when she had returned from a visit, she inquired for the children, and found all but this boy. She looked, she called, but no answer. She went to the barn, as it was just growing dark. She opened the door, and there in one corner, was her little sensitive boy, hanging by the neck. She burst into tears. "Oh my son, my son, is it you?" She felt his cold hands, and he was dead. And at the funeral, his father promised to drink no more rum:—"I have forever done." Along time he kept his promise. One day, however, Deacon P. was in the store; and Deacon P. was a good man; he drank but little. He asked for some brandy. And while he drank it, he saw that same man who had been a drunkard looking at him; and he saw too that he was very uneasy; he walked about; he sat down. Again he would go to the door as if going away. He was in silent thought. At length he went to the counter and asked for a little brandy; "I may drink a little as well as Deacon P." He did drink; and became a confirmed drunkard again.

RESULTS OF INTEMPERANCE.—Henry T. Russell, not many years ago one of our well known, prosperous and most respected citizens—the kind husband and happy parent, died day before yesterday near Madison, Ind., in a fit of delirium tremens, amidst the most abject poverty. But one human being was present at that scene of death—the wife. She only was left to weep and mourn for the departed and his estrangement from the path of rectitude. His children, cherished objects of his love and pride were gone—one to the House of Refuge, and two to their cold grave. What a fearful warning to beware of the tempting cup.—Cin. Gaz.

The Maine Law

Passed the Massachusetts Senate last Tuesday by a vote of 30 to 9. The question has yet to be decided in the House.—The House of Representatives of New Hampshire will be Temperance by a considerably higher majority than last year. The Senate, too, will be split nearer the middle on the Temperance question than it was last year. And on the whole, we think we may congratulate our friends on the moral certainty of the passage of the Maine Law next June, in the Granite State. It is known that there are only two men in the Maine Legislature who would vote for its repeal in that State. There is a fair prospect now that it will pass the Parliament of New Brunswick, and though it was defeated in the Rhode Island House on the 30th ult., it has since passed the Senate with an amendment, submitting the question to a vote of the people. The vote in the Senate stood yeas 16, nays 15.

Of all the laws ever devised to make the right of property stable and secure, it is the most direct, comprehensive, and effectually conservative. It is the law in every respect and we hope soon to see it enacted in Indiana.

Watchman, What of the Night?

There is a general desire on the part of the friends of Temperance, to know what progress our cause is making in various parts of the Union and the world. To give that information is the object of this article.

In Maine the glorious old Temperance ship rides triumphant over the opposing waves of Liquordom, and is fast reaching the harbor of the Land of No Rum. In the Legislature of this State but two members can be found ready to repeal their excellent liquor laws. What a comment upon its value and its popularity.

In New Hampshire the people are moving in their might. A petition signed by men and women is before their Legislature, and a very stringent bill has been introduced for the suppression of the liquor traffic. If it should fail, the next Legislature, already elected, is very strongly in its favor. Before the 4th of July next, the Maine law will be the law of New Hampshire.

In Massachusetts the Maine law has passed the Senate by a vote of 30 to 9, and is now before the House of Representatives. A petition signed by one hundred and seventy thousand persons, more than seventy thousand of whom are legal voters, has been been presented to the Legislature, and the law is bound to pass.

The State of New York, the most populous in the Union, is thoroughly aroused, and petitions upon petitions are being daily sent up to the Legislature to crush this mighty evil, Intemperance, which is scattering ruin and death around. At our last advices, petitions signed by about three hundred and seventy-five thousand persons were before the Legislature, but we fear without success.

In Ohio, the third State in our glorious confederacy, the people are fully alive to the great importance of putting a stop to the vile traffic in ardent spirits, and thousands of petitions are in circulation, asking for a law similar to the one in operation in Maine. At every temperance meeting, where the votes are taken, they are unanimous for the destruction of strong drink. Gen. Carey lectured lately in the Penitentiary, and took the votes of the convicts, as to what brought them there, and four-fifths responded, strong drink! He then explained the Maine Law, and took the vote whether they would have such a law. The response was unanimous in its favor, but their Legislature, like ours, is dodging the question, and we fear will do nothing.

New Jersey sent up one hundred and sixty thousand petitioners to her Legislature, but they were unavailing. The Temperance bill was defeated by a small majority.

In Pennsylvania the people are waking up. The following gems of truth we cut from The Pennsylvania Freeman:

"Rum holds the helm of State. It begins its wicked game at the caucus, follows it at the polls, and comsummates it at the legislative hall. It overrides principle by the might of perverted appetite—deadens conscience and the sense of honor — casts away the offers of grace and the proffered treasures of religious truth, and renders man the willing instrument for any social, civil, or political crime."

Hear the same paper again on the subject of freedom, in this connection. Who can deny but some will do all this, when under the influence of Rum?

"Much has freedom to hope from Temperance. Liberty can make no progress, secure no triumph, in a community ruled by sensuality. Morality, education and order must 'make straight her ways.' Look at the miscreants that power hires to execute the behests of slavery. Who are they? Men that have been steeped from boyhood in rum and infamy, and raked out from the lowest haunts, the darkest lanes of city debauchery. Their name is legion, who may be found amongst us ready to 'sell their birth-rights' and betray freedom for a glass of brandy. Rum must be rooted out of our soil ere the seeds of liberty will take a permanent hold. Then let us fail not to labor with an earnest zeal for the Maine Law."

In Rhode Island, although we obtained a majority of the legal voters to our petition, our bill was defeated by the legislature.

In Connecticut a great effort is making to carry the spring elections for Temperance and secure a temperance majority in the Legislature. We hope they may succeed.

In the Southern Sates, there is a decidedly growing temperance feeling, and many of their cities and towns refuse license to sell liquors.

In the Canadas and Provinces, and in England and California, we are gaining ground, and in our own State we are preparing for a glorious victory.

It is a common remark that temperance is going down. Mr. Hewlett, a Southern Lecturer, thus replies to this remark:

"Temperance is going down." "Yes ladies and gentlemen, I must acknowledge that it is going down. I saw it in Nova Scotia, and it was going down there. I saw it in Florida, and it was going down in Florida. It was going down all along the route. I find it going down in Alabama. It is going down in California. It is going down in England. It is going down in Canada. It is going down all over the Union. It is going down all over North America, and it is destined to go down throughout all Christendom."

Yes, and though the Temperance pill is rather hard for some of your anti-progress, anti-reform, anti-moral, anti-enterprise, anti-improvement, anti-new-light rum-suckers, and nauseating to your absurd sticklers for what they inconsistently term their "rights," public opinion will finally make it go down with them.

The glorious principles of our cause must triumph, and though the fight may continue long after our heads have whitened for the grave and we are carried to our final resting place beneath the clods of the valley, yet is our hope strong that the child is now living that shall see the day when not a drop of intoxicating liquor shall be sold as a beverage in the length and breadth of our beloved land. God grant our hope may be realized.

Temperance Memorials.

The State Temperance Central Committee determining that no stone shall be left unturned, which can possibly have a bearing upon the enactment of a good temperance law, have ordered the printing of 5000 copies of a circular containing an address to the people, a memorial to the Legislature, and the Pledge of the Social Order of Temperance.

These circulars will be immediately circulated in every part of the State, and we hope every person into whose hands they may fall will use them to the best advantage, both in circulating the Memorials for signatures, and using their best endeavor to establish in their midst the Social Order of Temperance. We publish below the Memorial, and hope our friends will one and all cut it out, paste it to a sheet of paper, have it well filled with signatures, and send it to their Representative or Senator forthwith.

The address will be found in another column.

TEMPERANCE PETITION.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Indiana:

We, your constituents, do respectfully petition your honorable bodies to protect us, our families, and the community from the evils of intemperance, by giving us a law similar to that of the State of Maine.

Park County.

We have received the proceedings of a public temperance meeting, held at Annapolis, Parke county, which occupy too much room for publication in full. The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That the liquor traffic is an evil, social, moral, and political.

Resolved. That it is constitutional, expedient, and right to legislate the traffic out of custom; that the good order of society, the promotion of every moral, and social virtue; the peace and dignity, and wealth and intelligence of our State, all claim the immediate and effective suppression of the liquor traffic.

Resolved, That the essential principles of the Maine Liquor Law, the confiscation and destruction of intoxicating liquors, when kept for sale unlawfully, as sustained by the analogy of other laws, against contraband trafficers, is just and constitutional in theory and perfectly irresistable in practice.

Resolved, That we pledge our untiring efforts propelled as we are by the tears of injured innocence, and the cries and walings of thousands, never to relax our energies until the Legislature of this State, shall have heard our cries, granted our petitions, and placed among the statutes of our country, a law similar to the one in the State of Maine.

Resolved, That we will withhold our support from any political aspirant for a seat in our State Legislature, who will not give to us the most indubitable evidence of his entire willingness to suppress, by legal enactment, the sale of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to the editors of the Parke County Whig, and Temperance Chart, politely requesting their publication.

Strong Demonstration.—Out of 1200 legal voters in the city of Zanesville, Muskingum county, over 900 have signed petitions for the Maine Law. This is evidently the banner city. Reason why? That place has been the most thoroughly canvassed.

Cloverdale Temperance Meeting.

We have received the proceeings of a very spirited temperance meeting, held at Cloverdale, Putnam county, and regret that we have space only for the resolutions adopted, which are as follows:

Resolved, That we use all laudable means to elect such men to our State Legislature as will have the moral courage to endeavor to secure the passage of such laws as will have in their tendency, the total suppression of the manufacture and traffic in ardent spirits, except for medical purposes.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the members of the present Legislature, (with a few honorable exceptions,) have failed to meet the wishes of a large majority of the citizens of Indiana, on the liquor subject.

Resolved, That we will not support any man for the office of Governor, Lieut. Governor, or for the State Legislature who is not in favor of a restricting law similar to the Maine Liquor Law. Neither will we support, for any State or county office, or give our patronage in business, to any man who is known to be unfriendly to temperance.

How the Maine Temperance Law was Passed.—Gen. Neal Dow, the father of the Maine Law, in giving, by request, a history of the passage of that law, to the temperance committee of the Massachusetts Legislature, said: "The adoption of that law was not spasmodic but the result of long thought and labor. We had tried for years to have some effectual law passed, in Maine, for the suppression of the rum traffic, but the Legislature would throw our bills under the table—two-thirds of the members being the keepers of grog shops. He then appealed to the people, to know whether they would continue to be the mere instruments of politicians, that is, whether they would be used merely for the success of this or that party aspirant for office.

The people found on consideration that it was not very important to them whether Mr. A. should have all the honors of a particular office, instead of Mr. B., but it was important that they should have a law to stop that evil which is the parent of all evils. Being addressed on this subject, they soon made a demand that was not to be disregarded. In 1849 a law passed on the last day of the session, and the Governor put it in his pocket. But the people brought it back again, to be passed by the Legislature. When it passed in 1851 only about 8000 names of petitioners were presented. The people had spoken elsewhere, and so well had they made their will felt, that many who who were opposed to the bill, voted for it, and the Governor, who was known to be opposed to it, and was expected to veto it, remembering the fate of his predecessor, gave it his signature." Let the people of Indiana, who want a similar law—and three-fourths of them do—rely less on petitions and more on men. Let them speak at the ballot box, the only place where they can speak, as sovereigns, and no longer bend the knee, as supplicants, to their servants, the Legislature. They have certainly been repelled often enough to feel that self-respect requires them to speak in tones of authority.—Brookvilte American.

An Argument for Drinking.—"Now I ax you fellers, who's the best citizen, him that supports guverment or him as does'nt? Why, him as does, in course. We support government, every one as drinks supports government that is if he lickers at a license house. Every blessed drop of licker that he swallers thar is taxed to pay salary of them ar great officers, such as mayors and corporationers, Hie Constables, Presidents, and custom-house gentlemen. Spose we was to quit drinkin—why guverment must fail; it couldn't help it no how. That's the very rezun I drinks. I don't like grog, I mortally hate it. If I followed my own inclination, I'd rather drink buttermilk, or ginger pop, or Dearbon's sody water. But I lickers for the good of my country to set an example of patriotism and virchuos self-denial to the rizen generation."—Straw Sucker

Another Grand Division.—The Grand Division of Canada East was formed on the 7th inst., at Montreal. This is indeed gratifying news.

☞ A fellow who was rather the worse for liquor, accosted a colored chamber-maid, at one of our hotels, with — "Pray, my dear, was your mother as black as you are?"

"I don't know as to that," was the reply; "I wonder if your father was as blue as you are."

For the Temperance Chart.

What shall we do Next? is a question which should come up to the mind of every temperance man in the State of Indiana, for it is a question in which all are interested, it is a question of great moment, it is a question which concerns the present and future generations; what shall the the friends of this great moral movement do next?

Shall we acknowledge ourselves defeated and give up the fight? Shall we lay down our arms and permit our enemies to triumph? Shall we stop now, after we have endured much expense, much wear and tear of lungs and fatigue of body?

Methinks I hear the voice of thousand saying No, the voice of the reclaimed drunkard says no, the voice of the drunkard's suffering wife says no, the voice of every friend of humanity says no, the voice from every quarter is "down with the liquor traffic."—But what course shall we take to secure the end for which we labor, shall we try moral suasion? Yes, but we have been trying this for many years, and we find this will not do all. Those who are now engaged in the traffic are such as cannot be reached by moral suasion alone. Then we want something more, we want legal suasion, we want a law that will suppress, yes crush this infamous traffic.

But what course shall we take to secure this end? Shall we again petition our Legislature that they will make us such a law?—Twice have we sent our petitions before them, twice have we asked them to make us a law would suppress the traffic, and a temperance convention has been held even under the roof of our legislative halls. But what has been the result, what has been the fate of our petitions? It is too easy to tell! they have been slighted, our supplications have been disregarded, and we have been spurned with contempt. Our petitions went before political anti-temperance men, and others who would be temperance men, but were afraid of their popularity at home. It is vain, after these things, to hope to be able to accomplish any thing by petitioning. But there is one way left for us to secure this great end. Let no man be elected to our Legislature who is not in favor of a law that will secure the suppression of this traffic.—This is the only hope, let us have the Maine Law, as we see this is the only law ever enacted that is effectual in suppressing the sale of intoxicating liquors. Then let us elect men who are in favor of the Maine Law and nothing short of it. But I hear some saying this is running temperance into politics. Be this as it may, but I would ask if there ever was a political question before the minds of the people half so important as this? What political question was ever brought up, in which so many were interested, in which so many widows, mothers, sons, and daughters had such a deep interest, in which such a vast amount of money and expense to the State was concerned, with which so much misery and suffering was connected as with this.

At different periods in the history of different States, when but a few persons were dying of milk-sickness, several hundred dollars have been offered for the discovery of the cause of this sickness, and no one ventured to say that this was not a fit subject for legislative action. Here we know the cause, and see the effects, we also know the remedy, but refuse to apply it, and when but a few died in the former case, thousands are perishing annually now.

Then I would appeal to every temperance man in the State to examine into this matter seriously, and then act, not as a whig, not as a democrat, not as belonging to this section of country or that section, but as a temperance man, as a friend to humanity. And may the time soon come when our beloved State shall be placed in the catalogue of those who shall banish this infernal traffic from their borders.

The Last of the Tea Party.—David Kennison, the last of the Boston Tea Party, died at Chicago, at the residence of Wm. Mack, on Wednesday morning. His dying request was that the City Common Council would grant a lot in the City Cemetery for his last resting place and erect a suitable monument over his grave. The Council granted the request, and the Military of Chicago were making preparations to give a fitting burial to the remains of the "old veteran of more than a hundred summers."

MANCHESTER, March 20th, 1852.

Mr. Editor: — You have, doubtless, observed that men who have steadily opposed all temperance moves heretofore, and have never failed on all occasions to speak disparagingly of temperance men, and their glorious and benevolent cause, are, since the real friends of the cause are determined to have stringent law for the repression of dramshops, greatly in favor of moral suasion, which they have always heretofore opposed, and are awfully alarmed with fear that the temperance fanatics will ruin this good cause by their ultraism, that has caused them so many sleepless nights, and such a vast amount of watch and anxiety to strangle in its infancy, and to throttle as it advanced in years and showed signs of strength. Well, that most contemptible class of all God's creation, the hypocrites are not all dead yet.

But to my story. We have a pretty clever, sober, industrious, old gentleman who has always been in the habit of taking his drams when he pleased, but not to any excess, who has always bitterly opposed our temperance operations, voted with the rummies for license, talked loudly at the polls and other places, of the dishonesty of temperance men in signing their names to more than one pledge for the purpose of making a false impression abroad, and all other slang about temperance and its advocates that the whisky vender has used, and may lawfully use to prop his dishonest and damning business. He denounced temperance men and enthusiasts and fanatics. As a matter of course he is Sir Oricle with the whisky men. It is not so much on account of a perverse nature that he is found arrayed against this philanthropic and heaven blessed cause, as it is a disposition, growing out of a stubborn nature somewhat in love with self, to reject all new ideas, and creeds, and opinions of his fellow man, and dogmatically contend for opinions and sentiments that he imbibed in his youth, in the East, some half a century ago. He scouts, with the air of one who knows, all western notions and opinions, no matter how old they may be, and all new ones no matter where they originated.

Reader, you must pardon me for occupying so much space in describing the hero of so short a tale.

Well, the other day my dogmatical old friend was descanting upon, and denouncing the new-fangled doctrine, as he termed it, or going to the polls with our temperance principles, and he pronounced hard words against all who advocated it, and went on to say that temperance was progressing finely by moral suasion, and would prevail if enthusiasts and fanatics would let it alone and not ruin it with their ultraisms and nonsense. A bystander observed to the old gentleman, "If you had had your way in this matter, moral suasion would have failed, as you have always from the beginning opposed all the temperance movements." This brought my friend to a stand, and he said, "Have I encouraged drunkenness." "Yes," was the prompt reply. Thereupon our orator went into a towering passion at this gross insult and vile slander, as he called it.

I thought to myself, is it possible that this man, after throwing every obstacle in his power in the way of temperance reform, and speaking lightly and disrespectfully always of its advocates, is so deceived about his real standing in society, that he does not know that it is apparent to everybody that he and such men as himself, are the men that sustain dram-sellers in the spread of drunkenness? Let such men cease their hostility to temperance, and dram-shops would be crushed in a year.

Is he so blind as not to know, that he has gone hand in hand with the whisky-seller in denouncing temperance and its advocates? consequently has been encouraging drunkenness, vice, and immorality? If so, I have only to say, "Oh! the folly of sinners." If such blindness has come upon the opponents of temperance, that they cannot see their real standing in community, something out to be done to remove the scales from their eyes. Let them have light. As our cause has suffered more from these sober and seemingly disinterested opponents, who pretend to be friendly to the cause, and constantly find fault with everything that temperance men do, than all the opposition of dram-sellers and their dupes, it is our duty, as friends of this great and good cause, to strip off these hypocritical garbs, whether worn intentionally or not, and let them stand out in their naked deformity. "He that is not for us is against us."

Mr. Editor, have you heard for the last two years an opponent of the cause of sobriety commence a speech, or harangue against temperance or its friends, but what he commenced it in this wise: "I am as great a friend of temperance as any one, but"— Such consummate hypocracy ought to be exposed. If men who have a regard for their character will aid the dram-seller in his war upon the best interests of society —a war upon the morality and mentality of community—let them reap the reward of such a course. Let them be branded as the advocates of doggeries, and drunkenness.

DARLINGTON, Ind., March 11, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD: — I take pleasure in saying to you that the temperance cause in this town and vicinity is gaining ground.— About three weeks since we presented a petition to the grocery keepers here, signed by 159 of our best citizens, of every age and sex, requesting him to abandon the nefarious and unjust traffic in ardent spirits, but without avail.

Although defeated in our first efforts, yet we were not discouraged, accordingly he was yesterday arraigned before a tribunal of justice, and there made to feel that the wrath of an injured community would be showered upon him, in consideration of this he prefered to sell his stock of liquors, and never again attempt its sale in this place, which was accepted accordingly last night, in the presence of at least 100 persons—the liquid poison was consigned to the flames. I also send you the following resolutions, passed at one of our public meetings, which you are respectfully solicited to publish in your Temperance Chart.

WHEREAS, the people of the State of Indiana have long suffered all the long train of evils consequent to the traffic of Alcoholic liquors as a beverage, and as such traffic is made legal to great detriment of the life and property of the citizens of said State, and as we are a law abiding people, and the Legislature our only means of redress, it is therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sentiment of the citizens of this vicinity, that the Maine Law or some similar and equally stringent should at once pass our Legislature, and become the law of the land.

Resolved, That in our opinion, the people of this State are fully ripe for such a law, and will carry out and enforce its provisions.

Resolved, That we, as members of the various political parties, will support no man for office who is not a firm and uncompromising temperance man, and in favor of "legal suasion" for the extermination of intemperance.

In conclusion, Starlight Division has lately received several valuable accessions, and with Love, Purity, and Fidelity, for our guide, we expect to prove triumphant in every undertaking. The Daughters, (Banner Union,) too are in the field, with a fair prospect of accomplishing much good; success attend them.

Yours in L. P. F.,
WILLIAM M. LOWMAN, R. S.

SPRINGVILLE, LAWRENCE Co., Ind. February 20th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD: — As yet nothing has appeared in your most excellent paper from this place. Our Division is doing well, and although we are not gaining many members, what we are doing is being felt. We have had strong opposition, but when the three temperance Orders all unite, the Sons, the Daughters, and the Cadets, the strongest opposition will give way.

Although we have done much there is much to be done yet, and as long as church members will drink, and give to their neighbors there will be much to do. Not many miles from this place, a few days ago, a very prominent member in the Bapist church, rode into the Squire's office on a few gallons of king alcohol. This a pretty example for a deacon in the church, and a man that always claims to be a temperance man. What a shame that respectable men will be led by the king in these days of temperance reform, for the sake of the name of Squire or some other little office.

Brethren, let us be on our watch, and let all such examples come before the public. Tell them to the face, print them in the news papers, so that they may be known and read of all men.

This brings me to notice the action of our Senator from this county. He has ever promised to do the will of the people, and has always been a trust worthy candidate until the present. I suppose he thought it would not be very popular to vote for a temperance law. I think he would have been more popular if he had resigned his seat before he defined his position. A temperance man all over in side and out side, and at the test, no where. This county will remember him, and he will remember that King Alcohol don't rule here.

I am glad to see these things noticed in your paper. Yours in L. P. and F.,
TELLER.

For the Temperance Chart.

BRO. WOODWARD — I wish to say to our friends in Indiana, to prepare for a hard fight in our State on the subject of the liquor traffic. I am well satisfied the Legislature will do nothing for us this session; and I wish to let my friends know where I stand. I am a decided Democrat, but when the cause of temperance comes up, and when I am satisfied this question must be settled at the ballot box, and I know many of my old friends in politics will stand by me in this struggle, I am gratified to meet men every day who say this question shall be settled at once. We had hoped for better things of our Representatives, but they must take the responsibility of their own cause. Never was old Putnam so anxions to put a stop to the sale of liquor, as they are at this time. If one of our friends was murdered by the hand of the midnight assassin what a human cry would be raised! And who of us has not been called to give up some dear friend? I answer none. While the Lord lets me live I shall continue this war, what! shall I be called to mourn for the fall of a friend who has falled by the hand of the Rum seller, and hold my peace! "If I do let my right hand forget her cunning, and let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." I see worse than the wolf coming and I wish to give the alarm. I had a thousand times rather give my children to the wolf, than have them break my heart by filling a drunkard's grave. I can't write nor talk for the public, but I can vote and think. I wish to hear from our friends from all parts of the State.

Yours, in L. P. and F.,
JOHN S. JENNINGS.

BRO. WOODWARD: — At a meeting of Warsaw Division, No. 150, S. of T. on last evening, the sum of one dollar was appropriated by a vote of said Division, to assist in constructing the National Monument, which please find herein enclosed and place in the general fund. Our Division feels highly gratified to have the privilege of aiding in such a laudable undertaking. Our Division has had hard rowing, partly on account of a special temperance law passed in 1850, for our county. The law raised the indignation of the rum drinkers, and some professing to be good temperance men, and all was immediately charged to the Sons of Temperance, and at the next election an anti-temperance man was elected, and the law repealed, but amidst all the opposition from the different sources, the Division still holds to its integrity, and is at this time in a prosperous condition, and the strong prejudice heretofore existing, is giving way.— The Washingtonians are now holding monthly meetings in the M. E. Church, and many are signing the pledge. We have a splended choir of singers, who delight the audience with their temperance songs. We would be pleased to have a visit from our district lecturer, to cheer us while battling in the good cause of temperance. It is our full intention to be represented in the next Grand Division.

At the last April election our town voted License, and the result was the establishing of one slaughter yard, or doggary in our midst, but the next election, I have no doubt will turn the scales and vote No License. We have not much to expect from our Senator this winter, for it is said, and that without contradiction, that he deposited money in the hands of his friends, to purchase liquor, and in some places had the old black bottles labeled "Washburn Liquor," or Washburn Senator, but my word for it, this winter closes his career as Senator. I think I am not mistaken when I say that temperance voters in this region of country, will no longer support any candidate for office that is not a sentimental temperance man. I do not mean by that, that he must belong to the Sons of Temperance, or Washingtonians. If in my power to do so I will attend the next Grand Division to be held at Peru. Yours in L. P. and F.,
PETER L. RUNYAN, D. G. W. P.

NEWTOWN, FOUNTAIN COUNTY, Ind., March 8, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—We have been for the last few months past, and are now, in the midst of one of the most spirited revivals in the cause of Temperance, which has been witnessed in our community for several years. The people were aroused to a sense of their duty, by different lectures delivered by Bros. Ross, Pease, and Hall, who visited us during the last six months. Temperance is on the onward march—public opinion is being awakened to the importance of this matter.

A memorial with some 400 names has been sent up to the Legislature. And we see by the last accounts that some 100,000 names have been sent up to the Legislature from different parts of the State, and yet they are afraid that they will go in advance of public opinion, by making a law to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors. Well might it be said that the Ohio Penitentiary is in advance of the Indiana Legislature.

Bro. Woodward, give us the proceedings of the Legislature from time to time, and mark every man that opposes a good temperance law, so that we may remember him hereafter, and I will assure such a man that he will not get our support for any office hereafter.

Our Division at this time is in a healthy and prosperous condition — we have initiations nearly every meeting, and sometimes as many as five at one meeting. Be it known that we are not a new Division, — that our increase and prosperity at this time is not owing to the novelty of the thing, by any means, but rather to sober thought and calm deliberation.

There has been three new Divisions organized in our county within the last six months, and they are doing well. We have now in this county seven Divisions, and they are all doing their duty, and I think that intemperance will soon be banished from our midst.

As for our town we have no doggery in the place, but several miles south of us is a nuisance called a grocery, where whisky and pond water are kept to destroy a portion of our community. We have the monster down, and with God's help, we intend to keep him down, and instead of having our little town a byword for intemperance, we intend that it shall be a pattern of sobriety and morality.

Yours in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,
ISAAC HAUPT, P. W. P.
of Newtown Div., No. 162, S. of T.

MIDDLETOWN DIVISION, No. 213, March 12, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—Your excellent paper the "Chart," comes duly to our Division, and I have been noticing in the different Divisions giving a short detail of their condition. It seems as though none of our Division have courage enough to writh to you the condition of it. We organized in February 1848, and since that we have installed upwards of eighty, and with the exception of about twenty who now belong were minus the principle that more ought to possess, and slipped overboard. It is as Bro. Pease said when he was giving as lectures they are minus a back bone and can slip out of most anything that has any principle about it. But as I said before, we have twenty-odd members now, that are of the right stamp, and will stike to it, I think, as long as they live.

Before we organized our Division our town was visited daily by drunkards, but now the thing is changed, and we are no more troubled with them, but there is one doggery yet, and we have been trying to kill it, but have not yet completed our object. We petitioned to the Legislature last winter, to enact us a law to prohibit the traffic in town or within one mile thereabouts, and they did so, and the law is now in force and this doggery man has broken the law often, but at our last fall court our Grand Jury was perfectly ignorant about it and did not get the first bill against him; but if we all live, we will make him smoke next court. I spoke above about Bro. Pease. He was here some four or five weeks since, and gave us three good lectures which created a good deal of excitement, and has done the cause great good, since which our Division has been prospering finely. We look to the old—"There is a good time coming boys," and toddle on.

Yours in L. P. and F.

SHELBYVILLE, IND., March 16, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—By a close perusal, I find the Temperance Chart an excellent sheet and a welcome messenger, and is doing a great amount of good in forwarding the great cause of temperance in this quarter. We are an infant Division, having had a hard struggle with the hydra-headed monster; but thanks to the Great Patriarch above who directs the destinies of poor fallen man. We have bearded the lion at last, and looked the monster full in the face, and are still increasing steadily. We had four initiations week before last, and some reclaimed members who left us long enough to look around them and see the ground they occupied, and have returned with promises of amecdment for the future, trembling under the weight of guilt of discarding so good so noble and generous an institution.

Yours truly, M.

EVANSVILLE, IND., March 16, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—It is with great pleasure that I see the interest which is being taken in the "Railroad City," in the great cause of Temperance, and I also regret to learn that the bill introduced into the Senate by the Temperance Dommittee, has been defeated. Perhaps it will be the means of procuring the passage of a better bill, and I hope it may. Last Thursday evening, the Cadets of Temperance in this city, gave a very fine entertainment at Foster Hall. Everything passed off in an agreeable manner. Speeches from the Rev. Mr. McCarer and from the Bro. Secretary of the Section, added much to the interest of the occasion.— The Evansville Brass Band discoursed sweet music, and everything during the whole evening was pleasant and entertaining. The Cadets are up and doing, and exert a useful influence over this community, that will not fail to be felt and noticed. Our cause is the cause of sobriety, health, and happiness, and with the idea cefore us that we are endeavoring to instill into the mind of youth the principles of Truth, Virtue, and Temperance, we should go on, until victory shall c-own our efforts. The day has passed when men who poison their fellow men, can be induced to forsake their business by moral suasion. No, fortunes are made at it too quick, the demands of the poor drunkard are too urgent for them to desist while he has a cent left. It is too late to endeavor to persuade men—they must be driven. We look to the Legislature, as our last resort, and by petitions we ask them to put a stop to the accursed traffic. Sons of Temperance remember this at the ballot box. When men are nominated for office, let your only question be "Are you for the MAINE LAW?" Let the voters of Indiana rise in their might and put temperance men in the Legislature. Then will there be some hopes of banishing this monster from our land. Until they do, I am fearful, that we will do nothing. "I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say."

In T. V. and T.,
I remain yours, C. K. Jr.

A MEMENTO.—A poor drunkard, not long since, in a fit of delirium, occasioned by drink, cut his throat with his razor, and as the purple current was flowing, he wiped the blood from his instrument of death, and handing it to his friend remarked, "when you look at that, remember Dolan, on Front street, who sold me the liquor!"

If all the remembrances of the villiany of liquor sellers were collected together, we should have a rare and extensive cabinet. And oh! what associations would gather around this exhibition of the instruments of torture! They cannot be gathered up— every family has something to remind it of the liquor seller. And what a reflection to those engaged in this trade of death, that among all these mementoes scattered every where, there is not a solitary one which can bring up pleasant memories.—Ohio Organ.

A BIRD SEEKING LODGINGS. — During the cold storm of Monday night, at a late hour, a small bird knocked for admittance at the window of a hotel which happened to be illuminated by the light within. The occupant supposing the noise to be the pattering of the hail against the pane, gave it no attention; presently the 'rapping' commenced again, when the window was opened and in flew the little creature, apparently delighted to get into comfortable quarters, and confident of shelter and safety. After coursing about the room as if to bathe itself in the warm air, it quietly selected its place, and depositing its head under its wing, went to sleep. It is difficult to say which of the occupants of the same apartment felt best satisfied with themselves, or slept more peacefully through the night. As the day broke, out broke the bird's grateful acknowledgments to the protector of us all, in a song, which for so tiny a bird, and a stranger, was remarkably loud and ecstatic. It was nearly famished, and ate and drank with an enviable appetite for its breakfast. Being now able to take care of itself, and not choosing to be dependent longer on charity, the little fellow insisted on being released; the window was opened and out he flew, to share his fortune with his tribe, thanking his friend as well as he could for his hospitality.—Albany Argus.

A CAT IN THE MEAL.—Two barrels marked "new corn meal" came into the depot in this city by Carpenter's Express, directed to no one. Marshal Jones, happening to be round, thought it looked like a suspicious heap. "It may be meal," said he, "but there can be no harm to examine it." Accordly, he waited upon the express man and took the barrels into his own custody. On opening them, each one contained another barrel, surrounded by a little "new corn meal"—one of them full of rum, and the other full of Brandy. As they were directed to nobody, nobody has lost anything.— Maine Farmer.

☞ Gen. Cass was invited recently, while at Centreville, Michigan, to drink. "No," said the General, "I never drank liquor nor used tobacco, and I do not wish to begin at Centreville."

A Western paper says, "We saw a woman carrying a big hog home from market on Saturday, upon her shoulder. For the benefit of those who may think her husband ought to have done it, we will state that she served him the same way a short time before."

The inference is that the old lady was in the habit of carrying hogs.

A NOBLE MAN.—A blacksmith in Erie county, Ohio, was requested, by a wealthy Distiller, to put him up a lightning rod on his distillery. The honest son of Vulcan instantly refused, remarking to the whisky maker, "If it is the Lord's will to send a stroke of lightning to burn up your distillery, I am not the man who would do anything to avert it." This blacksmith is a member of the Ohio Legislature.

"If a million of people," says the Rev. H. W. Beecher, "should annually pour into the State of Indiana, for fifteen years, the soil would sustain them. If not a kernel of grain were raised in another State of the Union, Indiana, if put to its full capacity, could easily supply every one."

Specie continues to be an article of export. The steamer Franklin, which sailed from New York for Liverpool on the 13th, took $112,000.

☞ The County Jail of Harrisonburg, Va., has been purchased by the Odd Fellows and the Sons of Temperance to convert it into a Hall.

Policies at Joint Stock and Mutual rates, contain no condition except as usual in Life Insurance.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thought has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

PROSPECTUS

SECOND VOLUME

OF

THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.

Published in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and devoted to the Interests of the Order of the Temple of Honor.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

THIS Popular Magazine, having met with the hearty approval of the Temple Order, wherever it circulated during its first year, will commence its Second Volume on the first of September, 1851. It will as heretofore be issued on the first of every month, each number containing

THIRTY TWO PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER,

in pamphlet form, convenient for binding—making at the end of the year a volume of three hundred and eighty-four pages—at the low price of

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The established character of this Magazine—its approval and recommendation by National, Grand, and Subordinate Temples—the liberal terms on which it is published, placing it within the reach of every member of the Order—and the will render it a desirable companion for every Templar who wishes to supply his family with good temperance reading, and keep himself posted in the doings and progress of the Order of which he is a member. This Magazine is the first and ONLY publication ever devoted particularly to the Temple Order, and is not confined to any locality, but is designed to be the Organ of the whole Order. This gives it a peculiar claim on the Fraternity for encouragement and support.

While it aims to be the expositor of the Temple Order, it will give an impartial and faithful history of all important temperance movements, whether by individual or associated action, or legislative enactments and thus form a valuable journal for every friend of temperance and morality.

The services of several able writers are already secured for its pages; and, as the subscription list increases, more will be added. No labor or expense, consistent with our means, will be spared to make it just what the temperance portion of community desire: a good family Magazine not surpassed by any in the country.

TERMS: One Copy for one Year (12 numbers), $1 00
" " " Six Months, (6 "), 50

Invariably in advance.

☞ Newspapers and periodicals publishing this Prospectus; and sending a marked copy to this office will be entitled to a copy of the work.

J. WADSWORTH

Cincinnati, August 1, 1851.

☞ ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS will be expected to commence at the beginning or middle of a volume (September or March). To new subscribers, sending for the work at any other time, we will forward the numbers back to the nearest of these periods, provided they are on hand, excepting those who wish to begin with a new volume. In no case will it be sent longer than ordered. When the time expires for which a person has ordered the work, he will bear in mind that we have no means of knowing that he wishes it continued, but by a renewal of his subscription.

All remittances and communications should be addressed to J. WADSWORTH, Editor of Templar's Magazine, Cincinnati. Remittances by mail may be sent at our risk, when directed as above, mailed in the presence of a post-master or other responsible person.

Money, current at the place sent from, will be received on subscription, but that which is current in Cincinnati is always preferable. Bills on Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky banks, are at par in Cincinnati.—Those on country banks, at a distance, are at a greater discount than those on banks in large cities.

A specimen number of the work will be sent, without charge, to any one wishing to examine it before subscribing; but no name unaccompanied with the subscription price for one year or six months, will be entered on our books.

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.

Away down east they've made a law,
To fix up liquor sellers,
Which does its work without a flaw,
And makes them decent fellers.

It takes the man, his grog likewise,
In spite of opposition,—
Bids him walk o'er the bridge of sighs,
Sends that down to perdition.

Distillers too, it gives them fits,
The doctors cannot cure, sir,
Likewise a pair of iron mitts,
To keep them fast and sure, sir.

Sometimes when people chance to go
To circus, or camp-meeting,
They often find some wondrous show,
Which hardly can be beaten:

A "striped pig," or three white mice,
Or strange four-legged fowl, sir,
Where everything is kept so nice;
Say, won't you make a call, sir?

Four legged fowl beyond a doubt,
Yet those who often call, sir,
When last they're seen a-coming out,
Have most no legs at all, sir.

Away down east this wont avail,
The keeper of these jugs, sir,—
Gets thirty days within the jail!
The stuff kills worms and bugs, sir.

And thus you see, this wondrous law,
It works just like a charm, sir,
The liquors once within its paw,
It never more can harm, sir.

Of all the laws, it is the best
That ever was invented;
It now has fairly stood the test,
And all are well contented.

Strange fact, but true without a doubt,—
That which I now relate, sir,
Down Easters first did find it out,
And beat the "Old Bay State," sir.

Although we own we're fairly beat!
Rumsellers soon will find, sir,
If it so be, we've lost the heat?
We're in not far behind, sir.

Then let us strike with all our might;
And never say we've done, sir,
But battle sternly for the right,
Until the course is won, sir.

THE MODERN BELLE.

[Extracts from Mr. Stark's Poems read at the late Manchester (N. H.) Fair]

The daughter sits in the parlor,
And rocks in her early chair;
She's clad in her silks and satins,
And Jewels are in her hair—
She winks and giggles and simpers,
And simpers and giggles and winks,
And though she talk but a little,
'Tis vastly more than she thinks.

Her father goes clad in her russett,
And ragged and seedy at that—
His coats are all out at the elbows,
He wears a most shocking bad hat,
He's hoarding and saving his shillings,
So carefully day by day,
While she, on her beaux and poodles,
Is throwing them all away.

She lies in bed in the morning,
Till nearly the hour of noon,
Then comes down snapping and snarling,
Because she was called so soon;
Her hair is still in the papers,
Her cheeks still dabble with paint—
Remains of her last night's blushes,
Before she intended to faint.

She dotes upon men unshaven,
And men with "the flowing hair,"
She's eloquent over moustaches,
They give such a foreign air,
She talks of Italian music,
And falls in love with the moon,
And tho' a mouse should meet her,
She sinks away in a swoon.

Her feet are so very little,
Her hands are so very white,
Her jewels are so very heavy,
And her head so very light;
Her color is made of cosmetics,
Though this she never will own,
Her body is made mostly of cotton,
Her heart is made wholly of stone.

She falls in love with a fellow,
Who swells with a foreign air;
He marries her for her money,
She marries him for his hair.
One of the very best matches—
Both are well matched in life,
She's got a fool for a husband—
He's got a fool for a wife.

AN EPITAPH.—A farmer named Keazle, hired a fellow who had a nack of poetry-making, to write his epitaph. He was to give the poet a dinner and supper for the job. After the first meal he sat down and begun thus:

"There was a man who died of late,
For whom angels did impatient wait
With outstretched arms and wings of love,
To waft him to the realms above."

Keazle was much pleased with this, and begged the writer to go on; but he declined finishing the epitaph until he had the supper. That finished, he put on his coat, and then wound up the verse in these words:

"But while they disputed for the prize,
Sull hovering around the lower skies,
In slipped the devil like a weazle,
And down to hell he kicked old Keazle."

After which he took to his heels and old Keazle after him with "a horse whip."

INDIANA STATE LIBRARY INDIANAPOLIS

A Bad Bargain.

We learn from good authority the following fact. It occurred in one of the towns of Massachusetts, not far from Rhode Island. It is a compound of rum and benevolence, appetite and cunning, high and low depravity, such as seldom comes to light.

'Husband, what do you think I have done to-day?' said Mrs. C. to the keeper of a country store, where the drunkard's "Oh-be-joyful" was sold, upon his return home to dinner.

'I cannot possibly tell, my dear; I dare say something clever.'

'Well, I never did such a thing before, but the man looked up so pitiful, I thought I would encroach on your wardrobe a little, for once, as I knew you could well supply the poor creature's wants without any inconvenience to yourself.'

'You have given away one of my coats, I suppose; hope you did not make a mistake and give my go-to-meeting one, did you?'

'Oh, no; I gave away one of your shirts. He said he had none, and had called to beg one—so I gave him one, and he went off as happy as if I had given him a cow. I don't know when I have seen such a smile of joy at so small a gift.'

'Given a shirt!' said the husband, 'I should like to know who there is so poor as to be without a shirt. Old Tom Jones is the poorest creature I know of and I don't believe but he has got a shirt, as poor a drunkard as he is.'

'Tom Jones!—there, I don't believe but it was Jones; I have heard you describe him, and it was him, I know. He looked cunning, and that smile of his seemed to be half joy, half fun, and if I was Irish, I would say the other half was savage.'

'Very likely it was Jones, for he has been in the store to-day.'

'Has he? and had he a short jacket on, and holes in his pants, and miserable shoes without stockings?'

'Just so.'

'He the very man. Had he a bundle, or had he put the shirt on?'

'He had his bottle, as usual, but I saw no bundle, and I did not notice whether he had a collar or not.'

'His bottle,' said the wife 'well, I hope you did not fill it for him, for that would seem like the story in the paper lately, where the wife told her husband she would supply the drunkard's family out of her house as long as he supplied the rum from the store. Did you let him have any?'

'Any what, my dear, molasses or vinegar? You have no objections to selling him anything he will pay for?'

'Yes, I have, you know I have. I would not sell him rum for pay, and you may trust him for anything else. I wish you would let him have molasses. But did you let him have rum?'

'Yes, my dear, I did,' said the husband. 'He seemed so feeble, and wished that I would let him have a little.'

'How much?'

'Half a pint.'

'Half a pint! enough to make him drunk, and he will lose his shirt before he gets home, and I might as well have turned him off without it. Well, now, husband, let me know, do you trust Jones for rum?'

'No.'

'Did he pay for it?'

'Yes.'

'How much?'

'Six cents.'

'In money?'

'No.'

'How then?'

'In rags.'

'In rags! I'll bet a dollar you have bought your own shirt back again! and I'll go this minute and see. No, you sit still and finish your dinner. No, on, you shan't go, I'll go myself. It will be such a good one. I'll make you ashamed of selling rum this time, at any rate. There! there! Here it is torn to pieces, and you have bought it for rags!'

Late one night, a watchman found a man holding on to an awning-post, and going through sundry evolutions not laid down in any standard work in military discipline. "What are you doing here?" asked the watchman. "I'm getting ready to (hic) go home," said he of the post. "Where is your home?" "In that new brick house that's just gone past us." "Well, why don't you go into it?" "I intend to, (hic) but I'm not going to chase it."

A MOTHER'S APPEAL.

We find in the Ohio State Journal of the 31st ult., "A Mother's Appeal," addressed to the General Assembly of the State of Ohio for the suppression of ixtoxicating liquors, which, for true eloquence, and touching pathos, is seldom equalled. Certainly, if anything can move the heart, this appeal of a mother must reach its inmost recess. We make a few extracts:

I have laid aside, for a time, a woman's instinctive dread of encountering the gaze, the ridicule and the rebuffs of those who appreciate not her motives, and I have traversed weary distances, entered dark abodes of sin, entreating for names to the humble petition which prays for your aid in accomplishing a work which would cause more joy on earth, and in Heaven also, than any other event, save one, that this glorious sun of ours ever shone upon. In these walks, I have found the sick and destitute wives and widows of those who are daily sinking, or havo already sunk into the drunkard's grave. I have seen the tear of joy leap from haggared eyes because their owners had the poor privilege of subscribing their names to such a petition; and I have departed, bearing with me blessings of those ready to perish, and followed by the prayers of those who have audience in Heaven, if not on earth.

Oh! could you, ye honorable legislators of this great and glorious State—could you behold, with unbeclouded vision, how many from the hovels, of misery; how many from the mansions of the rich; how many from pallets of straw and couches of down are sending up petitions to Heaven's high throne, for blessings upon your deliberations, and invoking for you guidance of infinite wisdom; and could you know with what trembling anxiety these praying mothers wait with excited hopes the tidings of your doings in this behalf, you would not—you could not turn an indifferent ear to our supplication.

* * * * * * * *

In early life I married a man who moved in the first circles of no mean city. He was a decendant of Puritan stock, and his venerable father's silvery locks yet command wide respect amidst those who linger on Pilgrim ground. He was a worthy son of a worthy sire—a man amongst men. In the commercial world he stood fair among the fairest. Abundance blessed our board. If we had not wealth in hoarded profusion, we had enough for all our wants, and even the rich might have envied us our happiness. But when I dreamed of no danger, the foe, with serpentine dissembling, wound his coils around my loved and cherished one, and blighted my every earthly hope.

* * * * * * * *

He saw at first his danger, but for my sake and his children's sake, he resolved that he would be free. Like Sampson he rose in all the conscious strength of manhood's prime; but like him, who dallied with an enemy, he too, soon found out he was shorn of his strength, and yielded in abject submission to his deadliest foe. He was in the anaconda's folds, and as well might the lamb escape from the paw of the lion, as he from his eternal tormentor.

* * * * * * * *

Property vanished; friends grew cold; the proud despised us, and tongues of malice were dipped in gall. All this he saw with blurred vision, and sometimes keenly felt that he had brought it all upon those who he loved dearer than life. Day and night I toiled; night, and day I watched and prayed; yea weeks and months and years I struggled, and by the use of hands not ashamed to work, but heretofore all unused to toil, I, unaided by mortal arm, fed, clothed, and sheltered my little ones, and by main force, held up my degraded husband also. And while thus I gave up to sacred duty my choicest years of life, he who would have been, but for accursed drink, my protector and supporter, was driving deeper and deeper the barbed arrows into my life springs, till at last, maniac-like, his cruel blows, of which no one knew or heard, drove me and those whom God had given me, to seek shelter and protecteon where rum could not invade my sanctuary.

Need I tell you the anguish of that fatal hour? Need I tell you how it brought me to the very gates of death, whence after many days I barely escaped? Need I tell you how he who was thus forsaken, like Esau, in vain sought space for repentance and found it not, though he sought it carefully with tears? No—I need not tell you this. Nay it is a tale that cannot be told—let it sleep. But I will tell you, that for the last time, he renewed as with a dying struggle the terrible conflict with his enemy. In vain he looked on this side and that for help. Help there was none, hut on every corner stood the tempter in bright array. All around him were men—men in the image of their God—men whom the law called good moral men, licensed by law to send his soul to hell, and his body to the worms! Ah, too sure was their work, for as he had lived so he died. In an instant, and when he looked not for it, death claimed his victim, and he was no more! No sympathizing hand smoothed his dying pillow! No daughter's kiss assuaged his last death throes! No son has there to hear his last command! His body fills a drunkard's grave. His murderers may meet his soul in a world to come.

* * * * * * * *

You cannot bring the dead to life! You cannot restore to me, nor to the tens of thousands whom, like me, rum has deprived of our husbands, our loved ones again!—but you can, yes, you can hurl this deamon from his high place! Yon can put the brand of Cain upon the man who engages in this accursed traffic. You can take away this temptation from those who would if they could avoid its snares! You can save the lives of tens of thousands of precious husbands, brothers, and sons—and 'tis for this we most humbly pray. Will you turn to us a deaf ear, and spurn us from your doors? We trust not—we hope not—we believe not; and in this faith we will wait. Meantime our prayers shall go up to Him who is a Father to the fatherless, that He will guide you in His own way to accomplish this great work.

A MOTHER.

The Maine Law.

STILL MORE PROOF OF ITS CONSTITUTIONALITY.

To the Editors of the Tribune.—As some rum-loving individuals still persist in the absurd idea that the Maine Law is unconstitutional, I send herewith an extract from the U. S. Laws, by which it will be seen that the Maine Law is no new thing, and that Congress declares it constitutional to search for, seize and destroy intoxicating drinks, under certain circumstances. All that we now ask is, that the mantle which has so kindly been placed over the poor Indian by our Government, may be extended over all who are liable to suffer from the same cause.

If at certain seasons dogs are found running at large without a muzzle, the city laws say they shall be killed, whether rabid or not. Rum, when used as a beverage, is always unmuzzled, and always rabid. Can that not also be killed according to law?

P. T. BARNUM.

Laws of the United States for 1834, vol. 9, pp. 133.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall sell, exchange, or give away, barter, or dispose of any Spirituous Liquors or Wine to any Indian in the Indian country, such person shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500. And if any person shall introduce, or cause to be introduced, or attempt to introduce, any Spirituous Liquors or Wine into the Indian Country, except such supplies as shall be necessary for the United States troops, such person shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $300.

SEC. 22. If any Superintendent of Indian Affairs, Indian Agent, or sub-Agent, or Commandant of a Military post, has reason to suspect, or is informed, that any white person or Indian is about to introduce, or has introduced, Spirituous Liquors or Wine into the Indian country in violation of the provision of this section, it shall be lawful for such Superintendent, Indian Agent, or sub-Agent, or Military officer, to cause the boats, stores, packages and places of deposit of such persons to be searched.

And if any such Spirituous Liquors or Wine be found, the Goods, Boats, Packages, or Peltries of such persons, shall be seized and delivered to the proper officer, and shall be proceeded against by libel in the proper Court, and forfeited, one half to the use of the informer and the other half to the United States. And it shall, moreover be lawful for any person in the United States service, or for any Indian or white persons, to take and dostroy any such liquor or wine they may find in the Indian Territory, not used as supplies for the army.

SEC. 23, treats of Distilling in the Indian Territory and makes it such a violation as to incur the fine of $1,000, and any person may inform the Commandant of any Military post, whose duty it shall be to order out his troops to destroy all such property—even to the utter destruction of all the buildings and implements used in such work of distilling.

What the Ladies Can Do.

"Get out of the way, you young rascals!" This address was made by a gentleman with a very imperious air and something naval officer like in his costume and manners, who was seated in a handsome open carriage, with a fashionably dressed lady by his side. "The young rascals" whom he thus honored with his notice were two boys, ten or twelve years old, dealers in shingle shavings, an article very much used in this city for kindling coal fires. The lads were wheeling six or eight bundles of their commodity in a hand-cart, and they happened to meet the gentleman in his carriage in the part of the street which was obstructed by a large pile of firewood, which made it impossible for the two vihicles to pass each other unless one of the drivers should have the complaisance to draw back. "Get out of the way, you young rascals," said the gentleman in his carriage. The young shingle-shaving merchants looked at the speaker with undisguised astonishment, and he was obliged to repeat the order before they seemed to realize the fact that they were the party spoken to.

At last one of the young gentlemen made answer, "get out of the way yourself and be blamed to you." It was now the turn of the man in the carriage to be astonished. Pale with rage, he exclaimed, "Do you know who I am, you villains?" "No we don't" answered one of the boys, "some Englishman I guess. Do you know who we are?"

The gentleman was obliged to confess his ignorance in a tone of supreme contempt. "We are American citizens," said the young shingle merchant with great dignity. "Is that any reason that you should block up the streets?" said the imperious Sentleman very excitedly. "To be sure it is," replied the juvenile, "who has a better right to the streets?" We are the majority, two to one, and the majority carries everything in this country." The arristocratic man seemed to be disposed to be very violent, but observing, probably that the bystanders, who were now numerous, sympathised with the republican party, he swallowed his wrath and sat silently for several minutes, as if reflecting what course he should pursue in these perplexing circumstances. The lady who sat by his side now spoke for the first time, and in a sweet and gentle voice she said to the boys: "Will you not oblige me by allowing us to pass?" "Certainly, madam," said the sturdy young republican, we'll do anything for a lady, or for a man who knows how to behave himself like a gentleman; but as for giving way to a stuck up rowdy like him, blamed if I would n't rather stay here till next fourth of July." They then drew back and allowed the carriage to pass without further hindrance.—Pennsylvanian.

Defeats of Temperance.

The Legislatures of Rhode Island, New Jersey, Ohio and Indiana, have severally refused to enact the Maine law for their respective States, whether with or without submission to the people; those of New York and Pennsylvania are doubtless preparing to follow the bad example.

This is not discouraging—it was clearly to have been expected. Looking steadily at the influences under which legislators have hitherto been nominated and elected, it is rather a matter of surprise that so many votes should be obtained for so thorough a measure. The Temperance men, as such, have not hitherto made themselves felt in nominations and elections, and they cannot expect to be adequately represented in Legislatures. Many of the votes hitherto given to the Maine law have been so given less from sympathy with their object, than from dread of their power.

Yet it is pretended that that the Maine law is or is to be voted down because the people are opposed to it. To this we promptly answer, Gentlemen, we defy you to meet us before the people! Put the issue clearly before them, "Maine Law," or "No Maine Law," and we will beat you or give it up. You do not accept this issue, because you dare not! You know that we should beat you, or you would be eager to try conclusions with us. Your cronies have the power in our own and most other legislatures—send the Maine law to the people if you dare!

But, it is said, the Municipal elections show a majority against the Maine law.—How? Finding this question mixed up and blended with many others, the Temperance men have not all picked out and acted with single reference to it, as the devotees of Rum have readily done.

To all those who urge that the Maine law is unpopular, and therefore would not be sustained, we make answer, "If you believe what you say, oblige us with a submission to the people. We defy you to meet us before that tribunal. Come on!" — N. York Tribune.

THE OPERATION OF THE MAINE LAW.—We have been furnished with an extract of a letter from Gen. Appleton, of Portland, which describes the operation of the Maine Liquor Law, in that State, as much more satisfactory than its friends anticipated. Among those who approve of the law are many moderate drinkers, and others notoriously intemperate, but who are glad that the temptation is out of their reach. Crime, taxation, and poverty have decreased, and the best interests and happiness of all classes are better promoted. This is good testimony in favor of the law, which, as an experiment, is interesting to every community. If it be established that such effects as these follow its operation, nothing can prevent its universal adoption.

HON. J. LETCHER will please accept our thanks for a copy of The Life of Hon. Samuel Houston.

The April Election.

The annual spring election having passed the question of License or No Llicense is settled in the State for another year, unless the present Legislature pass some new law on the subject.

So far as we have heard out of this county, our friends have done well, but here we have done badly. We have carried this (Center) township, by a small majority, against license, and also Pike and Decatur townships, and in all the others license is carried.

This is accounted for partly by the fact that the election for State Senator absorbed the attention of the voters, and partly by the immense foreign vote let in upon us by the operation of the New Constitution. Fully one half of the votes counted for license were blanks. But we are not discouraded, we will "pick our flints and try again," if we have the opportunity.

State Senate.

LEVI L. TODD, Whisky Democrat, is elected Senator from this county, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Hon. Nicholas McCarty, a Temperance Whig, Defeated by the treachery of pretended friends, we are "cast down but not destroyed," as we will show our opponents at some future day.

John B. Gough.

This distinguished champion of Temperance is now in Columbus, Ohio, trying to convince the people of that goodly city and the Ohio Legislature in particular, that it is for their interest to vote for a good temperance law. A story has been going the rounds of the newspapers, that Mr. Gough was opposed to the Maine Law. This we knew to be false from the fact that he was employed by the temperance men of Massachusetts to advocate its passage by the Legislature of that State, and in a speech at Columbus he took occasion to "define his position" on that question, and fully satisfied his audience before he got through, of the falsity of that report.

Since his arrival there he has created a great excitement on the subject of temperance, and the candidates for city offices are nominated by the temperance and anti-temperance parties, the present Mayor leading the anti-temperance ticket.

We hope he may be induced to visit this city soon.

☞ The Maine Law has passed the Senate of Pennsylvania and is now before the House of Representatives with a fair prospect of success.

Memorials.

We hope our friends will not forget the memorials to the Legislature.

That body will assemble on the 20th, and it is necessary that our friends be active if they wish to secure the right kind of a law.

Let every temperance man do his duty, and we can secure the signatures of 200,000 persons for the Maine law.

We insert the Memorial again. Copy on a sheet of paper and circulate it and send it free of postage to your Senator or Representative by the first of May, or sooner if possible.

TEMPERANCE PETITION.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Indiana:

WE, your constituents, do respectfully petition your honorable bodies to protect us, our families, and the community from the evils of intemperance, by giving us a law similar to that of the State of Maine.

An Outrage.

Col. Snow, the distinguished champion of Temperance in the New York Legislature and the member who introduced the Maine Law into that body, has been expelled from his seat by the Rumocracy of the Assembly. The sitting of the Assembly at which the Col. was choked off, was, according to the New York papers, rowdy and riotous beyond example. The accidental majority habitually insulted, defied, and menaced the speaker, accomplished their purpose at last by overruling his decisions. Liquor was freely dealt out within the capital, and a number of the members were thoroughly drunk.

One had to be taken home to cool during the night in order to have him fit to use on the final struggle. Mike Walsh, one of the aiders in this shameful pro-liquor guillotine operation, openly proclaimed that it was the Maine Law he was fighting in the ejection of Col. Snow. The case now goes back to the people of the Eighth Ward of New York city, and the liquor-sellers have raised a purse of $100,000 to spend in his defeat. If money, bad brandy and corn whisky can accomplish his defeat, he is gone. We shall see.

THE MAINE LAW AT HOME.—In the recent elections in Maine, but three towns in the State voted against the celebrated Maine Liquor Law, and but two members were elected to the Legislature, favorable to its repeal.

Here is the testimony of a State which has tried it. Let us go and do likewise.

T. C. W. Sale of Vermillion, and J. S. Scoby of Decatur, both Sons of Temperance, have been elected to the Legislature to fill vacancies.

Tippecanoe County Temperance Convention.

We have received the proceedings of a very spirited Temperance Convention held at the Court House in Lafayette, but have room only for the resolutions, which speak for themselves:

Resolved, 1st. That the time has come for the friends of humanity to use the right which God and the Constitution of our country gives to all, of righting our wrongs and redressing our grievances by a temperate and judicious use of the Ballot Box.

2d. That though it is not our intention to form any new political party, we pledge ourselves, one and all, that we will not vote for any man, who may be brought out by any of the great political parties who is not known and known above suspicion, to be in favor of the Maine Law, or one equivalent.

3d. Resolved that the Maine Law, though in some cities, towns and other localities it might meet with such opposition that at first it might be difficult fully to enforce it, yet in the opinion of this Convention, the beneficial effects arising from its operation wherever it might be enforced, would so recommend it to others, that in a short time it would be enforced through the entire State, and prove one of the greatest blessings that could be conferred upon its citizens.

4th. That the friends of Temperance in the different townships in the county, be requested to use all their influence in the appointment of delegates to the several county conventions, in order that the right kind of men may there be brought before the people.

5th. Resolved, That it is the duty of the friends of the Temperance cause, to make a speedy and combined effort throughout the whole country, before the meeting of the adjourned session of the Legislature, and that a committee be appointed in this city, and in the different townships, to circulate memorials and obtain signatures to be presented at the ensuing meeting of the Legislature.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Convention, the frequent assembling of the friends of Temperance conduces greatly to the advancement of the cause in which we are enlisted, and that we recommend a Temperance mass meeting to be held at Lafayette on the 4th day of July next.

On motion, a vote of thanks from this Convention was tendered to the Juvenile Temperance Army, for their presence and songs.

On motion, a vote of thanks was tendered the Rev. John Longley for the efficient manner in which he presided over this convention.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this Convention be published in the city papers, and that a copy be sent to the Temperance Chart for publication.

Who Opposes the Maine Law?

1. Not wives whose husbands come to their homes, infuriated by the cup, to beat them and their helpless children.

2. Not sisters, whose brothers are brought to their homes at midnight, and rolled in upon the hall floor besotted and insensible.

3. Not parents, whose sons, just entering upon manhood, begin to find pleasure in the cup, and meet temptations at every corner in our cities and large towns.

4. Not sober virtuous citizens, who look with sympathy and dismay upon domestic peace destroyed, talents and reputation thrown away, estates wasted, jails, prison, alms houses, and hospitals filled by the monster intemperance, with no possible good returned to society.

5. Not drunkards themselves, who desire to reform, who know their weakness, and dread temptations as the cutting off of their last hope of deliverance from the chains which bind them.

These do not oppose the Maine Liquor Law. Who are the opposers?

1. Manufacturers of the poison, who, to increase their wealth, would roll a stream of liquid fire over the whole earth.

2. Liquor dealers, of every stamp, from the wholesale vender to the retailers of every form; from the keepers of fashionable hotels and elegant saloones, down to the haunts where the poor day laborers are swindled out of earnings which are needed by their suffering families.

These all oppose the liquor law, and with a zeal which would not be excelled if they were the very pillows of society, and the only true friends of "the largest liberty," as they boast themselves to be.

But these men, we are sorry to say it, have some better company in their opposition to the Maine Liquor Law. They have,

1. Those who drink moderately, and do not like to have their habit tabooed by legislation, which assumes as its basis the use of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is dangerous to society. This class overlook two important considerations—first that they cannot change the fact that such use is dangerous, and second, that every citizen owes it to society to surrender an indulgence which threatens the public good.

2. Those who are afraid the law cannot be sustained. Let all such stop croaking, and come up to the work of sustaining the law, and there will not be opposition enough in the State to utter one peep.

3. Those who make politics a trade—who ask, not what do the people want, but what will be the consequences to our party?

WHO IS A TEMPERANCE WOMAN?—Not she that will make light of the cause by inattention to its merits! Not she, if married, that will not in all ways oppose the rum-drinking of her husband! Not she, if unmarried, that will not utterly discountenance the visits and attention of rum-drinking young men! Not she that will not willingly lend her aid to suppress the vice of intemperance! Not she that will, for fashion's sake, countenance the rum-customs of society! Not she, if unmarried, who will, for the sake of a husband, marry a rum-drinker! Not she, who having a family, will tamper with rum either in her culinary or parental duties! Not she that thinks more about the fashions than she does about the sufferings of her sex brought about by the accursed traffic in rum!—Penn. Olive Branch.

Not she who does not support the Maine Law.—Temp. Watchman.

☞ Within the last thirty days, the rum traffic has killed at least five men in Rhode Island. And yet we must not spill a quart of liquor held contrary to law, lest we interfear with somebody's birthrights. The rummies want us to believe that men were born with a jug in one hand and a license in the other, with a right to drink and sell till dooms-day, but nobody is born with the right to live.—Temperance Advocate.

Daughters of Temperance.

The propriety of the organizations of ladies for the extension of the principle and practice of total abstinence, has been quite a mooted question among a certain class. The institution of the Daughters has received its share of ungallant, if not ungentlemanly comments. Many ambiguous and half-sneering expressions of doubt, have we heard from men, high standing in the temperance ranks, of the propriety and even utility of these and like female associations.

To one who has labored long in the general cause, and thousands of times felt his heart bleed in view of the suffering and wretchedness of the poor victims and their miserable families, any hindrance to the good work is painful, and he looks with a mixture of grief and indignation upon the objections of the friends of the cause to stay the needful work. The cry of the heart of such a one is, God speed the good cause, by whatever agency his providence may select. Success to the work, is his desire. The salvation of the lost inebriate and the safe guardianship of the young is his grand object. Hence he is not troubled about the how, or by whom. The heavenly work is done; and with that he is satisfied. He cannot conceive why a man should object to any honorable means of arresting the destroying influence of rum.

Like the Jewish law-giver, who "would that all the Lord's people were prophets," he wishes every man, woman and child would become laborers in this field, until the work is done, and mankind is delivered from the great destroyer.

We most sincerely rejoice in the efficient labors of the females in this work. It is, we think, peculiarly the field for their kind and sympathizing operations. Woman ever successfully approaches the victim of appetite, while our less tender efforts would be repulsed.—Weekly Visiter.

The friends of Temperance are moving energetically in many portions of the State. The citizens of Orleans, in this State, had a large meeting to devise means to put a stop to drunkard making in their town. A committee was appointed to ascertain on what terms those engaged in it, will agree to quit it. They performed their duty and reported that one person had agreed to quit if they would purchase his entire stock of liquors, goods, &c., and that another would quit for two hundred dollars.

A petition to the Legislature praying the passage of a law to effectively suppress the liquor traffic, was then numerously signed, and a committee appointed to obtain signatures throughout the country. A Temperance League is to be formed there in a few days.

A Temperance meeting at Crawfordsville, of which S. C. WILSON, Esq., was Chairman, adopted a resolution asking the Legislature to enact a law similar to the Maine law.

The Temperance men of Laporte county are moving in favor of the passage of a law similar to the Maine law for the suppression of the liquor business.—Ind. Journal.

A Cute Grocer.

The following excellent story, which is told of a Mr. Sheafe, a grocer in Portsmouth, N. H., is one of the richest things we ever read:

It appears that a man had purchased a quantity of wool from him, which had been weighed and paid for, and Mr. S. had gone to the desk to get change for a note. Happening to turn his head while there, he saw, in a glass that hung so as to reflect the shop, a stout arm reach up and take from the shelf a heavy white-oak cheese. Instead of appearing suddenly and rebuking the man for his theft, as another would, thereby losing his custom forever, the crafty old gentleman gave the thief his change as if nothing had happened—and then, under pretence of lifting the bag to lay it on a horse for him, took hold of it. On doing so, it appeared heavier than he seemed to expect, upon which he exclaimed, "Why, bless me, I must have reckoned the weight wrong." "Oh, no," said the other, "you may be sure of that, for I counted them with you." "Well, well—we wont dispute about the matter—it's easily tried!" replied Mr. S., putting the bag in the scale again. "There!" said he, "I told you so—knew I was right—made a mistake of nearly twenty pounds; however, if you don't want the whole, you needn't have it—I'll take part of it out!" "No, no," said the other staying the hands of Mr. S., on his way to the strings of the bag, "I rather guess I'll take the whole!" And this he did, paying for his rascality by receiving skim-milk cheese, or tap-rock, at the price of wool!

"WHAT shall we do for cologne?" exclaimed a young lady with uplifted hands on hearing of the liquor bill.—Courier.

Do? She had best get married—for they say that matrimony is a better cosmetic than go-'lone.—Crusader.

"JOEL," AND THE MAINE LAW.—In the first chapter of Joel, fourth verse, will be found the following:

"Awake, ye drunkards, and weep and howl, all ye drinkers of wine; because of the new wine; for it is cut off from your mouth."

Why People Drink.

Mr. A. drinks because his doctor recommended him to take a little.

Mr. B. because his doctor ordered him not, and he hates quackery.

Mr. C. takes a drop because he's wet.

Mr. D. because he's dry.

Mr. E. because he feels something rising in his stomach.

Mr. F. because it sharpens his appetite.

Mr. G. because he is going to see a friend off to Oregon.

Mr. H. because he's got a friend come home from California.

Mr. I. because he's so hot.

Mr. J. because he likes it.

Mr. K. because he's so cold.

Mr. L. because he's got a pain in his head.

Mr. M. because he's got a pain in his side.

Mr. N. because he's got a pain in his back.

Mr. O. because he's got a pain in his chest.

Mr. P. because he's got a pain all over him.

Mr. Q. because he feels so light and happy.

Mr. R. because he feels heavy and miserable.

Mr. S. because he's married.

Mr. T. because he isn't.

Mr. U. because he is disappointed in love.

Mr. V. because he likes to see his friends around him.

Mr. W. because he's got no friends, and enjoys a glass by himself.

Mr. X. because his uncle left him a legacy.

Mr. Y. because his aunt cut him off without a shilling.

Mr. Z. (we should be happy to inform our readers what Mr. Z's reasons are for drinking, but on putting the question to him, he was found too drunk to answer.)

THE RAZOR STROP.—Smith, the Razor Strop Man occasionally breaks off from the subject of the very superior quality of his strops, and gives his audience a short lecture on temperance in his own peculiar and droll way. Here is an extract:

"When I drank grog, I owned a cat, a poor, lean, lantern-jawed thing, that was always getting into a scrape. As I had nothing for her to eat, she was compelled to take to the highway, and the neighbors were continually crying out, 'confound that Smith's cat, she's drunk all my milk.' Poor thing, she had to steal or die, she could find no pickings at home for even the poor mice were so poor and screggy, that it took several of them to make a shadow, and a decent cat would starve to death in three weeks on an allowance of eighteen a day. But when I reformed things took a different turn. The kitchen being provided, the crumbs were plenty, and the old cat grew fat and honest together. Even the mice grew fat and oily, and old tabby would make a hearty supper on two of them, and then lie down and snooze with the pleasing consolation of knowing when she awoke there would be a few more left of the same sort.

And again—When I was a beer-guzzler, mother cried, father cried, Bill cried, Moll cried, Bet cried, and the cat cried. But when I signed the pledge, father sung, mother sung, John sung, and wife sung, Bill sung, Moll sung, Bet sung, and the cat sung, the kettle sung, and I brought a new frying pan, and put a piece of beefsteak in it, and placed it on the fire and that sung, and that's the kind of singing for the workman.

And third—The difference between Smith sober and Smith drunk, is this: Smith drunk was rummy, ragged and riotous—Smith sober is jovial, joyful and jolly. Smith drunk was stuttering, stupid and staggering. Smith sober is cool, clear-headed and cautious. Smith sober is hearty, healthy and happy. Smith drunk was ill-read ill-bred, and ill-led. Smith sober is well-saved, well-behaved, and well-shaved.

HOW THE FOXES GET RID OF FLEAS.—A fox will relieve himself of fleas in the following sagacious manner.—He takes a feather in his mouth, and gradually, though slowly enough, backs into the water, first legs and tail, then body, shoulders and head to the nose, and thus compelling the fleas, to escape from the drowning element, to pass over the nose to the bridge of a feather, which is then committed to the stream.

A DEAD SHOT.—The Anti-Temperance folks in Milwaukie recently held a meeting and adopted a memorial to the Legislature, setting forth the fearful disasters which so frequently result from the injudicious use of cold water as a beverage, and asking the Legislature in view thereof to enact that any man who drinks a glass of water, except on the prescription of a physician, shall pay a fine of one thousand dollars. Whereupon the Free Democrat drily observes—

"We presume if nobody drank any more cold water than the authors of this memorial, such a law would occasion very little inconvenience."

BARNUM has taken over 15,000 pledges from the Democratic voters in Connecticut to carry the Maine law "into politics."—Barnum is lucky in living in the Nutmeg State—here it would n't do to pledge Democratic voters in favor of that measure.

BETHLEHAM, March 20, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Our Division was instituted in 1846, and being situated in a small village could not be expected to be large in point of numbers, notwithstanding we have initiated into our Division one hundred members since our organization. This was a temperance community, so called, when our Division went into operation, still there was some who took their dram, some got drunk, and some sold whiskey. Now, let us see what good the Order has done. In less than three years we had drove the whiskey seller from the town, initiated into the Division all the drunkards, and prevailed on those who did, to stop tippling. And we then could boast as being the only tetotal abstinence from all that intoxicates town on the Ohio River. Things moved on peaceably, and no particular excitement was gotten up, unless at the April election, and the tickets always told when counted, without a doubt, the minds of the people, which was No License.

We will now come down to those latter times. A shoemaker from a neighboring town, seeking employment and finding plenty, rented a house and went to work. After working a while and not knowing the minds of the people on the subject of temperatce, he concluded that keeping grocery was easier and more pleasant than driving pegs. So he goes to Louisville, and the first thing we knew we had a doggery in the didst of us, a few doors below our Hall.

Our Division, which had been thinly attended previous to this, on the next meeting night was better attended, and the first business before the house was, what were we a going to do with this sink of iniquity, various ways were suggested, the one adopted was to call the whole village out on the next Wednesday night, and see if they were willing to let this snare of the Devil remain among them. And sure enough the town came out, and the poisener to. The meeting passed resolutions discountenancing the sale ardent spirits among us, and proposed buying him out, giving first cost, he refused to sell, after which, the meeting passed a resolution, that they would not patronize in his business, any man who would sell ardent spirits as a beverage in the town. Things passed on to the next weekly meeting, for we had appointed another, determined to persevere until we had drived the enemy from our borders. A large assembly were present, for a village, on that night they resusitated the old Washingtonian Society, and sixty four signed the pledge. On the next meeting night twelve signed the pledge, after which a plan was suggested by which we might get rid of King Alcohol. A committee was appointed to rent the house in which the grocery was. We had now got the lever under him, and the next morning he came to terms, and delivered up King Alcohol into the hands of the proper officers, and on next Wednesday night he is to be taken out and executed in the presence of the whole temperance community.

Now, again we can boast as being the only tetotal abstinence from all that intoxicates town on the Ohio River. So, brother, you can see that we are still alive as a Division. Our number is small but strong in the faith, we expect still to press on and endeavor to leave our mark.

This community is a temperance community, and in favor of the Maine Law.

JEFFERSONVILLE, IND., March 30, 1852.

At a large and enthusiastic meeting of the friends of Temperance held on Monday evening, March 29, 1852, at the Temperance Hall in this city, Lewis Summers, Esq. was called to the Chair, and H. W. Heaton appointed Secretary.

After the reading of the circular of the State Central Temperance Committee, and also a full synopsis of the Maine law, the following pre-amble and resolutions were presented by Rev. LeRoy Woods.

WHEREAS, This meeting has received an address issued by the State Central Temperance Committee, setting forth the imperious necessity of prompt and united effort on the part of all the true friends of Temperance—and fully concurring with the address—that a crisis has come in the progress of this great reform, and being well convinced that nothing short of entire extermination of the manufacture and traffic in alcoholic drinks can ever accomplish our aim; therefore

Resolved, That we are in favor of the Maine law.

Resolved, That we hereby pledge ourselves to each other and to the public, that in all future elections for State, County, Township, Town or City officers, we will withhold our suffrage from every man who does not use his influence in favor of the Temperance Reformation, and who does not actively favor legislative enactment for suppressing the making, rectifying, and selling of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

After mature deliberation, and several earnest and eloquent addresses in behalf of the above resolutions, they were adopted unanimously, by a rising vote, there being not a solitary dissent.

Additional resolutions were presented and adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to circulate in our city and township, for the signatures of our citizens, petitions to be presented to the legislature.

Resolved, That we hereby earnestly solicit the hearty co-operation of the ladies—especially those who are members of the Social Degree—in this glorious work.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions be published in the "Temperance Chart."

The committee to procure signatures, are Messrs. I. H. Montgomery, W. H. Worthington, and Milton Espy.

The meeting then adjourned.

ROME, IND., March 28, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—SIR—Our Division at this time is in a healthy condition. Last night our election for officers for the ensuing quarter, came off. We have elected a good set of officers. Members who do not hesitate to permit themselves to be elected, such members will always "keep in view the radiant star of Temperance." The township elections will come off throughout the State in a few days, and you would hardly believe what an effort is making in this county by the rummies in their attempt to marshal their drunken hosts to the polls to carry a majority in each township and precinct for license. However, we are all wide awake and duly sober here, and determined to give them the best fight in the shop, with the full determination that if beat this time, that the rummies may only consider our defeat as lent to be paid back with compound interest.

We have in this county a town by the name of Cannelton, where intemperance is raging with considerable fury; but the friends of temperance are stirring them up with a long pole—they have appointed Lecturers to be in readiness on Saturday evenings when the operatives are dismissed from the factories, then to talk to them in the streets, as this is the only way they can well be heard. This, I hope, will have a good effect. They are also about organizing in said town an order, called the Crusaders, whose whole object is the promotion of Temperance and suppression of the liquor traffic. Success be with them.

Respectfully in L. P. and F.

LADOGA, Montgomery Co., Ind., April 7th, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—As yet nothing has appeared in your paper, from this place. Our Division is doing well, and although we are not gaining many members, still what we are doing is felt.

Every two weeks we have Lectures given by Sons of Temperance, and others who feel like casting their mite. Bro. Stewart, of Carroll county, was with us last evening (the 6th) and gave us a good "through." He, after closing, presented the "Pledge of the Social Order of Temperance," and 85 names was put on it. We also organized, and are now determined to put a stop to the use of alchohol in this country. We have nothing like a "Doggery" in this place, and but three or four who are in favor of these "sinks of death." The Temperance Petition was sent me by some of the brethren in Indianapolis, and I am now doing all I can to get petitioners—think I will send one up that will compare with any, that will reach the Senate and House of Representatives.

Our Legislature is not doing by us, as it ought. We must have a Law similar to that of Maine. We will have it—and if the present session wont grant it—those who are next elected will find, that they will have to be wholly and solely temperance men. We have been gulled by them as long as we intend to, and now we'll show, that we have the power, and when we send men there again, we will be certain that they are of the right stripe.

When will Bro. Parsley visit us?

Yours in L. P. F.

BROWNSTOWN, March 28th, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—You will have a better account of Old Invincible Division No. 141 at the close of this quarter than for some time back. We are adding from two to three members to this Division at every meeting; but what is no less important, a more true and determined temperance spirit now prevails than at any previous time since the organization of our Division. We are determined not to be satisfied with anything short of the Maine Law, and we are determined to persist in that notion until we get a Legislature that will give us such a law and redeem our beloved State from the present low and degraded condition. Upon the subject of Intemperance and the almost inseperable consequences of the liquor traffic, it seems to me that every temperance man and woman, and every temperance Journal, should be uncompromising in favor of such a law. I feel confident, that if you could make the Chart a weekly paper, it would wield a great influence in the coming election, this summer and fall.

Yours in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,

AARON STRYKER.

WOLF LAKE, March 29th, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—Wolf Lake Division was organized the 19th of September, 1851; since that time it has never failed to have a meeting at the regular time—never lacked a quorum—and first and last has initiated over thirty-five candidates. On New Years night we had an open Division, and the ladies presented us with a Bible. The meetings of the Division are generally interesting. After the usual business is done, one or more of the brethren gives us a talk on some subject connected with the cause; some evenings nearly all talk and wind up by singing some good temperance songs. We have a decided temperance community. We have lived down all the grog shops of this place, except one—the fate of that is yet undecided; but as long as there is an enemy, or the shadow of one, we will contend.

Respectfully yours, in L. P. and F.,

LYNNVILLE, March 18th, 1852.

Mr. C. Woodward:—Dear Brother—The following lines were written by a young lady of New Harmony, and addressed to me on the mournful occasion of the death of My Wife. As they seemed to me to be worthy of merit, and to encourage her to write more, I send them to you, hoping that if you like them you will publish them in your excellent paper:

TO MY COUSIN.

She died, as the beam of day
Along a gem of cost;
Life's glorious ray—all quenched it lay,
Alas! the loved and lost.

She died, as died the passion-flower
Transferred to climes of strife;
Nurtured in warm and genial bowers,
Who could expect its life?

She died, as eve's roseate light
Far o'er the billows dim;
One look, and melting into night,
Her smile went down on him.

She died? no, no! though mortal eyes
Might seem such change to see;
She cannot die; in yonder sky
She lives, and lives for thee.

New Harmony, Nov. 17, 1851. M. B. C.

The Temperance cause in this place is looking up and the people are beginning to talk loudly about having a law to suppress the traffic in alcoholic spirits. For the last six days there has not been a drop of the critter to be had in the town of Lynnville, a thing that has not happened before since there has been a town here. Our doggery keeper has left the place, and the good people of Lynnville are beginning to rejoice in the prospect of the good time coming. The Division here is now enjoying a season of revival influence, and promises fair to stand firm in the Temperance cause.

Yours in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,

Temperance Resolutions.

At a meeting of the citizens of Montgomery county, held at the Court House in Crawfordsville, on the 29th day of March, 1852, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted and ordered to be published in the "Journal," the "Review," and "Temperance Chart."

WHEREAS, The names of One Hundred Thousand memorialists have been presented to the present Legislature of Indiana, praying that honorable body to enact such laws as in their judgments would effectually remedy the enormous evils growing out of the traffic in intoxicating drinks; and whereas, the Legislature after deliberating for more than three months have been unable to discover what the petitioners require them to do. Under these circumstances we deem it our duty to speak out in unmistakable language; therefore,

Resolved, That the manufacture of, and traffic in intoxicating liquors (to be used as a beverage) is a great evil without one redeeming feature, and without apology in this enlightened age—destructive alike to the morals and prosperity of the country, and therefore should be abolished by direct act of the Legislature.

Resolved, That we have no confidence in and will not endorse any act of the Legislature which has for its object the "regulating of the traffic," believing it to be one of these monster evils that cannot be regulated and should therefore be suppressed.

Resolved. That to accomplish this object we believe the "Liquor Law of Maine" in its general provisions to be the most effectual means, and therefore ask of the Legislature the enactment of a similar Statute for Indiana.

Resolved, That the thanks of the friends of sobriety and good order throughout the State, are due to those members of the Legislature who have manfully defended the cause of Temperance in that honorable body.

Resolved, That we will use our utmost exertions to procure signatures to the petition recommended by the State Central Committee, and that a committee of five be appointed by this meeting to make such arrangements as will be necessary to secure the circulation of the petition throughout the country. Said committee being appointed, the meeting adjourned, sine die.

A GRAPHIC PETITION FROM INDIANS.—We have seen nothing more graphic or expressive than the following presented to the Legisature of New York during its present session. It is a bona fide petition from the head men and chiefs of the Onondaga Indians:

MEMORIAL OF THE ONONDAGA NATION IN FAVOR OF THE MAINE LAW.

Dear Fathers and Brothers: We understand you are all at the great Council Fire House at Albany, and that the great Council Fire is now burning, and that our White Brothers, all over the State, are sending wood to put on the Council Fire; but we 'fraid the Council Fire will not burn bright and clear without more help; so we send this to make it burn. Now Brothers, what we want to say, is this: We hear about our Brothers in the State of Maine—we hear that they find GREAT ROGUE; this rogue, he gets folks, money; some time he burns houses—some time he kill people—some time he makes family very poor—some time he take way senses—some time he make 'em very cross and ragaged and dirty, and some time he freeze 'em to death.

Now we hear our brothers there—they try to stop it—they try talk about it, see if can stop it little—but he wont stop. We hear at last our brothers won't bear it no longer—so they make law to knock him on head, any where they find him in barrel, or jug or bottle, in tavern, grocery or barn, any where—knock him on head! Now we want to tell you, Brothers, that this big Rogue has been here to Onondaga; he has made us great trouble. Some of our people would be very good if this bad fellow would keep away. We try—our people try some, too—but he will not. Now what we ask you is to make laws—such as our brothers in the State of Maine have made. We have tried coax him—but he wont be coax; we try scare—he wont scare much; he still make great deal trouble; we think better make law to knock him on head—then he make us no more trouble. We Christian party ask, it, and some pagan, too—most all ask it—you make this law.

Now Brothers—our people sold our land to white people, and white people make treaty—he say be good to Indian. But he let the Rogue trouble us most too long. Now, Brothers, we was once great people, and we have gone to war for our white brothers; but now we are few, and our white brothers are strong. We want you help us—we want you make this law, so when we find this Rogue we kill him. We see him great many times, but we mean to be good and peaceable, and so he get away; but if you make this law, then we kill him, and then we live happy and friendly—no more cross—no more ragged—no more flight, but raise corn, wheat, oats, beans, cattle, and horses,—no more get drunk—no more freeze to death—work and get good things like white men.

DAVID SMITH, }

And sixty-one more of the Onondagas.

MARCH 28 1852.

The Tribune thinks the prospect of the enactment of the Maine Law by the Legislature of New York, at its present session, is becoming better every day.

The rum importers, distillers, and sellers of New York, are about to form a Protection Society, with a bribery and corruption fund of $100,000.

A rum seller in Philadelphia has adopted the Maine Law in advance—has become a tee-totaler, and made a general smash and crash of his liquors on the pavement.

The New York temperance men have resolved to go for the prohibition of the rum-traffic and no farther; to do this is all that is needed.

The citizens of Wheeling are circulating a memorial praying of the Virginia Legislature to enact the Maine liquor law.

A petition in favor of the Maine Law has been signed by eleven thousand persons in Cincinnati.

The Maine rum sellers talked about spilling their blood when the Maine Law went into effect, but it turned out to be their liquor.

The State of Maine, now an Asylum for inebriates, is an institution compared with which the 'Crystal Palace' was but a child's toy.

HATCHING CHICKENS BY STEAM.—Having heard that Mr. Carman, one of our citizens, was engaged in hatching chickens by steam, or rather warm water, (for he does not suffer the temperature to rise high enough to generate much steam,) we had our curiosity excited to see the operation, so we paid him a visit a few days since. We supposed he had a large room fitted up. with a boiler something like those on a locomotive, with about a quarter of a ton of anthricite for fuel—what was our surprise when we arrived there, to see the whole affair perched upon a small table, being about two and a half feet long, and something like sixteen or eighteen inches broad, and heated by a small oil lamp. About twenty chickens had already burst their shells and appeared as lively as those produced by natural means and under the guardianship of a clucking hen. This diminutive chicken producer contains about one hundred eggs—and he informed us that it only required about a gallon and a half of oil to a hatching. It is his intention to put two more of these "machines" in operation in a short time.

A certain old lady was once arguing strongly for woman's right to preach, when some one attempted to put her down with a text from St. Paul. "Ah," said she, "there is where Paul and I differ."

A DEAD SHOT.—The Milwaukee Commercial Advertiser tells the following good story of U———, of Racine, an indefatigable and successful sportesman—a 'dead shot' at anything in the game kind, but particularly 'fine lined' on wild geese, whose heads were sure to suffer, 'just back of the eye,' if within range of his rifle.

Not many seasons since, out hero, with an equally fun loving friend, after spending a day with their dogs and guns, were wending their way homeward, when in the evening twilight the waggish companion discovered the head and neck of a wild goose peering through a neighboring fence.

'Stop your noise,' said U., 'and wait a bit. I'll have him, just back of the eye—you can bet your life on that.'

Stepping back a pace, and bringing the old trusty to his face, U. blazed away.

'Hallow, there!' followed back the report, 'what are you shooting here for? Don't you know the difference between the handle of a corn plow and a goose's neck?'

It was enough! U. had shot the handle off of a corn plow, 'jest back of the eye!' U. doesn't very often indulge, but the bare mention of that shot will open his heart to the crowd.

AN INCIDENT.—A few days since, while at Washington, a brother, who has been raised from the degradation of tho gutter, to respectability in all the misery of a drunkard's home, related to us the simple story of his reformation, which will be found contained in the following words:

While in a state of sobriety, he went to the shop of a barber, in order to get shaved; his beard having grown excessively long and dirty while spreeing. After being properly shaved, he went home, and put on some clean clothes. He then took a paper up, and was engaged in reading, when his little daughter, a child of five or six years old, while gazing on the clear shaved face of her father, said to her mother, "Mother, don't papa look pretty when he don't drink?" and then turning to her father, said, "Papa, you won't drink any more, will you?" The appeal was not made in vain. It fixed the heart of the father. His resolution was taken. He then and there solemnly pledged himself to his wife, his child, and his God, that he would thenceforth and forever abstained from the intoxicating bowl.

Years have rolled their annual rounds since that pledge was given, and the father has religiously kept his promise. That now happy family is gliding along with the rapidity of time, towards the ocean of eternity; soon they will pass through the gloomy portails of the tomb, and enter the paradise of their God, where happiness forever dwells.

And now, dear reader, if it should be your lot to share the joys of Heaven, and you behold, while gazing over the millions of the redeemed of earth, a little group around the throne of God, you will see in the crown of one a brighter gem than all the others; and should you ask the reason why this is, the answer will be borne back to your listening ears, "In yonder world that child was made the instrument in the hand of God, in saving a father from a drunkard's grave and from a drunkard's hell."

NEW JERSEY.—The "Maine Law" has failed in the Legislature of this State, by a vote of 53 to 46—a majority for rum of only 7! We confess we are surprised that after an agitation of the subject for only two months, the friends of the measure did so well. The editor of the Reporter, who evidently has a fellow feeling for something, seems to chronicle its defeat with some exultation. Wait and see.

Will the people of New Jersey, after coming so near a victory, sink back to indifference? If they do we don't know anything about the Jersey blue!

The following is a translation of a German ballad on a tipsy man, which has been set to music, and is often sung in Germany; it is rather droll in the original, and perhaps has not lost all its humor, in being overset, as they call it, into English:

OUT OF THE TAVERN, ETC.

Out of the tavern I've just stepped to night:
Street! you are caught in a very bad plight:
Right hand and left hand are both out of place—
Street, you are drunk, 'tis a very clear case.
Moon, 'tis a very queer figure you cut;
One eye is staring, while t'other is shut.
Tipsy, I see; and you're greatly to blame;
Old as you are, 'tis a horrible shame.
Then the street lamps, what a scandalous sight!
None of them soberly standing upright;
Rocking and staggering; why, on my word,
Each of the lamps is as drunk as a lord.
All is confusion: now isn't it odd?
I am the only thing sober abroad.
Sure it were rash with this crew to remain:
Better go into the tavern again.

NEW VOLUME OF THE

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE MAGAZINE.

COMMENCING JANUARY 1, 1852.

ON the first of January, 1852, the new volume of the American Temperance Magazine, edited by Gen. S. F. Cary, will be commenced. The first number will contain three beautiful engravings, one of which will be a splendid portrait of Hon. Neal Dow, (the Napoleon of the Temperance Army,) with a Biographical Sketch, and giving the operations of the Maine Liquor Law. Our New volume will open with several marked improvements; and we intend to render each succeeding number more and more worthy the generous patronage of the public.

☞ We have the happiness to inform the readers of the Magazine, that an original story, written expressly for our pages by Mrs. C. W. Denison, will shortly appear. It will be entitled—

HOPE STERLING—A TALE OF NEW ENGLAND.

In view of our arduous exertions, and of the large expenses we are constantly incurring in this good work, we confidently appeal to the friends of temperance, and of a sound American Literature for their generous support. We really feel that our Magazine deserves it; that it is, and will ever continue to be, under our direction, a guide, a counsellor, a companion, which the lovers of sound morals, and human happiness ought to aid in introducing to every temperance organization and family in the land.

TERMS—$2 per annum; 10 copies for $16; 20 for $30; and one gratis, to the brother sending a club in advance. Money to be remitted at the publisher's risk. Please address—

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thought has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

PROSPECTUS

OF

THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.

Published in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and devoted to the Interests of the Order of the Temple of Honor.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

THIS Popular Magazine, having met with the hearty approval of the Temple Order, wherever it circulated during its first year, will commence its Second Volume on the first of September, 1851. It will as heretofore be issued on the first of every month, each number containing

THIRTY TWO PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER,

in pamphlet form, convenient for binding—making at the end of the year a volume of three hundred and eighty-four pages—at the low price of

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The established character of this Magazine—its approval and recommendation by National, Grand, and Subordinate Temples—the liberal terms on which it is published, placing it within the reach of every member of the Order—and the will render it a desirable companion for every Templar who wishes to supply his family with good temperance reading, and keep himself posted in the doings and progress of the Order of which he is a member. This Magazine is the first and ONLY publication ever devoted particularly to the Temple Order, and is not confined to any locality, but is designed to be the Organ of the whole Order. This gives it a peculiar claim on the Fraternity for encouragement and support.

While it aims to be the expositor of the Temple Order, it will give an impartial and faithful history of all important temperance movements, whether by individual or associated action, or legislative enactments and thus form a valuable journal for every friend of temperance and morality.

The services of several able writers are already secured for its pages; and, as the subscription list increases, more will be added. No labor or expense, consistent with our means, will be spared to make it just what the temperance portion of community desire: a good family Magazine not surpassed by any in the country.

TERMS: One Copy for one Year (12 numbers), $1 00
" " " Six Months, (6 "), 50

Invariably in advance.

☞ Newspapers and periodicals publishing this Prospectus; and sending a marked copy to this office will be entitled to a copy of the work.

J. WADSWORTH

Cincinnati, August 1, 1851.

☞ ALL SUBSCRIPTIONS will be expected to commence at the beginning or middle of a volume (September or March). To new subscribers, sending for the work at any other time, we will forward the numbers back to the nearest of these periods, provided they are on hand, excepting those who wish to begin with a new volume. In no case will it be sent longer than ordered. When the time expires for which a person has ordered the work, he will bear in mind that we have no means of knowing that he wishes it continued, but by a renewal of his subscription.

All remittances and communications should be addressed to J. WADSWORTH, Editor of Templar's Magazine, Cincinnati. Remittances by mail may be sent at our risk, when directed as above, mailed in the presence of a post-master or other responsible person.

Money, current at the place sent from, will be received on subscription, but that which is current in Cincinnati is always preferable. Bills on Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky banks, are at par in Cincinnati.—Those on country banks, at a distance, are at a greater discount than those on banks in large cities.

A specimen number of the work will be sent, without charge, to any one wishing to examine it before subscribing; but no name unaccompanied with the subscription price for one year or six months, will be entered on our books.

THE COTTAGE HOME, OR DRUNKARD'S DREAM.

Sung to SUSANNA or CALIFORNIA.

I dreamed a pleasant dream the night
When all around was still,
I thought I saw my cottage white
Upon yon flowry hill:
The grass plat green before the door,
The porch with vines o'ergrown,
Were lovely as they were before
When that home was my own:
O rumseller, that home that home of thine—
That pleasant home, that happy home,
That cottage home was mine.

The gravelly walk so white and straight
With flowery banks each side,
Which led down to the wicket gate
Where Willy used to hide,—
The locust o'er the path that grew—
The willow boughs that swayed,
All told to me a story true
That there my Mary played.
O rumseller, &c.

The silver lake so calm, so clear,
Along whose banks I've strayed,
So often with my Lucy dear,
To watch the sunlight fade;
The branch that purling sweetly ran,
And murmured soothingly along—
The ocean floating as it sang,
Still sung the same beloved song.
O rumseller, &c.

The window toward the garden gate
That looked out on the west,
Where that loved being used to wait
That made my home so blest,
Now closed the sombre curtain hung
And no loved face is there,
Nor voice the winning song that sung
Or breathed the morning prayer.
O rumseller, &c.

Silence long round that happy home
Where once so light and free,
My laughing children used to come
And dance upon my knee;
When she who was my home's delight
In constant beauty shone,
Around that cheerful hearth-stone bright
All now was still and lone.
O rumseller, &c.

Yes, that loved one has gone to rest,
Her heart in death is bound,
Her babes lie sleeping on her breast
Beneath yon grassy mound,
And I am wandering lone and 'stranged,
Not master of my will,
My home my cottage home is changed
For a hut behind the still!
O rumseller, &c.

ODE TO RUM.

BY WM. C. BROWN.

"Oh, thou invisible spirit of rum! if thou hadst no name by which to know thee, we would call thee—devil!"—Shakspeare.

Let thy devotees extol thee,
And thy wondrous virtues sum;
But the worst of names I'll call thee,
O, thou hydra monster, Rum!

The Drunkard's Funeral.

A SCENE IN NEWARK.

"Can you attend a funeral this afternoon at 2 o'clock?" inquired a man beyond the meridian of life, who stood at my door, with an expression of sympathy upon his countenance—"Can you attend a funeral at the corner of —— and —— streets? There is a man dead there, sir; and although he is poor, yet we do not like to bury him without some kind of religious services. We should be very glad, sir, if you could attend."

"I am sorry to say that it is out of my power to comply with your request," I replied, "inasmuch as I am previously engaged to attend a funeral at that hour, in another direction."

"I am very sorry, sir," he replied; but after a moment's reflection, again inquired—"Could you not come a little later, if we were to defer it an hour? Could you not come at three o'clock?"

"I think I can," I replied. At all events I will come as near that hour as possible."

He left me, and at the appointed time I went to fulfill my first engagement. A man of four score years was sleeping his last long sleep. Relatives and friends were occupying the comfortable and well-furnished apartments absorbed in grief. The services being over, the lengthy procession moved slowly onward to the peaceful mansions of the dead. It was not a costly burial, but such as we could desire for ourselves—plain solemn, appropriate—nothing extravagent, yet nothing wanting; and while we felt that the burial was such as we could desire, there was a congeniality also in the place selected for the last sleep of death, even our own beautiful and quiet cementry.

I hastened from these solemn, orderly, and appropriate obsequies, to obey my second summons. An open wagon, with one horse attached, and four or five individuals were standing near the door. I felt a chill run through my veins. Part of the fearful truth was now reveiled. The keen November wind was blowing, and the sky wore its gloomy autumnal aspect, but I feared there was keener anguish and deeper gloom within. I entered and at one glance at the table was told, It was the funeral of a drunkard! A small, cold, and desolate chamber was appropriated for the solemn services. Indeed, it was all they had. Here for a season had lived, and here had died, and now from here was to be buried, a husband and a father, who had lived and died a drunkard. It was a dreary place. There in one corner, upon a rough old rickety table, from which they had often eaten their cold and cheerless fair, was placed the coffin, made of rough pine boards, slightly stained with red, in which was placed the corpse. He was a man perhaps of fifty, coarsely clad with grave clothes. His countenance, if an index to his state of mind, bespoke nothing but gloom. Around and underneath his head, where, in other places, I had often seen the downy pillow and the rich satin linings, were stuffed a few of the shavings roughly taken from the boards which composed his coffin.

I looked with spirit almost crushed within me, first at this new trophy of the reign of death, and then at the living around me.—Both were expressive of the deepest wretchedness. In an opposite corner, under a pile of old clothes, rudely thrown together, sat the unhappy widow, a tall, spare woman, pale as the corpse before me. Her eyes were large and sunken, and she was thinly and poorly clad; and as she sat, she wrang her hands as if to relieve the agony she felt within, while with almost every breath she gave a low, hollow, consumptive cough, which told me too plainly that death had marked her for his victim also. Several children were standing around and beside the table where the coffin rested, shivering with cold, and weeping from some cause—whether they understood the meaning of a father's death or not—and the tears rolled down their pale and hollow cheeks, upon the uncarpeted floor, in large and briny drops. A few of the neighbors had gathered to attend the solemn services connected with the funeral. They were seated, some on boxes, others upon an old worn out trunk, while others stood. It was a gloomy scene, gloomier than the day without, and the anguish keener than the biting blast.

I stood there in the midst of that group, a minister of Christ. The table was before me—the Bible so full of demonstrations against sin. But as I looked around me, it seemed as if sin had denounced itself.—There were the visible, tangible, heart-rendering fruits of a godless life, and if possible the more revolting spectacle of a godless death, upon all which seemed written, forsaken, hopeless, miserable. I strove to direct attention to the necessity of religion to preserve us from the vice and miseries of life, and to its holy consolations to support us under the trials of our earthly pilgrimage. But I feared then, and still fear, that it was too late for such advice. There were hearts there which had been so long accustomed to the treachery of men, so steeped in sorrow and accustomed to sin that they could hardly be led to repose confidence in God. Having commended them to the care of heaven and especially to the God of the poor, the coffin was carried down the narrow stairway, and the drunkard's family, half clad and shivering in the keen November wind, was placed in that one horse open wagon at the door, and following the hearse, drove lonely and sad through the streets of our Christian city, to the Potter's Field, the last resting place of the friendless poor, where the drunkard sleeps to-day unhonored and and unknown.—Sentinel.

The Rat.

No other animal is placed in circumstances which tend so continually to sharpen its wits as the rat, nor does any other appear to be of a more improvable nature. He is of a most intelligent family being related to the beaver, and in civilized countries he is not a wild creature; for he follows the progress of civilization, and adapts his own habits of life to it, so as to avail himself of its benefits.

The "pampered goose," who in Pope's Essay retorts upon man, and says that man was made for the use of geese, must have been forgetful of plucking-time as well as ignorant of the rites that are celebrated in all old-fashioned families on St. Michael's day. But the rat might with more apparent reason support such an assertion. He is not mistaken in thinking that cornstacks are as much for his use as for the farmer's; that barns and granaries are his winter magazines; that the miller is his acting partner, the cheesemonger his purveyor, and the storekeeper his steward. He places himself in relation with man, not as his dependent, like the dog, nor like the cat as his ally, nor like the sheep as his property, nor like the ox as his servant, nor like the horse and ass as his slaves, nor like the poultry who are to "come and be killed" when Mrs. Bond invotes them; but as his enemy,—a bold and daring borderer, a Jonny Armstrong or Rob Roy, who acknowledges no right of property in others, and lives by spoil.

Wheresoever man goes, the rat follows, or accompanies him. Town or country are equally agreeable to him. He enters upon your house as a tenant at will, (his own, not yours,) works out for himself a covered way in your walls, ascends by it from one story to another, and leaving you the larger apartments takes possession of the space between the floor and ceiling, as an entresol for himself. There he has his revels, his parties and his gallopades, (merry ones they are,) when you would be asleep, if it were not for the spirit with which the youth and belles of rat land keep up the ball over your head. And you are more fortunate than the rest of your neighbors, if he does not prepare for himself a mosleum behind your chimney-piece or under your hearth-stone, retire into it when he is about to die, and very soon afford you full proof that, though he may have lived like a hermit, his relics are not in the odor of sanctity. You have, then the comfort of knowing that the spot so appropriated will henceforth be used either as a cemetary, or a family vault. In this respect, as in many others, neares approaches are made to us by inferior creatures than are dreamed of in our philosophy.

The adventurous merchant ships a cargo for some distant port, rat goes with it. Great Britain plants a colony in Botany Bay, Van Dieman's Land, or at the Swan River, rat takes the opportunity of colonizing also.—Ships are sent upon a voyage of discovery, rat embarks as a volunteer. He doubled the stormy cape with Diaz, arrived at Malabar in the first European vessel with Gama, discovered the New World with Columbus, and took possession of it at the same time, and circumnavigated the globe with Magellan, and with Drake, and with Cook.—Southey's "Doctor."

A man, some sixty-five years of age, living in the town of Surry, recently came home to his family intoxicated, and abused them and cut a deep gash in his own arm with a knife, and attempted the life of his wife with the same implement. He has always been an intemperate man, and it is worthy of note that his numerous family of children have all been temperate and active in the temperance cause.—Maine Watchman.

Mad Dogs and Rum,

"Mad dog!" What is more terrific than to see a mad dog at large in the streets? Every one, high and low, rich and poor, joins the universal cry, "mad dog, mad dog! kill him, kill him!" The dog is doomed, whether he infuse the virus of his horrible disease into the veins of some unfortunate human being or not. The risk is too great—hydrophobia is too dreadful—the dog must die! That is right, kill him! Yet there is a more appalling evil, and harder to kill, every day and every night at work in the streets and alleys of all of our cities and villages; and yet very few attempt to kill it. To kill it! no; the Government gives it a lease of its life! Yes, rum, hot, burning, destroying rum, is poured into the vitals of our citizens by thousands of gallons, burning up our young men in their full strength! and Christian legislators raise money for Government by selling licenses to dribble out the poison by retail, so small as to gather the pennies that charity drops into the lap of poverty and beggary. The mad dog poisons the blood of a single victim and he is shot. Rum murders his tens of thousands every year—thousands of fathers leaving their families to beggary and untold woe! From the death struggle of the hydrophobic the immortal spirit may pass in hope to scenes of purity and unending peace. From the death struggle of rum's victim hope—heavenly hope—shrouds her beaming face. And who, alas, shall dispel the deep darkness that settles o'er his grave? Yet strange it is we do not see the people rising in their strength! we do not hear every man, woman, and child cry out against intoxicating liquors, as they do against a mad dog? nor cease nor rest until the monster is destroyed!—Visiter.

LATE RIOT IN ST. LOUIS.—The St. Louis papers speak of a most shameful and criminal outrage which took place in the First Ward, on Monday the 5th inst. Some were killed, others wounded; and property was destroyed in a number of coffee houses, and some three houses were burned down. Papers occupying different sides in politics give conflicting statements respecting this criminal and disgraceful riot. The abominable affair seems interwoven in a web of political strife.

Upon the head of whatever party or person the guilt of the horrid outrage rests, it is plain that the city government is accountable for the origin and results of the riot. That government licensed the coffee houses. These houses are potent engines in the hands of politicians. The liquor furnished or sold and drank at these vestibules of hell, inflamed the passions, and but for the excitement produced by the liquor, and coffee house influence, the riot would not have take place. It is also plain that the liquor in city, village, or country places interferes with the right and rational exercise of the elective franchise, disturbs public peace, and renders insecure the lives and property of citizens. Yet this monster evil is licensed and drives on its work of ruin under authority of law. City governments license conffee houses under the pretext of bringing money into their treasuries, when the history of their administrations abundently demonstrate that for every red cent they get for license they have to pay out hundreds of dollars. The late criminal and disgraceful affair at St. Louis is but one of the constantly occurring instances illustrative of the fact. When will citizens and Commonwealths govern themselves by a sense of right?

Another remark here: The masses of unamericanized population should learn that American citizens highly prize the elective franchise; and that any attempt on the part of the former to interfere with or prevent the latter from exercising the elective, will meet with instant and positive resistance. The leaders in this, and other riots should be brought to a just punishment for their crime.—Tem. Battery.

THE SHERIFF OF NEW YORK.—We understand that the sheriff of this county has got quite sick of his office; the rum-shops send him more subjects to hang than he likes to attend to. They accumulate on his hands. There are no less than ten subjects for the gallows now in prison, and we have no doubt they will prepare and have as many more ready by the time the Sheriff gets rid of them. Our Sheriff is one of the best men in the world, but he does not like to send men into another world for crimes committed under the influence of liquor furnished by the keepers of tippling shops—we were about to say of the lowest grade—but there are no different grades; a rumshop is a rumshop; and a rumdealer is a rumdealer; they are all of one and the same stripe.—Weekly Visitor.

Temples.

The Temple Order is marching through our country with a great degree of speed. Nothing can stop or retard its onward propress. We are much inclined to think that its enemies have come to the conclusion to give up their deadly opposition to the Order—it is all nonsense—they could as well turn the current of the North River as stop the progress of the Temple Order. We have frequently warned them to keep off the track, or they would get run over. The old temple car with her usual speed would pass over an army of these chaps and not feel them. In conclusion, we would ask the fellows who have harped so much against the Temple Order, if they don't think it best to give up, and try and make amends for the past by doing better in future. Now answer candidly—answer, we do promise from this day henceforth never again to be guilty of any such mean action. Good; we take you at your word, and put you on probation for your good behavior.

We have said time and again that we would support all well regulated moral temperance orders; we have no desire to proscribe any man's temperance creed, any more than we have his religious creed. The Temple Order is good, and so are many others; let men choose for themselves, and then work without growling because others do not think as they do; act like men. If you act up to the principles of the Temple Order, you must be a good man; and if you do not, after taking their most solemn and binding obligation, you must be one of the most consummate scoundrels on earth. We are sorry to say that some do not keep it.—Visiter.

TEMPERANCE AT WASHINGTON.—Mr. Strong of the city of New York, is the builder of the wings of the Capitol. He employs some three or four hundred men, a large portion of whom he found used to drink the "ardent" daily or hourly. He "took the responsibility," and issued an order to the effect that no man in his employ would be allowed to bring a bottle on the grounds, or leave during working hours to visit a grogery. This called forth unnumbered curses and the cry of "Yankeeism," &c. The builder is inflixible in his purpose, and it is worth a journey to hear the music of these hundreds of artificers and builders, and to witness the skilful tool-using and order.

This fact is the more worthy of mention, taken in connection with one found on the records, which shows that a portion of the builders on the Capitol were allowed by Government one quart of whisky each per day. Rumor says that they drank it, and at dusky eve were athirst for more.—Independent.

The Sons of Temperance begin to understand that they have a duty to perform, besides attending to their weekly meetings, in this State; they have a mighty work to do this year; if they are true to themselves, they will prepare for another campaign without delay. It has been the practice of temperance men in this State to fold up their arms and lay by during the summer season, but we hope and trust that such will not be the case this season; keep up your meetings, stand by your arms, there must be a desperate battle fought the coming Fall; we must and will give the rum party a terrible thrashing; they expect the friends of temperance will haul off, and abandon the cause of temperance during the presidential election; but we trust they will be disappointed. The Sons did themselves much credit in the last campaign. If all temperance orders will abandon their little bickering, and go into the field united, and determined never to leave the battle-ground, until their efforts are crowned with victory, they may depend upon it the rum party will be put to flight.—Visitor.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.—We call attention to the advertisement of this article now in our paper, and at this season of the year when colds and caughs are so prevalent, the information it contains will not be found unwelcome. The eminent names, lent to recommend it, are conclusive proof of its value. In addition to these we have been favored with the perusal of letters from many distinguished individuals as well as humble sufferers who acknowledge their indebtedness to this valuable medicine for the recovery of their health from painful and dangerous diseases. It is at once safe and pleasant to take, and is certainly very powerful to cure. Those afflicted with coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, or indeed any of the various affections of the lungs, will do well to try the Cherry Pectoral, and will have no cause to regret the experiment.

TEMPERANCE CHART.

PUBLISHED SEMI-MONTHLY BY THE GRAND DIVISION S. OF T., STATE OF INDIANA.

TERMS:—50 cents a year, in advance.

Edited by C. WOODWARD, G. S.

OFFICE—At Adams & Co.'s Express Office, near the Court-House.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., JUNE 1, 1852.

To Correspondents.

Our numerous correspondents must excuse us at this time for neglecting them.

We have been absent since our last paper was issued, and found on our return such a pile of correspondence that we have not yet ventured to look it over. When the Chart is issued weekly we will not get so far behind.

The Grand Temple of Indiana.

The annual session of this body was held at Mt. Vernon on Wednesday, May 26th.

The session was one of great harmony, and though the amount of business transacted was not large, yet every thing went off with the most cordial uninimity.

The following officers were elected for the present year:

Charles Woodward, Indianapolis, G. W. T.
John A. Mann, Mt. Vernon, G. W. V. T.
John H. Ohr, Indianapolis, G. W. R.
Elijah Sabin, New Albany, G. T.
Daniel McIntire, Princeton, G. W. C.
Robert Robson, New Harmony, G. W. U.
W. P. Robinson, Jeffersonville, G. W. G.

On Tuesday the Temple at Mt. Vernon had a celebration, and the order turned out in regalia, with the members of the Sons of Temperance, and Social Degree, and after taking the circuit of the town repaired to one of the churches, and listened to very interesting addresses from Bros. Shumard and Sabin.

On Friday we attended the meeting of their large Social Degree, and were much pleased with the promptness of its officers and the excellent proficiency of its members.

The ladies of Mt. Vernon Social Degree are not excelled in any place for their devotion to our noble Order.

On Thursday and Friday evenings the ladies invited us to a splendidly gotten up Fair, where we were introduced to the beauty of the town and enjoyed ourselves finely.

We shall long remember our visit to Mt. Vernon, and the generous hospitality with which we were treated by its citizens. Let them but close up the five filthy whisky shops they have in their midst, and they are excelled by but few towns in Indiana.

Our Second Volume.

On Wednesday the 23d inst. we shall issue the first number of the second volume of the Chart, and commence its publication weekly. We are happy to say that we have already received several large lists of subscribers, and find that some of our friends are active. Let them continue to do as well as they did last year, and we will soon have a large subscription. Who will not subscribe to a weekly temperance paper at 50 cents a year?

As we do not wish to publish any more copies than we have subscribers, we will thank our friends to send us all the names possible during the present month. All subscribers who have only paid to the end of the first volume must renew their subscription, or their paper will stop.

The low price of the paper makes advance payments absolutely necessary.

Every W. P. and D. G. W. P., every W. C. T. and D. G. W. T., in fact every friend of temperance will consider themselves the authorised agents for the Chart.

Let it not be said that Indiana, after sustaining a temperance paper for one year has let it fail on the second. If our friends do their duty we have no fears of the result.

A Temperance Law.

We regret that we cannot advise our readers of the passage of a good temperance law, but our Legislators have not yet concluded to obey the clearly expressed will of the people, and pass one.

They have under consideration a bill introduced by Mr. Owen, which, though it does not please us, yet as we have no hope of a better one this session, we hope will pass, but we will never be satisfied with anything short of the Maine Law.

The Progress of Temperance.

During our recent journey we travelled pretty extensively in four States, and as we had in former years traveled over the same ground, we could see the progress of our cause, and were truly gratified to note its rapid strides.

Leaving home we traveled over the Terre-Haute Railroad at a rapid rate, and soon reached Greencastle; but as a car-ride is a poor place to note the progress of Temperance, except among the passengers, we must confine our observation to them. And here we are sorry to say, that we could not discover much progress. We found on board sundry of the "upper ten" from Lafayette, and the way they punished bad brandy was a caution; but we noticed this much progress, that whereas this class has been in the habit of using their liquors in public and boasting of it, now they had it carefully concealed in the baggage car, whither they made frequent visits. They will soon be ashamed to use the article at all.

Arriving at Terre Haute, we found that it was one of the towns far behind the times on the Temperance question.

With a location and advantages not excelled by any city in the State, its citizens at the last election voted License, and the Rum tavern at which we stopped, told the effect of that vote.

But as we only wanted supper, we took it and left. Traveling all night in the mud and rain, we arrived at Paris to breakfast, and found that the grogshops which we found there ten years ago, had disappeared, and Paris was a changed town. We arrived at Charleston on Saturday, and saw more drinking and more drunken men in this place than we had seen ever in a place of the same size. For the credit of the place, however, we were informed that these scenes are only exhibited on Saturdays or when the Court is in session, and that on other days Charleston is a sober and orderly town. It certainly could improve. Shelbyville is one of the finished towns, and though it was very quiet when we were there, we were informed by a friend that one whisky-shop had sold two barrels of whisky by the quart on the Saturday before. This shows conclusively the operation of all temperance laws which aim only at restraining instead of ending the traffic as does the law of Illinois, although that State is far in advance of us in temperance legislation.

A ride of a day and night brought us to the city of Springfield, the capital of the State of Illinois, and here we will rest for the present, resuming our journey in our next.

Whisky and Flogging.

The Navy Department has advertised for 35,000 gallons of genuine Whisky, for the use of the Navy. But a short time since, a strenous effort was made by the friends of reform, to abolish the use of the lash and rope's end from the Navy, but such efforts are useless as long as such quantities of whisky are provided for the unfortunate sailor. When a man uses whisky he will be insubordinate, and the purchase of this 35,000 gallons of whisky will make the use of the lash doubly necessary.

Abolish whisky from the Navy and you may abolish flogging, and not before, for if any thing will make the cruel custom actually necessary to subordination, it will be the use of this same 35,000 gallons of Whisky.

Drunken Legislators.

We saw a member of the Indiana Senate so drunk a few days since, in the street, that the sidewalk was too narrow for him, and are informed that another member of the same body was so drunk at one of our Hotels that he could scarcely sit in his chair at dinner.

We leave comments to our readers.

Progress of the Maine Law.

This celebrated Law has passed the Legislature of Massachusetts.

It has also passed the Legislature of Rhode Island, and is now the law of that State.

The lower branch of the Legislature of Maryland have also passed it, subject to the vote of the people.

The Committee in the Va. House have reported against the Maine Liquor Law.

The Grand Temple of Illinois.

On the 19th of May, as Deputy M. W. T., the editor of this paper organized the Grand Temple of Illinois at Peoria. The Temples of the State were well represented, and the prospects of the new Grand Temple very flattering. The following officers were elected for the present year:

Wilson Millor, Chicago, G. W. T.
L. K. Flanders, Peoria, G. W. V. T.
Charles H. Deane, Peoria, G. W. R.
S. B. King, Peoria, G. T.
D. E. Ruckle, Springfield, G. W. C.
Albert G. Burr, Winchester, G. W. U.
J. G. Kilpatrick, Do. G. W. G.

☞ Hon. E. A. Hannegan, of Indiana, a man who has been a United States Senator, in a drunken broil, stabbed fatally the brother of his wife, the unfortunate man living only twenty-six hours after receiving the wound. The brother-in-law had been an inmate of Mr. Hannegan's house for two years—they were on the best of terms; yet under the influence of liquor they quarreled—the quarrel resulted in the death of Mr. Duncan.—Cayuga Chief.

As our readers have long since learned all the particulars of this unfortunate occurrence, it is needless to give them again, but we have introduced the above article for the purpose of making some comments, as Mr. Hannegan was well known throughout the State.

In the first place, we will say that we once heard Mr. H. make one of the strongest temperance appeals to which it has ever been our fortune to listen. He was then a Son of Temperance, and had he remained firm to his pledge, we have no doubt he would now give worlds if he had them.

Let us then learn from this, the value of our Temperance pledge.

Had our Legislature enacted and enforced the Maine Law and shut up the groceries of Covington and driven the liquor and the liquor-sellers from the place, Mr. H. would have been now a happy man, and his family saved a deep affliction.

We wish to point out this occurrence to our young men, and warn them that talents and worth and office and honors will not shield them from the all-pervading destroyer.

From the bottom of our soul we pity this unfortunate man and his family, and would not have made these remarks, but that we wished to use every means in our power to convince the people of the baseness of the liquor traffic, and to warn our young men of their danger.

We consider the mean and contemptible scoundrel who sold the liquor much the most guilty man of the two, and we look upon the community who license the traffic, as worse than murderers.

Let all take warning and avoid that vortex into which so many slide and are lost.

A wag suggests that the only difference between the Liquor Law of Maine and that of New Hampshire is about five or six feet. The liquor of Maine being emptied on the ground, while that of New Hampshire is emptied about five or six feet above the ground.

We know a good many Hooshiers who empty their whiskey about five and a half feet above the ground, but it soon brings them to the ground.

We suspect this is the case in New Hampshire.

Bishop Hedding, the senior Bishop of the Methodist Church, died at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. after a long illness, on the 9th inst.

A Little too Hard.

On Saturday last, the city Marshal seized at the P. S. and P. Depot, one quarter cask brandy, said to be a rare article, (the rarer the better say we) one twenty gallon keg Old Cherry Wine, $2,75 per gallon; and one ten gallon keg cheap Wine. The above specified liquors are said to belong to Mr. Woodward of the U. S. Hotel. Mr. W. was very anxious for a change in the administration, and rejoiced somewhat at the result of the election on the 6th ult. But alas! who can tell what an illusive thing is human hope. He certainly has reason to offer the old prayer, "save me from my friends." There was a display of fireworks from the U. S. Hotel on the evening after the eleetion.—Maine Temp. Watchman.

We see from the above that the Whiskyites of Portland have "caught a Tartar" in the election of Mayor Parris. An Irishman who was brought before him remarked, "His Honor is the worst Dow of the two, as the other Dow carried but one face, while this one has two."

To attempt any other course in Portland would be foolish, for the voters of that city are ten to one in favor of the Maine Law, and nothing short of it.

The Maine Law in Minnesota.

Some time since we announced to our readers that the Legislature of Minnesota had passed the Maine Law, with a provision submiting it to a vote of the people.

We cut the following from the Minnesota Pioneer:

The Election last Monday.—The result of the vote of Minnesota, last Monday, on the provisions for adopting "the Maine Liquor Law" here, was, yes, by a decided majority. The law will therefore take effect on the first of May next, and every good citizen will cheerfully obey and cordially and zealously maintain it. This being the general disposition of those who voted against the law, as well as of those who voted for it, we have no reflections to make whatever; but we cordially invite all now to unite for the support and supremacy of the law.

The noble women of St. Paul, prepared a superb banquet for all, at the Hall of the Sons.

Before the polls closed the masses of ice, that have so long fettered the river, ominously broke up and majestically moved down stream; the river shone in the light of the sun like a burnished serpent, that has long sloughed his skin; and in the evening, the four church bells pealed the merry chime of victory in Minnesota over the deadliest foe to human society and human happiness, that ever desolated a State or Terrirory.

With the extreme east and west in favor of the law, what has the center to fear? We will all be right soon. Three cheers for Minnesota.

☞ An attempt has recently been made in Maine, to repeal the celebrated Liquor Law, with what success the following paragraph taken from a Maine paper will show:

"The Legislative Committee on petitions for the repeal of the Temperance Law, has reported leave to withdraw."

Good.

The following, written of poor old Grimes is not true of some gassy, new-fangled politicians of the present time:

"His knowledge, hid from public gaze,
He seldom brought to view;
Nor made a noise town meeting days,
As many people do."

The following is from the Providence R. I. Temperance Advocate. A noble woman God bless her:

'In Foster, there was an intemperate man who had promised his wife that he would vote for the Maine Law candidates for the Senate and House. On the morning of election day, he was enticed to the tavern and treated by his anti-law associates till he was druuk. His wife heard of it, searched him out, and got him home. Here she gave him an emetic, and got him sober, and then borrowed a horse and wagon, and drove him to the polls. He voted for the Maine Law candidates, and his single vote prevented the election of a rum representative. The result of it is, that we got one and possibly two Maine Law men from that town."

More Liquor Spilt.—As a truck, containing several barrels of the 'critter,' was passing very early Thursday morning through Fore Street, by accident one of the casks rolled off and was precipitated suddenly down the hill into a house, and the head broken in. Awful to relate, the contents were spilt without a warrant; but enough more of the same sort being left it was stowed away and soon hidden from view. This was a sad calamity.—Maine Temperance Watchman.

The Election.—This important event has come and past, leaving behind its fruits, to gather in the future. What the yield will be, is now more than we can tell. But let the result be what it may, the friends of the Maine Law are stronger to-day, than they were before the election. Then all was involved in doubt—now there is a tangable strength, a consolidation of temperance power upon which to rely, more firm and sure than ever before.

We may be defeated this year, but there arises out of the defeat, if such it is, a reliable principle that shall extend itself until the leaven has done its complete work. Rum may gloat over temporary success, for temporary it will be, only to have defeat the more terrible when the final day of reckoning comes.

We are by no means disposed to despond or to be disheartened. If we were strong before in the belief that we should have in this State, a law similar to that of Maine, we are stronger than ever in that belief, since the election. New Haven has spoken in a voice not to be mistaken. It has pre-emptorially put its seal of condemnation upon the whole proceedings of the RUMOCRACY, where it will stick, until the entire State shall come up and sustain her decision.—The County has handsomely done the same thing. Was the favorable expression of New Haven and County the only one in the State it would abundantly compensate for all the labor that has been thus far expended.

Middletown, New London, Norwich, and many other towns we might name, have followed suit, and with our gallant county, have unequivocally proclaimed in favor of the Maine Law. To the unflinching friends of temperance, in all such places, we of New Haven and County send you greeting: Here's the right hand of fellowship. Count upon us firmly by your side to the end of the war. Stand strong in your integrity.—We have no cause for despondency or fear. Another year, at the most, will find a majority of the State with us, free and disenthralled.

It were better that a prohibitory enactment, strong as the one contemplated, should be deferred one year, or even longer, than that it should be forced through a Legislature by a bare majority vote. We will have such a law in all good time, and by a vote, too, that shall tell the readiness of the people to receive it, and be a sure guarantee of its subsequent stability.—Maine Law Advocate, New Haven, Conn.

A Hard Case.—On Tuesday evening, a mechanic about 36 years of age, named Strawbridge, called at the Marshal's office, in Charlestown and asked for lodging. He was suffering with the delirium tremens, and had been exposed to the pelting storm until drenched from head to feet. He begged that the officers would lock him up for the night, and desired that the Marshal would complain of him, in the morning, as a common drunkard, that he might be sent to the house of Correction where he could not get intoxicating drinks. He said he had tried hard to deprive himself of the use of liquors; but could not control his appetite. He remarked that he might feel different in the morning, and not want to go to the House of correction, but he knew it was for the best, and to make the thing sure, he got the Marshal to promise that he would enter the complaint and yesterday the unfortunate man was sentenced five months to the above named institution. He is said to be a man of good disposition, naturally industrous, and quite intelligent.—Boston Commonwealth.

A Good Reply.—Some years ago, when Kuakini was Governor of the Island of Kauai—one of the Sandwich Islands—some of the inhabitants, knowing him to be very avaricious and selfish, proposed to him to sell Rum, and make a monopoly of it—thinking his love of gain would induce him to do so. But, instead of complying with their proposal, Kuakini made the following excellent answer: "To horses, cattle, and hogs you may sell rum, but to real men you must not, on these shores."

What a noble reply from this late barbarian! How worthy the consideration of men living in this Christian community, whose wealth is the result of desolation and ruin, which they are spreading broadcast, over our land, by the traffic in spirituous liquors.—Union Ark.

In the Maryland House of Delegates, Mr. Kenney has reported a bill proposing to take the sense of the people on the propriety of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in that State.

Messers. J. W. Coward, W. Collinson, and Russell, who have recently emigrated from England to Utah, have taken with them machinery for the manufacture of beet-root sugar on the largest scale. They are wealthy men, and have invested $250,000 in this enterprise alone.

The Michigan Southern Railroad company have adopted a regulation that "no person will be employed on the road, who is in the habit of using intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

PERU, IND., May 11th, 1852.

Mr. Editor: — The recent action of the people's representatives upon the resolution of Mr. Berry in the Senate is without a parallel in the history of Legislation. Not content with exhibiting a wanton disregard and utter contempt for the will of their sovereigns, the Senate condescend to insult them for having dared to ask for a law suppressing the vilest, the most accursed evil which afflicts our race and nation.

When the Colonists offered up their prayers and petitions to the King and Parliament, they spoke as the humble and enslaved subjects of a tyrannical and powerful sovereignty. The latter being independant of the former, felt no sympathy with their wants or grievances, and the estimate placed by the colonists upon these repeated outrages upon their rights was fully exemplified in their subsequent acts, not only in vindicating their rights, but by establishing a representative government, resigning to the people the sovereignty, and among their earliest acts recognizing the right of the people to petition, and instruct their representatives. But alas, it has been left for a Senate of Indiana to discover that they are the sovereigns and the people slaves—that the people are ignorant of their interests and necessities, and they their dictators—that the people are simple and illiterate, and before their voice will be heard in the Senate they must go to school! Our fathers in the simplicity of their hearts supposed the right of petition was "inestimable to freemen, and formidable to tyrants only." They had not the advantage of schools, and therefore had not learned that a common school education was indispensable to a knowledge of their wants, or to a proper appreciation of their afflictions. Now one would have supposed that a man who had never seen the inside of a school room, could trace more or less of evil in the liquor traffic! but oh! the magnanimity of the immortal twenty-nine! they propose to pass a common school law to enlighten those of their constituents who have fallen into this error; and this at a time too, when thousands and tens of thousands of this same constituency were sending up their names to the Capitol and demanding action. From the demonstration made by the people, we had a right to expect action. It is notorious that the petitions were circulated publicly. The State has been canvassed—the public mind directed through the press to the action and the designs of the friends of temperance — overwhelming majorities from every section of the State who have spoken at all, have petitioned for the Maine Law, and what has been the result, and what the miserable apology for this action? Do they tell us the law is unconstitutional? No. That the manufacture and sale of alcohol is not an evil? No. That crimes and pauperism and death are not multiplied by our present system? No. That our taxes are not increased or our ability to pay them materially lessened? No. That by the law we ask, men would become worse citizens, husbands, fathers, or less qualified to discharge the important trusts of the State or Nation, or that the ballot box would be corrupted by its influence? No, No! no such pretence. They tell us the people are not prepared for the law; and they vote essentially, that the people should go to school, and not annoy their lordships further with petitions for the Maine law, as the legislature will not pass it without qualification. When petitions are rolling in upon them with thousands of signatures, and the press teeming with articles urging immediate action, the Senate determine they will not pass the law! oh no; although every citizen in the State petition, they notify us in advance, that they will not pass the law. I repeat, such a wanton disregard of the people's will; such a contempt for their instructions; such an insult to the sovereigns of a State for exercising an undoubted right, their earliest heritage as freemen, is without a parallel in the history of American legislation.

Among the immortal twenty-nine who voted for that resolution, I notice the name of Dr. B. Henton, the Senator from Miami and Wabash. When the Doctor was canvassing for his present seat in the Senate, the Temperance Central Committee of Miami county, addressed him and his opponent letters of enquiry through the columns of the "Miami County Sentinel," in which they propounded to him the following question substantially: "If a greater number of your constituency petition you to pass a temperance law than remonstrate against it, will you, if elected, consider yourself instructed by such petition and vote accordingly." The next paper contained his answer in the affirmative, and I have no hesitation in saying, that had his answer been in the negative, he could not have been elected. A large number of his constituency have petitioned him, first—to exercise his judgment and give them a good law; and lastly, requesting him to vote for the Maine Law. Has he obayed them? Has he done as he publicly pledged himself when a candidate? No, neither! Without a solitary remonstrance he has approved the Maine Law has told his constituents he would not obey their voice as expressed, and not only this, but by supporting the resolution of Mr. Berry, he has heaped upon them reproach and insult.

You will please place a copy of this statement before him, that he may have an opportunity of admitting or denying the pledge imputed to him through your columns; until which time, without further comment, I subscribe myself,

Yours truly,

MIAMI.

ECONOMY, May 30th, 1852.

BRO. C. WOODWARD: — Permit me to trouble the columns of the welcome Chart with a brief sketch of a Temperance Celebration at this place on yesterday.

According to previous invitations, the brethren of Summit, Blountsville, Newgarden, Williamsburgh, Mount Olive, Greenfork, and Wayne Divisions, met with us for the purpose of celebrating the glorious principles of our Order, and advancing the cause.

The morning was emblematical of our history, mists and clouds lowered darkly around, and threatened a serious inroad upon our anticipations, but as the bright luminary of day approached the zenith, the mists were gradually dispelled. The clouds rolled off in angry columns along the distant horizon, and the sun burst forth in all his resplendant beauty. This of course was cheering to the friends of the cause, as well as ominous of good, and all now became bustle and activity.

The procession formed at half past twelve o'clock, preceeded by the Washington brass band, Economy Division No. 95, immediately in their rear, followed by the Economy Union of the Daughters of Temperance No. 57, the other Divisions in the usual order. After marching through the principal streets, the procession proceeded to a beautiful grove north of town, where a stand had been erected, and suitable arrangements made for the immense concourse of people.

Judge John B. Stitt, of Centerville, then came forward, was introduced to the audience, and proceeded to address the meeting, depicting very lividly the evils of the liquor traffic and its intimate connection with crime in all its various phases. Judge Stitt was followed by Bro. Kelso, of Huntsville, in a brief but able and eloquent address. His remarks were well received. After which Dr. Henry Carver (a veteran in temance) and Bro. H. B. Rupe, of Economy Division, entertained the audience with some very interesting and appropriate remarks.

Mr. Carver suggested that inasmuch as political campaigns, when attended with excitement, had a deleterious effect upon the temperance cause, and as our presidential campaign was approaching, it would be well for Sons of Temperance and other Temperance Organizations to pass timely and effective resolutions in regard to the matter. A good suggestion.

The proceedings at the stand were enlivened by music from the Band, as occasion required, and also songs from the temperance choir, selected expressly for the occasion. The procession again formed and returned to town, when the Union and Divisions were each escorted to their respective rooms.

The whole affair was delightful and pleasant throughout. Nothing occurred during the day to mar the beauty of the occasoin in the least. The thanks of the Division are due to Judge Stitt, Bro. Kelso, Bro. Rupe, and Dr. Carver for their attendance and services at the stand. Quite a number of speakers were invited, but for some cause unknown to us, they were not with us, nor did we even receive a reply—the rules of common courtesy surely demanded the latter. Verily, we have yet some "wicked and slothful servants."

Yours fraternally,

W. W. GOOD, W. P.

The Maine Liquor bill passed the Massaceusetts House of Lepresentatives on Tuesday, by 93 majority, with a proviso postponing its operation for sixty days after its passage.

The population of the world is estimated at nine hundred and sixty millions.

LADOGA, MONTGOMERY Co., Ind., May 31st, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD: — I now sit me down to give you and the friends of temperance, an inkling of affairs in this part of the State. The car of temperance still continues to roll onward and upward. Our banner is unfurled, and our motto is, "push along keep moving." We are doing things "up brown." Whisky is one of the "has beens, and red noses and perfumed breaths are positively not seen or smelled any more. We might with propriety change the lines of the Poet and sing,

"The better times have come boys."

But few here advocate the anti-side, or that are in favor of using moral suasion, in the suppression of the liquor traffic. Now people may talk of boot suasion, and fist suasion, and things of that nature, but for sensible men to hold up moral suasion, is ridiculous. We find no moral men engaged in the God accursed business and necessarily it is impossible to reach them with kind words, or by moral suasion.

We have been trying moral suasion for years, and we see that it will not reach the hardened hearts "doggery men." We want a very different suasion to any heretofore tried—a legal suasion. Can we get it? is the question. I confess things look gloomy. We have petitioned our Legislature twice, a temperance convention was held under the roof of our Legislative Halls—but what are the results and what the fate of our petitions? Our petitions have been disregarded, and we have been treated with contempt. Men sometimes do much to secure popularity at home. But mark; those men who disregard and hoot at friendly calls, are retrogading, and have enjoyed three dollars a day for the last time. Maine Law men we vote for, and Maine Law men we'll send to our Capitol to make laws for us. We want sober men to go there. Our Social Order is doing wonders. Already 165 names are attached to the Pledge. The ladies all are members, and they are wielding a mighty influence. The little boys are talking temperance, the little girls are singing temperance songs, and in fact every thing about here is temperance. But more anon.

Yours in L. P. and F.,

A. P. M. RUDISILL.

☞ Mr. Greely of the New York Tribune says, in regard to a prohibitory law in New York:

"We hear much talk of the Maine Law as interfering with men's natural rights, subjecting them to inquisitorial searches, reducing the profits of landlords, breaking up the business of distillers, &c., but no man has ever yet asserted, so far as we have seen or heard, that Crime, Misery, Pauperism, Vagrancy, and the other fearfully increasing social evils of our time, would be increased by the passage of the act demanded of our Legislature by the prayers of over 200,000 petitioners. On the contrary, if the Rumsellers themselves were examined successively, and compelled to make answer on oath: "Do you not believe that our Jails, Prisons and Poor Houses would be largely depopulated by the passage of the Maine Law?" — we believe a majority of them would be constrained to answer.—"We do!"

Of what avail, then, are vague abstractions in the presence of such fearful facts as the Rum Traffic involves? Men in thousands are burning up their bodies, and burning out their souls with the liquid madness, which fills their homes with unspeakable wretchedness and dooms their children to shame, destitution and vice; yet we stand pottering over foggy generalities, as if it were a question concerning the rings of Saturn or the mountains in the moon.

We protest against this cold-blooded way of viewing the matter. The question on which our legislators are called to pass in considering the Maine Law, concerns the happiness of families, the prevalence of Vice or Virtue, the safety of human life. Of the last hundred murders in our State, it is perfectly within bounds to say that ninety would never have been perpetrated but for Intoxicating Liquors. Of the sixteen hundred criminals in our State Prisons, fully seven-eighths are either the children of drunkards, or themselves maddened by liquor when they were first impelled to crime. Of the eighteen thousand persons in one year arrested on charges of crime and misdemeanor, less than fifty were Total Abstinents, while a large majority were excessive drinkers. Of the denizens of our Alms Houses, nine-tenths have either been tipplers or were reduced to want by the tippling of others. Our gaming houses and haunts of infamy float their victims to perdition on a river of strong drink, without which they could scarcely and but meagerly exist. Yet, in full view of these appalling facts, journalists coolly chop logic about the perils of excessive legislation, the proneness of law-makers to intermeddle with what is none of their business, &c. They might as well call on our firemen to listen to a graceful and silver-toned speech in the midst of a vast and spreading conflagration."

The Summons Case.

Our readers are already familiar with the facts in this case. Summons has just been tried, for the fourth time, for murder in the first degree. He was charged with killing by administering poison. He evidently intended to destroy the whole of his father's family, and well nigh succeeded; all were seriously affected, and three died. The accused, though very respectably connected, was a poor vagabond drunkard, and committed the offense while under the maddening influence of liquor. In each of the former trials. it is said that a single man hung the jury, eleven being for finding the defendant guilty. In the last trial, the jury had no difficulty in returning their verdict of murder in the first degree.

He received the announcement with the most stoical indifference, and heard the sentence of death pronounced against him without manifesting the least emotion or concern. The principal witness on the former trials having died, her testimony, as given before, was permitted to go to the jury in this trial. The propriety of this was questioned by the counsel for the accused, and a motion for a new trial was insisted upon with great force and eloquence. The point in the case is, whether the clause of the Consitution has been complied with, which says, that every person charged with crime shall have the privilege of meeting his witnesses "face to face." The Court overruled the motion, but fixed the day of execution on the third of February next, that the counsel might present his case to the Supreme Court. Our own opinion is, that the point is well taken, and that the Supreme Court in Bank will so decide. That the accused is guilty, we do not entertain a doubt, and, if legally convicted, he ought to suffer the penalty of the law, if ever there was a case demanding such a penalty. This is another instance of the villainy of the liquor traffic. But for this infernal trade, the innocent would not have been sent to premature graves, and the young man, instead of being a murderer, would have been a worthy member of society. The respected parents must go to their graves sorrowing — a wife and child must writhe under the burning curse of being the wife and child of a murderer. Oh, what a train of ills does the liquor traffic bring with it! When shall liquor be outlawed and banished? It is, perhaps, too small a matter to be worthy of remark in this connection, that this case has already cost the taxpayers of Hamilton county, more than fifty thousand dollars. Yet some, (alas for poor human nature,) consider this as the worst feature of the case. This, is to us, no source of regret; we do not care how much that community have to pay, who will quietly and tamely submit to the more cruel inflictions of the liquor traffic. These expenses, in the estimation of many, are nothing when compared with the profits accruing to the farming and commercial interests from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating poisons. If the farmer can only secure a market for his corn, we can well afford to pay the costs of pauperism and crime. A few suicides and murders in the United States (say forty thousand, annually,) are not worth mentioning in comparison with the great wealth flowing in upon us from the cause of all this waste of human life. The desolate homes, the broken-hearted wives, the children reduced to cruel orphanage, are necessary results of the distiller and liquor sellers enjoying their constitutional rights.

The Court that pronounced sentence upon poor Summons, appropriately added,—"May God have mercy on your soul," for society failed to have mercy on him, and exposed him to temptations which he was too weak to resist. It is right and proper to pray to God to "lead us not into temptation;" but such a prayer to human government, is unconstitutional!

The earth must be robbed of its loveliness and Heaven of its jewels, because, forsooth, in a "free country like ours" it is unconstitutional to arrest the robber!

We think the judge's prayer, "May God have mercy on your soul," will be much more likely to be heard in poor Summons' case, than if put up for the merciless villains that made him what he is. We have no excuses to make for Summons—he deserves all of the punishment which the law affixes to his crime; but we would prefer his situation at the Bar of Infinite Justice, to that of the wretch who put the bottle to his lips and made him drunken. "Woe unto him, saith God."—Ohio Organ.

THE EFFECTS OF LIQUOR.—We give the following extract form Judge Agnew's first charge to the Grand Jury of Beaver county, delivered on 10th inst., as relating to this subject:

"I have been upon the bench of this district but a few months, and take it in this county now for the first time. Let me give you my experience in this short period. I have tried three cases of murder, one of arson, two of assault with intent to kill and murder, (one with an axe, the other a rifle,) dismissing from view a large array of minor offences; and I say to you, that every one of these high crimes proceeded, not indirectly, but immediately from drunkenness."

THE FATE OF A LEARNED MAN..—A HARD CASE. — There is a man in Boston, an old man of sixty, who graduated at the University of Dublin, Ireland, at the age of twenty-two was admitted as a surgeon in the British Army, and in that capacity visited this country with the English; was present at the destruction of the public buildings at Washington City—has been in India with the British Army—has been present during his services as a surgeon at 4,000 amputations, and fifteen severe battles—was shot twice, performed surgical operations on three wounded generals, seven colonels, twenty captains, and over eleven thousand officers of smaller grades. He has dined with two kings, one empress, one emperor, the Sultan, a Pope, innumerable great generals, &c. Has held the largest diamond in his hand known in the world, except one. Has had the British crown in his hand. Has been married three times, father to eleven children, all of whom he survived. Broken down by disease, he could no longer practice his profession—too poor to live without employment, too proud to become a pauper, he sailed in an emigrant ship to this country three years ago — and this man of remarkable adventures, classic education, master of four languages, sixty years of age, poor, old, and decaying, is now peddling oranges and apples in the streets of Boston! "We know what we are — verily we know not what we may be."—Boston Bee.

GIVE YOUR CHILD A PAPER.—A child beginning to read becomes delighted with a newspaper, because he reads the names of things which are very familiar, and will make progress accordingly. A newspaper in one year is worth a quarter's schooling to a child, and every father must consider that substantial information is connected with advancement. The mother of a family being one of the heads, and having a more immediate charge of children, should herself be instructed. A mind occupied, becomes fortified against the ills of life, and is braced for emergency. Children amused by reading or study, are of course more considerate and more easily governed. How many parents, who have not spent twenty dollars for books for their families, would have given hundreds to reclaim a son or a daughter who had ignorantly or thoughtlessly fallen into temptation.—Cataract.

'I'm not afraid of a barrel of hard cider,' said a toper to a temperance man.

'I presume not from your appearance. I should think a barrel of cider would run from you,' was the reply.

A barrel of alcohol, in the store of W. W. Goodrich, Savannah, Ga., exploded on the night of the 15th, by incautiously holding a spirit lamp near it, and instantly killed a negro boy.

OLDEN TIMES.—A correspondent of the Boston Post says, that at the funeral of Governor Winslow, in 1688, the expense for rum, brandy and wine was fourteen pounds, eight shillings and sixpence, about seventy-five dollars.

BOSTON MORALS.—Peter B. Brigham, the prince of Boston rum sellers has agreed, in consideration of being licensed, to close shop Sunday. How religious! Truly, times have changed, and are not as they used to was.—Maine Watchman.

THE GRAVE OF WASHINGTON.

Disturb not his slumber, let Washington sleep,
'Neath the bows of the willows that over him weep;
His arm is unnerved, but his deeds remain bright,
As the stars in the dark vaulted heaven at night.
Oh! wake not the hero, his battles are o'er,
Let him rest undisturbed on Potomac's fair shore;
On the river's green border so flowery drest,
With the hearts he loved fondly, let Washington rest.

Awake not his slumbers, tread lightly around,
'Tis the grave of a freeman, 'Tis liberty's mound;
Thy name is immortal—our freedom is won—
Brave sire of Columbia, our own Washington.
Oh! wake not the hero, his battles are o'er,
Let him rest, calmly rest, on his dear native shore;
While the stars and the stripes of our country shall wave,
O'er the land that can boast of a Washington's grave.

"There are two angels that attend unseen
Each one of us, and in great books record
Our good and evil deeds. He who writes down
The good ones, after every action closes
His volume, and ascends with it to God.
The other keeps his dreadful day-book open
Till sunset, that we may repent; which doing,
The record of the action fades away,
And leaves a line of white across the page."

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notariety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community, have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the CHERRY PECTORAL does not only as a general thing, but about invariably, cure the malady for which it is employed

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log cabin of the American peasant, to the palaces of European Kings. Throughout this entire country, in every State, city, and indeed almost every hamlet it contains, CHERRY PECTORAL is known as the best remedy extant for disease of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries, it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent Physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, CHERRY PECTORAL is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms Houses, Public Institutions, and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending Physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases, and for children it is safe, pleasant, and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from paients who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The CHERRY PECTORAL is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford Physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do.

THIS Company issues policies at Total Abstinence Rates, Joint Stock Rates, and at Mutual Rates which for $1000 on the life of a person 30 years of age, are as follows:

Age.	Total Abstinence.	Joint Stock.	Mutual.
30	$15.40	$19.60	$23.60

A further table of Rates will be furnished at the Office.

The condition in Total Abstinence rates (believed to be the lowest in the Union) is entire forfeiture upon the departure of the Insured from Total Abstinence in its strictest sense.

Policies at Joint Stock and Mutual rates, contain no condition except as usual in Life Insurance.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thought has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

PROSPECTUS
OF
THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.
Published in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and devoted to the Interests of the Order of the Temple of Honor.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

THIS Popular Magazine, having met with the hearty approval of the Temple Order, wherever it circulated during its first year, will commence its Second Volume on the first of September. 1851. It will as heretofore be issued on the first of every month, each number containing

THIRTY TWO PAGES OF CHOICE READING MATTER,

in pamphlet form, convenient for binding—making at the end of the year a volume of three hundred and eighty-four pages—at the low price of

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

The established character of this Magazine—its approval and recommendation by National, Grand, and Subordinate Temples—the liberal terms on which it is published, placing it within the reach of every member of the Order—and the will render it a desirable companion for every Templar who wishes to supply his family with good temperance reading, and keep himself posted in the doings and progress of the Order of which he is a member. This Magazine is the first and ONLY publication ever devoted particularly to the Temple Order, and is not confined to any locality, but is designed to be the Organ of the whole Order. This gives it a peculiar claim on the Fraternity for encouragement and support.

While it aims to be the expositor of the Temple Order, it will give an impartial and faithful history of all important temperance movements, whether by individual or associated action, or legislative enactments and thus form a valuable journal for every friend of temperance and morality.

The services of several able writers are already secured for its pages; and, as the subscription list increases, more will be added. No labor or expense, consistent with our means, will be spared to make it just what the temperance portion of community desire: a good family Magazine not surpassed by any in the country.

POETRY.

They told me oft to Shun the Bowl.

BY G. W. R.

They told me oft to shun the bowl,
They said its ruby glow
Was treachery's wile to lure me on,
And plunge my soul in woe:
Their world seemed like the idle wind,
And I believed them not,
For oh! I scorn'd to think that I
Should e'er become a sot.

They told me that the chalic'd cup
Which now delighted so,
Would soon be fill'd with sorrow's tears,
And drugg'd with bitter woe:
Yet still I laugh'd, and still I quaff'd,
Nor heeded what they said,
But plung'd me in the fatal stream
Amongst the floating dead!

I thought that I could lightly drink,
And sometimes take a spree,
But ah! I little dream'd that I
A drunkard e'er should be;
But all my heart's fond joys are fled,
And I am left to mourn
Upon fond Memory's ruined shrine,
The hopes that ne'er return.

I saw my aged mother bowed
Beneath a load of care,
I stood beside her dying couch,
And wept upon her bier;
For ah! too well I knew the hand
That gave the fatal wound,
But soon I turned to the bowl,
And there my conscience drowned.

I saw my much loved sister fade
Like an untimely rose,
For her fond heart could not sustain
The burden of its woes:
I knew that I that flower had crushed,
And robbed it of its bloom,
But onward still I madly rushed,
Amid the gathering gloom.

And sad and silent were the tears
My wife in sorrow shed,
For oh! she thought on other years,
And hopes forever fled:
I cursed her melancholy mood,
Her tender heart was riven,—
She droopt and died, but now she shines
A brighter gem in heaven.

And now I stand a blasted tree
In sin's wild waste alone,
With not a blooming bud of hope
That I may call my own:
Yet madly still I seek and drink,
And deeper drown my soul,
For O! my very life blood seems
Drawn from that cursed bowl.

I would that I could break the spell
That binds my captive soul,
For now I feel that ruin lurks
Around that treacherous bowl:
I'll sign the pledge, for oh! I'm sure
It ne'er can make me worse,
And may kind Heaven now grant me strength
To shun the dark'ning curse.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Providence Prospers Honesty.

Translated from the German for the N. Y. Organ.

BY MRS. ST. SIMON.

A poor boy, about ten years of age, entered the warehouse of the rich merchant, Samuel Richter, in Dantzic, and asked the book-keeper for alms. 'You will get nothing here,' grumbled the man, without raising his head from his book, 'be off.'

Weeping bitterly, the boy glided towards the door, at the moment that Herr Richter entered.

'What is the matter here!' he asked, turning to the book keeper.

'A worthless beggar-boy,' was the man's answer, and he scarcely looked up from his work.

In the meanwhile, Herr Richter glanced towards the boy, and remarked that, when close to the door, he picked up something from the ground. 'Ha! my little lad, what is that you picked up?' he cried. The weeping boy turned, and showed him a needle.

'And what will you do with it?' asked the other.

'My jacket has holes in it,' was the answer, 'I will sew up the big ones.'

Herr Richter was pleased with this reply, and still more with the boy's innocent, handsome face. 'But are you not ashamed,' he said, in a kind, though serious tone, 'you, so young and hearty, to beg? Can you not work?'

'Ah, my dear sir,' replied the boy, 'I do not know how, and I am too little yet to thresh or fell wood. My father died three weeks ago, and my poor mother and little brothers have eaten nothing these two days. Then I ran out in anguish, and begged for alms. But, alas! a single peasant only gave me yesterday a piece of bread; since then I have not eaten a morsel.'

It is quite customary for beggars by trade to contrive tales like this, and this hardens many a heart, against the claims of genuine want. But this time the merchant trusted the boy's honest face. He thrust his hand into his pocket, drew forth a piece of money, and said:

'There is half a dollar; go to the baker's, and with half the money buy bread for yourself, your mother, and your brothers, but bring back the other half to me.'

The boy took the money, and ran joyfully away.

'Well,' said the surly book-keeper, 'he will laugh in his sleeve, and never come back again.'

'Who knows?' replied Herr Richter.—And as he spoke he beheld the boy returning, running quickly, with a large loaf of black bread in one hand, and some money in the other.

'There, good sir!' he cried, almost breathless, 'there is the rest of the money.' Then, being very hungry, he begged at once for a knife, to cut off a piece of the bread.—The book-keeper reached him in silence his pocket knife.

The lad cut off a slice in great haste, and was about to bite upon it. But suddenly he bethought himself laid the bread aside, and, folding his hands, rehearsed a silent prayer. Then he fell to his meal with a hearty appetite.

The merchant was moved by the boy's unaffected piety. He inquired after his family and home, and learned from his simple narrative that his father had lived in a village, about four miles distant from Dantzic, where he owned a small house and farm. But his house had been burned to the ground, and much sickness in his family had compelled him to sell his farm. He had then hired himself out to a rich neighbor, but, before three weeks were at an end, he died, broken down by grief and excessive toil. And now his mother, whom sorrow had thrown upon a bed of sickness, was, with her four young children, suffering the bitterest poverty. He, the eldest, had resolved to seek for assistance, and had gone at first from village to village, then had struck into the high road, and at last, having begged everywhere in vain, had come to Dantzic.

The merchant's heart was touched. He had but one child, and the boy appeared to him as a draft at sight, which Providence had drawn upon him as a test of his gratitude. 'Listen, my son!' he began, 'have you then really a wish to learn?'

'Oh, yes; I have, indeed!' cried the boy, 'I have read the catechism already, and I should know a good deal more, but at home I had always my little brother to carry, for mother was sick in bed.'

Herr Richter suddenly formed his resolution. 'Well, then,' he said, 'if you are good, and honest, and industrious, I will take care of you. You shall learn, have meat and drink and clothing, and in time earn something besides. Then you can support your mother and brothers also.'

The boy's eye's flashed with joy. But in a moment he cast them to the ground again, and said sadly, 'My mother all this while has nothing to eat.'

At this instant, as if sent by Providence, an inhabitant of the boy's native village entered Herr Richter's house. This man confirmed the lad's story, and willingly consented to carry the mother tidings of her son Gottlieb, and food and a small sum of money from the merchant. At the same time Herr Richter directed his book-keeper to write a letter to the pastor of the village, commending the widow to his care, with an additional sum enclosed for the poor family, and promising future assistance.

As soon as this was done, Herr Richter at once furnished the boy with decent clothes, and at noon led him to his wife, whom he accurately informed of little Gottlieb's story, and of the plans which he had formed for him. The good woman readily promised her best assistance in the latter, and she faithfully kept her word.

During the next four years, Gottlieb attended the schools of the great commercial city; then his faithful foster-father took him into his counting-room, in order to educate him for business. Here, as well as there, at the writing desk as on the school-bench, the ripening youth distinguished himself, not only by his natural capacity, but by the faithful industry with which he exercised it. With all this, his heart retained its native innocence. Of his weekly allowance, he sent the half regularly to his mother until she died, after having survived two of his brothers. She had passed the last years of her life, not in wealth it is true, but, by the aid of the noble Richter and of her faithful son, in a condition above want.

After the death of his beloved mother, there was no dear friend left to Gottlieb in the world except his benefactor. Out of love for him he became an active, zealous merchant. He began by applying the superfluity of his allowance, which he could now dispose of at his pleasure, to a trade in Hamburg quills. When by care and prudence he had gained about a hundred and twenty dollars, it happened that he found in his native village a considerable quantity of hemp and flax, which was very good, and still to be had at a reasonable price. He asked his foster-father to advance him two hundred dollars, which he did with great readiness. And the business prospered so well that, in the third year of his clerkship, Gottlieb had already acquired the sum of five hundred dollars. Without giving up his trade in flax, he now trafficked also in linen goods, and the two combined made him, in a couple of years, about a thousand dollars richer.

This happened during the customary five years of clerkship. At the end of this period, Gottlieb continued to serve his benefactor five years more with industry, skill, and fidelity; then he took the place of the book-keeper, who died about this time, and three years afterwards he was taken by Herr Richter as a partner into his business, with a third part of the profit.

But it was not God's will that this pleasant partnership should be of long duration. An insidious disease cast Herr Richter upon a bed of sickness, and kept him for two years confined to his couch. All that love and gratitude could suggest, Gottlieb now did to repay his benefactor's kindness. Redoubling his exertions, he became the soul of the whole business, and still he watched long nights at the old man's bedside, with his grieving wife, until, in the sixty fifth year of his life, Herr Richter closed his eyes in death.

Before his disease, he placed the hand of his only daughter, a sweet girl of two-and-twenty years, in that of his beloved foster-son. He had long looked upon them both as his children. They understood him; they loved each other; and in silence, yet affectionately and earnestly, they solemnized their betrothal at the bedside of their dying father.

In the year 1828, ten years after Herr Richter's death, the house of Gottlieb Bern, late Samuel Richter, was one the most respectable in all Dantzic. It owned three large ships, employed in navigating the Baltic and North, and the care of Providence seemed especially to watch over the interests of their worthy owner for worthy he remained in his prosperity. He honored his mother-in-law like a son, and cherished her declining age with the tenderest affection, until, in her two-and-seventieth year, she died in his arms.

As his own marriage proved childless, he took the eldest son of each of his two remaining brothers, now substantial farmers, into his house, and destined them to be his heirs. But in order to confirm them in their humility, he often showed them the kneedle, which had proved such a source of blessing to him, and bequeathed it as a perpetual legacy to the eldest son in the family.

It is but a few years since this child of poverty, of honest industry, and of misfortune, passed in peace from this world.

'Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.'—[Ps. xxxvii. 37.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Makes no Difference.

A SINGULAR COURTSHIP.

The Rev. Dr. L——n, an eminent Scotch divine, and professor of theology, was remarkable for absence of mind and indifference to worldly affairs. His mind, wrapt up in lofty contemplations, could seldom stoop to the ordinary business of life, and when at any time he did attend to the secular affairs, he generally went about them in a way like any body else, as the history of his courtship will show. He was greatly beloved by his elders and congregation; was full of simplicity and sincerity, and entirely unacquainted with the etiquette of the world. Living the solitary, comfortless life of a bachelor, his elders gave him frequent hints that his domestic happiness would be much increased by his taking to himself a wife, and pointed out several young ladies in his congregation, any one of whom might be a fit match or companion for him.

The elders, finding all the hints had no effect in rousing the doctor to the using of the means preliminary to entering into a matrimonial alliance, at last concluded to wait upon him, and stir him up to the performance of his duty. They urged on him the advantages of marriage—its happiness—spoke of it as a divine institution, and as affording all the enjoyments of sense and reason, and, in short, all the sweets of domestic life. The doctor approved of all they said, and apologised for his past neglect of duty, on account of many difficult passages of Scripture he had of late been attending to, and promised to look after it, "the first convenient season." The elders, however, were not to be put off any longer; they insisted on the doctor at once making use of the means, and requested from him a promise that, on Monday afternoon, he would straightway visit the house of a widow lady, a few doors from him, who had three pretty daughters, and who were the most respectable in the doctor's congregation. To solve any difficult passage in the book of Genesis, to reconcile apparent discrepancies, or clear up a knotty text, would have been an agreeable and easy task to the doctor, compared with storming the widow's premises. But to the raising of the siege the doctor must go, and with great gravity and simplicity, gentle reader, you can imagine you see him commencing the work.

After the usual salutations were over, he said to Mrs. W——n:

"My session, have, of late, been advising me to take a wife, and recommended me to call upon you; and as you have three fine daughers, I would like to say a word to the eldest, if you have no objection."

Miss W——n enters, and the doctor, with his characteristic simplicity, said to her:

"My session have been advising me to take a wife, and recommended me to call upon you.

The young lady, who had seen some thirty summers, was not to be caught so easily. She laughed heartily at the doctor's abruptness; hinting to him that, in making a sermon, it was necessary to say something first, to introduce the subject properly, before he entered fully upon it; and, as for her part, she was determined not to surrender her liberty at a minute's warning—"the honor of her sex was concerned in her standing out." This was all a waste of time to the doctor, and he requested to see her sister.

Miss E. W——n then entered, and to save time the doctor says, "My session have been advising me to take a wife, and I have been speaking to your sister who has just gone out at the door, and as she is not inclined that way, what would you think of being Mrs. L——n?"

"Oh! Doctor, I don't know; it is rather a serious question. Marriage, you know, binds one for life, and it should not be rashly entered into—I would not consent without taking time to deliberate upon it."

"My time," says the doctor, "is so much occupied, and my session has said so much to me on the business, that I must finish it to-day, if I can, so you had best tell your youngest sister to speak to me." In a moment comes the honest, lively Miss Mary W——n.

"Come away, my child," said the doctor, "it is getting on in the afternoon, and I must get home to my studies. I have been speaking to both of your sisters on a little business, and they have declined—I am a man of few words, and without misspending precious time, what would you think of being made Mrs. L——n?"

"Indeed I always thought a deal of you, doctor, and if my mother does not say against it, I have no objections."

The doctor left Miss Mary in a few minutes, enjoining her to fix the day, for any would suit him, but to send him up word the day before.

The doctor was scarcely home before a keen dispute arose in the family among the three young ladies, all claiming the doctor. The eldest one said the offer was first made to her, and she did not positively refuse. The second declared that she wished only a little time to think upon it; and the youngest insisted that it was completely settled with her. The mother of the young ladies was in such difficulty with her daughters, that she was obliged to call upon the doctor himself to settle the dispute. She called, and the reverend doctor, in his characteristic way, said:

"My dear Mrs. W——n, I am very fond of peace in families. It is all the same thing to me which of them, so just settle it among yourselves and send me up word."

The doctor was married to the youngest, and one of his sons is at this day a respectable clergyman, "in the land of the mountain and the flood."

Woman's Sphere.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

"I have given her as a help-mate," said the Voice that cannot err, when it spake unto Adam "in the cool of the day," amid the trees of Paradise. Not a slave, a clog, a toy, a wrestler, a prize-fighter, a ruler. No. A helper.

If the unerring Creator has assigned different spheres of action to the sexes, it is to be presumed that some adaption exists to their respective spheres, that there is work enough in each to employ them, and that the faithful performance of that work will be for the welfare of both. If He hath constituted one as the priestess of the "inner temple," committing to her charge its veiled shrine and sacred harmonies, why should she covet to rage amid the warfare at its gates, or to ride on the whirlwind that may rock its turrets? Rushing, uncalled, to the strife, or the tumult, or the conflict, will there not linger in her heart the upbraiding question, "with whom didst thou leave thy few sheep in the wilderness." Why need she again be tempted by pride, or curiosity, or glowing words, to forfeit her own Eden?

The true nobility of woman is to keep her own sphere, and adorn it, not as the comet, daunting and perplexing other systems, but like the star, which is the first to light the day and the last to leave it. If she win not the laurel of the conquerer and the blood-shedder, her noble deeds may leave "footprints on the same sands of time," and her good works, "such as become those that profess godliness," find record in the Book of Life.

Sisters, are not our rights sufficiently comprehensive, the sanctuary of home, the throne of the heart, the moulding of the whole mass of mind, in its first formation? Have we not power enough in all realms of sorrow and suffering, over all forms of want and ignorance, amid all ministries of love, from the cradle dream to the sealing of the sepulchre?

Let us be content and faithful, aye, more,—grateful, and joyful—making this brief like a hymn of praise, until admitted to that choir which knows no discord, and where melody is eternal.

ONE OF THE MOTHERS.—The Cincinnati Sun is responsible for the following:

"Cases of a character similar to the following have occurred and been published; yet we cannot quite overlook this, as it shows a reckless, careless disposition, too frequently apparent with some folks.—Yesterday morning a splendid carriage with richly caparisoned horses drove to the gangway of the Louisville mail boat. The door was opened, and a lady and gentleman, dressed in the extreme of fashion, stepped out and went on board the boat. The driver, after reaching the stable, heard the cries of a child, and on openi ngth carriage door, found an infant lying upon the front seat. The infant was carried to the boat, and the mother kissed her child and exclaimed, 'O, my dear, I thought we had forgot something; why in mercy didn't you think of it Harry?'"

STATE LIBRARY INDIANAPOLIS

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1852.

☞ Rev. H. W. Beecher, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been spending several days in our city, and preaching to immense crowds.

Mr. B. is still very popular, both as a clergyman and a Lecturer. We shall soon publish one of his temperance speeches delivered in the city of New York. He left for home on Monday.

Festivals and Camp Meetings.

A Grand Temperance Festival is to be held at Rushville, Indiana, July 29th, by Rush Division, No. 89, they celebrate the sixth anniversary of the Division. Bro. S. F. Cary, P. M. W. P., is to be the Orator.

A Temperance Camp Meeting will also commence near Covington, Fountain county, on the same day. We wish the brethren great success, and if possible would comply with their invitation to be present, but we cannot do it.

Let our friends in other parts of the State roll on the good temperance ball.—All the people need is light, and they are with us. Let them have it.

Spiritual Rappings in Wayne County.

We learn from a reliable source that about the first of June, a certain Judge of the Probate Court of Wayne county took it into his head to take a spree. Going to a neighboring town he soon found a groggery that would do anything for money, and there he got beastly drunk. The keeper of this doggery had been warned by the wife of the Judge not to sell her husband liquor, but to no purpose—he avowed he would sell as long as he had a cent to pay for it with.

After his call at the liquor shop, the Judge went to a neighboring stable to take a nap, and being gone longer than his good woman thought he ought, she went to his office in search of him. Not finding him there she went to the liquor shop, and there heard that he had been there and got beastly drunk. Arming herself with a good cudgel she entered the premises, and after driving out the keeper commenced slaying the bottles right and left—then the windows of the house suffered some, and whenever the owner interfered she gave him a rap over the head, which soon made him desist. After demolishing every thing she could in and about the house, she went to the stable in search of the Judge and soon found him fast asleep in the hayloft. She immediately undertook to take the Judge home, when some of his companions interfered, and she beat some of them most unmercifully, and took her husband home amidst shouts of laughter from the eye-witnesses.

If the men of our State would use the same kind of arguments, where every thing else would fail, how long would we be troubled with these disgraceful Liquor shops? We do not advocate mob law, but if we had a son, a brother, or a father, whom these blood-suckers would entice into their snares, and continue to do so after being warned; before we would see that son, brother, or father, go down to a drunkard's grave, we would, at the risk of life, break the last bottle a grocery contained, and spill the last drop of liquor. If the law does not protect us, we must protect ourselves.

THE MAINE LAW IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—This celebrated law passed the House of Representatives of the New Hampshire Legislature on the 19th inst., by 68 majority. The Senate by a majority of 8 voted to postpone action upon it until the next session.

Some of them will be sorry for that vote.

THE LIQUAR LAW ENFORCED IN MINNESOTA.—Four thousand dollars worth of liquor was seized and confiscated in the levee at St. Paul, on the 2d inst., it being a violation of the law of Minnesota to take any liquor into that territory. It was taken up from St. Louis.

Our friends are active in this far off territory, and if liquor sellers wish to sell their poisons they had better take them somewhere else.

Progress of Temperance.

We concluded our last article on this subject at Mount Vernon. On Friday, May 29th, we left this place, in company with several members of the Grand Temple of Indiana, on the Steamer General Pike, for Louisville.

So far as temperance was concerned we could not note any great progress on this trip. The bar on this boat was a great place of resort, and several times we noticed servants carrying wines and liquors into the Ladies' Cabin. Wine was also placed upon the table at dinner, and it appeared to be a studied effort of the officers of the boat—although the captain boasted of his temperance, we did not see him drink—to make as much display of liquor as possible. The drinking, however, was confined principally to the "upper ten," the "first families," and those "would-be-fancy men" who are found on every thoroughfare. There was also a troupe of actors and theatrical attachees on board, who punished a good deal of brandy. On Saturday evening we arrived at Louisville, and were in the city on the Sabbath. It appeared to be rather more quiet than usual, and we saw no drinking except on the boats at the levee.

Embarking on the splendid steamer Ben Franklin, we had a fine sail to Madison, and the same remarks we have heretofore made in regard to the General Pike will apply to this boat in regard to intemperance. There is too much drinking on board; but in other respects, she is the best boat upon the Western waters, all things considered.

Madison is one of those cities that are not doing much for our cause. With nearly one hundred licensed liquor shops, but little could be expected for temperance, and yet it contains some of the warmest temperance men in the State. This city is rapidly improving in other respect, as we hope it soon will in this.

In the towns on the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad there has been much temperance progress in the last few years, and nearly all of them support a good Division. Some of them are doing much for the cause of temperance. Arriving at home, we found temperance matters pretty much "in statua quo." Our city has had no licensed liquor shops for five years, and what liquor is disposed of is sold in violation of law. Several of our whisky sellers have lately quit the traffic, and those now engaged in it are hardly worth reforming. They will sell until the law compels them to stop.

Here we bring our journey to a close.

Indianapolis and Bellefontaine Rail Road.

On last Thursday, the following Directors were elected by the stockholders of the Indianapolis and Bellefontaine Railroad Company:

Jeremiah Smith, David Heasten, and Peter S. Miller, of Randolph; James Truitt, Samuel P. Anthony, and David Kilgore, of Delaware; Allen Makepeace, Wm. Sparks, and Madison G. Walker, of Madison; S. V. B. Noel, of Hancock; Daniel Yandes, Calvin Fletcher, Alfred Harrison, and O. H. Smith, of Marion; and Richard H. Winslow, of New York.

Oliver H. Smith was unanimously re-elected President; Douglass Maguire, Secretary; James N. Yandes, Treasurer, and R. M. Patterson, Engineer—Mr. Morris not desiring a re-election.—Journal.

The Board of Directors of this road, several months since, passed a resolution that no person using ardent spirits in any form should be employed on their road. This resolution we intended to have noticed at the time, and thought we had done so, until our attention was called to the fact that we had not. This determination of the board has been strictly adhered to, and the consequence is, that no serious accident has ever occurred on the road, for which its officers were in any manner responsible. This road will soon be completed through to Lake Erie, and be the great thoroughfare to the East, from the centre of the State and from Central and Southern Illinois.

HIGH RENT.—The government pays $10,000 per year rent for the building in which the New York City Post Office is kept.

Mrs. Adams, widow of the late John Quincy Adams, died at Washington on Saturday, the 14th inst.

National Division.

We have received a condensed statement of the action of this body, at its late session at Richmond, Va.

After making some changes in the constitutions of National and Grand Division, which do not change any principle of the Order, they made the following changes in the Constitution of Subordinate Divisions:

Sec. 2, Art. 9.—The words "except by dispensation from the Grand Division; provided, nevertheless, that no person elevated to the office of W. P. by such dispensation shall be elected a Representative to a Grand Division, and that no Grand Division shall have the right or authority to grant a dispensation under this act, except to Divisions located in Colleges or Institutions of learning," to be inserted after the words "twenty-one years of age."

General Matter Enacted.—The term "disability," occurring in Sec. 2, Art. 6, Constitution Subordinate Divisions, "not intended to apply to disqualification for one particular occupation, while the individual is capable of earning a livelihood by other lawful means."

Art. 10.—Constitution of Subordinate Divisions referred to a committee of three, with instructions to report a new Article at the next Session of N. D., comprising the general principles of the present Article, in a clear and simple form. Committee—Bros. Litton, Goodwin, and Williford.

Resolved, That the simple fact of making, buying, selling, or using Spirituous or Malt Liquors, Wine or Cider, by a Son of Temperance, shall be prima facie evidence against such Brother upon a trial therefor of a violation of his pledge to the Order, so as to devolve upon him the necessity of proving his innocence of having made, bought or sold, or used such Spiritous or Malt Liquors, Wine or Cider, as a beverage."

The following decisions were made:

First.—That fear of sickness can never justify a brother in the use of Alcoholic Liquors.

Second.—That a By-Law declaring that a member in arrears for dues shall not be entitled to Pass-words, is constitutional.

Third.—That a By-Law declaring that "no brother shall be entitled to benefits until he shall have been a member one year," does not cut him off from benefits after re-instatement; but that a By-Law containing the words "in good standing or full membership for one year," does.

The course of M. W. Patriarch Oliver, in regard to application for Charter for a Grand Division of Manchester, in England, was approved; and the policy expressed in regard to the matter of grant of Charters for that Country, in the letters of the M. W. S., agreed to as the policy of the National Division.

The principles of the Maine Liqor Law were agreed to by the National Division, and recommended to be made the object of the Order.

A motion looking to the establishment of Degrees in the Order was disagreed to.

Brothers Carey, Oliver, and Eginton were appointed a Committee to propose for and adopt a new Ritual, and to report the same at the next Session of the National Division.

The Tenth Session of the National Division was agreed to be held in Chicago, Illinois, on the second Wednesday of June, 1853, at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Brothers Eginton, Goodwin, and Litton, were appointed a Committee to act with a future Committee of Brothers of Illinois, with full power to select speakers and appoint times and places for public addresses, during the 10th Session of the National Division.

Presidential Pledge.

On the walls of the White House is the following pledge:

"Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirits is not only needless, but hurtful, and that the entire disuse of it would tend to promote the health, the virtue, and the happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction that should the citizens of the United States, and especially the young men, discontinue entirely the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of our country, and the world.

JAMES MADISON,
ANDREW JACKSON,
JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,
MARTIN VAN BUREN,
JOHN TYLER,
JAMES K. POLK,
ZACHARY TAYLOR,
MILLARD FILLMORE."

After the 4th of March next, another name will be added to the above pledge, but whether that of Winfield Scott, or Franklin Pierce, is the question now before the American people. Either of them will sign it as they are both temperance men. So far as the cause of temperance is concerned, it matters not which is elected.

Cost of Liquors consumed in Indiana.

We presume there are but few of our readers who have any idea of the amount of money expended annually, in this State, for intoxicating liquors.

In order to give some little idea of that amount, we have gone to the trouble of collecting some facts on the subject.

There were sold in the city of Indianapolis, during the past yeat at retail, over one thousand barrels of various kinds of Liquors, Wines, Ale, Beer, &c., and our population for the year will average 10,000 persons. This would be one barrel to every ten persons, or the one-tenth of a barrel, or about four gallons to every person. Much of this liquor was however sold to the country, and probably if we include the whole county, we will find about one thousand five hundred barrels retailed in the county.

Now, at the very lowest calculation, the cost of this liquor was twenty cents per gallon—calculating a barrel at forty gallons and the cost at twenty cents, and the Liquors sold in Marion county in one year, cost at wholesale Twelve Thousand Dollar. This is the cost to the retailer. Now what is the cost to the consumer? First, we will suppose that one-third of the amount or five hundred barrels is sold by the glass—forty gallon in a barrel would give us 20,000 gallons. The glasses used by retailers hold about half a pint, and a dram is about half a glass or four to the pint, making thirty-two to the gallon—this calculation includes Wine, Ale, and Beer, as well as Whisky, &c., the drams of the former exceeding, and those of the latter falling short of our calculation.

Thirty-two drams then at five cents each, is $1 60 to the gallon, making Thirty-two Thousand Dollars spent in Marion county, at tippling shops in one year.

Then put the other 40,000 gallons at 25 cents a gallon, which is a very low price, and we have an additional Ten Thousand Dollars paid for Liquors in this county, by the quart and gallon, and swelling the amount of cost to the consumers of liquor to Forty-two thousand Dollars!

This calculation also shows the profits of the trade. The liquor which cost the retailer twelve thousand dollars, is sold again by them for forty-two thousand—a nice profit by the trade of thirty thousand dollars.

Who wonders that liquor sellers are willing to risk every thing for the traffic?

So much for our county, now for the State. We are aware that this county is the second county in the State in point of population, and that the vast number of strangers in our city consumes much of the Liquor, and that the Legislature especially does its part, and we will therefore put the average of each county at only one-fifteenth part of our calculation for this, and say that on an average there are one hundred barrels of Liquor retailed in each county in a year, and every one will admit that is a very low estimate.

There are ninety-one counties in the State, and at one hundred barrels each, would consume ninety-one hundred barrels, which at our former calculation would amount to the enormous sum of five hundred and eighty-two thousand and four hundred dollars at a low calculation, spent in the State of Indiana in one year for Liquors.

The last State Auditor's Report, shows that these 91 counties paid into the State Treasury in the same time in the shape of taxes, $462,013 81. The Liquor bills of the State amounting to ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS more than the State taxes.

Now we are aware that this looks like a very large sum, and yet we are firmly convinced that it does not come up to the facts. We believe that the sum actually expended in this State for Liquors, is nearer nine hundred thousand dollars, than six hundred thousand, and that in the retail trade alone for home consumption.

Had we broadly asserted that the cost of the liquor drank in the State of Indiana annually, cost nearly double the amount of the revenue paid into the State Treasury by the different County Treasurers, the assertion would have received but little credit from the friends of the temperance cause, and none at all from those opposed to it. But with the fair and liberal estimates we have made, such a conclusion is irresistible.

Now in view of such facts as these, what is to be done? Shall we as friends of temperance, as champions of that glorious cause, sit calmly by mere lookers on, shall we rouse ourselves to action and our good will at least to stop this va

Were it the mere waste of this va of money, we would be content should go, though that were an evi when with the money, goes chara credit, health, happiness and life itse when wives, are made widows, and ch dren orphans—families destroyed, and brothers, sisters, fathers, and mothers murdered; when the peace and quiet of the whole community suffers, then should the philanthropist and the christian raise his voice and cast his vote, that this mighty scourge shall be stayed.

Let our friends then be up and doing—let not the party conflicts of the day drive them from their duty—but voting with their party, when their party is right, let them leave their party, when their party leaves temperance.

Then, and not till then, will the mighty evils of the liquor traffic cease, and crime and poverty—poor-houses and jails—gallows and penitentiaries—riots and murders, and nearly every evil that affects society, be banished, and our glorious and happy country be regenerated and disenthralled from the foulest vice with which earth is cursed.

Maine Law in Connecticut.

On Thursday last, the Maine Law, or one very similar to it, was reported to the Connecticut Legislature, a thousand copies were ordered to be printed, and yesterday was asssigned as the time for its consideration. We notice in the account, that the manufacture of cider, and its sale by the manufacturer, in quantities not less than five gallons, are allowed in the bill thus reported.

It matters little what may be the features of this bill, as we suppose the Governor of the Nutmeg State will veto any law that shall look like the Maine Law. Our friends there will have to have one more pull at the polls, before this great boon will be granted to them. Courage then friends, by another year you will be able to sweep the cider too.—Cataract.

The bill above spoken of, came up for consideration in the House of Representatives, and was defeated by a vote of Yeas 105, Noes 140.

The Millennium.

At a late meeting of the American Temperance Union in the city of New York, the venerable Lyman Beecher, D. D., of Boston, was introduced to the audience, and welcomed with the most hearty applause. He said he had always believed in the prophecies of the Millennium, but he had never hoped to live until its immedate approach. But if this Maine Law was going through the land, the Millennium will be right on its heels. Take away alcohol, and the Devil will loose his strongest ever; he will be chained neck and heels, and cast down to hell.

Northwestern University.

The Christian or Reformed Church, it may not be generally known, are making efforts to establish at Indianapolis, an institution of learning to bear the above title. The Charter, we are informed, requires $75,000 for the incipitent organization, which is now raised. Elder John O'Kane, agent for the University, visited this place on last Sabbath and obtained subscription to the amount of $1,000.—Greensburgh Press.

Elder O'Kane having secured the amount required by the Charter, has handed the same over to the Trustees, and we presume the work of building will be commenced soon.

Sermons and Tracts for Temperance Camp Meetings.

MR. EDITOR.—As the Temperance Campmeetings will need be followed up by proper reading matter, I would suggest the propriety of having on hands at each meeting a large lot of tracts for gratuitous distribution to the people who attend.—Ten or twenty dollars thus expended, may do great good. The same suggestion would apply to processions, &c., of the "Sons." For the information of those who may wish to know, I would say, that I will send my sermon, post paid, to any place in Indiana, at four dollars per hundred, or, in reasonable quantities, gratuitously, to those who want them so, if they will remit money or postage stamps to me to pay the postage. Bro. C. F. Clarkson is publishing two tracts of four large pages each, which he will send, post paid, at five dollars per thousand. One is entitled "Poor Jo!" a short temperance sermon for good temperance men. The other, "Thoughts for the thinking men, and facts for the tax payers of Indiana." I think they will do good, and I wish them extensively circulated before the election. But the selection need not be confined to these. Bro. Crary's sermon is valuable, and should be circulated in every quarter. I am not apprised of the price exactly, but will assure those who want to see the "Horrors of the Liquor Traffic" well portrayed, that they can get them at the lowest possible price, by addressing him at Bloomington, Indiana, or by sending to Swormstedt & Poe, Cincinnati. Bro. Crary does not want to make money by its publication, and he can not afford to loose much. Order some of them, and you will never regret it.

Temperance Camp Meetings.

MR. EDITOR.—It is gratifying to learn from different parts of the State, that preliminary arrangements are making in nearly every county for mass meetings, under the name of Camp Meetings. It is not difficult to anticipate that the result will be good. Thousands of the country people that can not be reached in the ordinary way, will thus hear the temperance question discussed. And all we want is a hearing. Allow me to suggest that where but one day can be devoted to it, (which will generally be the case) some week day should be selected, and we should meet as early as practicable—say 9 o'clock—with music and banners, and have speaking and music until noon, then eat, every man at his own basket, or wagon, or table, feeding his enemy if he has any, and drinking "the beverage pure, which God himself has given." After dinner, return to the stand for more music and speaking, and adjourn at about 4 or 5. The propriety of each being prepared to feed himself, grows out of the fact that a public dinner is attended with much expense, and great labor upon a few. The labor should be divided, and the money could be better spent in giving those who attend some tract, to carry home to those who do not attend. Of course these meetings will be got up by the temperance men in general. Let all act in the matter. August and September will be the most appropriate months. If there is no camp ground already prepared, it will not take long to seat some grove near a good spring or well.

For the Temperance Chart.

BRO. WOODWARD.—The great, the good, and glorious cause of temperance moves harmoniously on in this locality. Our people have in other days drank deep in the Cup of inebriation, and consequently have felt the sting of its accompanying evils; but the regret, the mourning, the poverty, and vice of those eventful days, now linger only in the recollection of the past, and Oh! that they could be bloted from memory's page, and our history take its date from the organization of the Sons of Temperance. How convincingly would it present the miraculous workings of our order on the whole face of society—not only the Division here, but four fifths of our community are in favor of the Maine Law! Oh! that the time may speedily come, when our own beloved Indiana will refuse to "Legalize the Liquor Traffic," and become convinced that it is the legitimate policy of our State to protect society from the evils resulting from this wicked Traffic, and for the dissemination of light and knowledge on one of the best of causes. We are willing to contribute our mite to the support of the Chart. Enclosed you will find 12 dollars, for which you will forward to us 24 copies of the Chart, and I will promise to send you, at an early day, as many more subscribers.

Your friend and Brother in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,

Report

Of MR. MILLIKIN, Chairman of the Committee on Temperance.

MR. PRESIDENT:—The Committee on Temperance, to whom was referred sundry temperance memorials, asking for the passage of a law similar the Maine Liquor Law, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report that, in the opinion of the committee, it would be a waste of time to introduce a bill in accordance with the prayers of the petitioners, as the Senate has decided by a large majority against such an enactment.

Your committee however, feel it a duty they owe to the public, to state that, in their opinion, no law is more loudly called for by the voice of the people, the necessities of the case, and the beneficial effects it would produce, than a stringent law for the suppression of tippling-houses.

The blighting and demoralizing influence of dram-shops is not alone felt and endured in the humble circles of society, but it has entered the higher walks, and prostrated the gifted. Many who have filled high places in the State and nation, have fallen by strong drink. Its degrading and demoralizing influence is felt in every section of the State, and among all classes, from the highest to the lowest. It has so brutalized the husband and father as to render him an object of terror instead of love and support to his helpless and dependent family. It has crushed its thousands, and is, and has been continually, a dead and grevious weight upon the happiness, prosperity, and intelligence of the people of the State. Then, in view of this great evil, is it to be wondered at that the people are waking up on this subject, and are petitioning you for redress—for even the Maine Law? A virtuous, moral, and intelligent community will dry up sooner or later, the fountain of so much vice and misery.

This law has been enacted by three States, and one Territory, to-wit: Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Minnesota, but it has only been tried by the test of experience in Maine. From this State we have the most cheering accounts of its salutary operations, from reliable sources. Your committee cannot refrain from referring to some of the statistics on this subject. In Bangor, the commitments to jail for drunkenness and assaults has fallen off about 60 per cent. Commitments to the city watch-house has fallen off about two-thirds, and the expense thereof nearly three-fourths; and the quantity of liquor consumed is only one-fourth as much as it was before the passage of the law. The state of the streets and city generally, as regards drunkenness, according to the City Marshal's statement, is improved 75 per cent. The application for aid to the overseers of the poor has decreased one-half, and four or five hundred dollars has been added to the city poll tax in the past year. The report of the Superintendant of the pauper establishment of the city, shows that the out door expenses has been diminished 50 per cent. since the passage of the liquor law, and the expenses of the Almshouse, resulting from intemperance, has been diminished 97 per cent. The cost of support of common drunkenness, in the house of correction, in Penobscot county, has been reduced 72½ per cent.

We might multiply statistics of the salutary operations of this law, but it would swell this report to a length not desired by the committee. Enough has been aduced to show its incalculable benefits. The opponents of this law have attempted to make the impression that it is unpopular in Maine, but the recent election in that State has silenced that rumor. Ninety-nine towns elected full Maine law boards, seven were divided, and thirty went against the law, showing that the law is triumphantly sustained by the people.

Your committee cannot close this report without expressing their firm conviction, that the prayers of the petitioners ought to be granted. The petitions are herewith returned to the Senate, with the recommendation that they be deposited in the box procured for that purpose.

The committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

If the following prediction of the New York Herald is true, it will of course cause no regrets among the friends of health and morals. Watering places which can be ruined by the Maine Law, are grossly missnamed:—

WATERING PLACES TO BE RUINED.—The Maine Liquor Law, which goes into operation in July, will of course, entirely cut up and ruin the following watering places: Nahant, Cape Cod, Plymouth, Lynn, and more especially Newport, in Rhode Island. Those watering places where wine is to be got as usual—Such as Saratoga, Lebanon, Sharon, White Mountains, Rockaway, Coney Island, Fort Hamilton, &c., &c., will all flourish beyond former years.

A spoonful of horse radish put into a pan of milk will preserve the milk sweet for several days, either in the open air or in a cellar, while other milk, will turn quite sour.

The Liquor Law.

Several papers have recently undertaked to publish the new liquor law, but they differ in their versions, and yet they all claim to be transcripts of the law as it finally passed. We believe the act has not yet been published "by authority." The following is the last section as it appears in some copies, while in others the section ends with the word "passage" in the second line:

SEC. 20. This Act shall take effect in sixty days after its passage: and all Acts and parts of Acts inconsistent with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed; such repeal, however, not to affect any action or process that may have been commenced under any existing law, before this Act goes into effect.

Approved May 22, 1852.

If the repeal clause of this section was inserted after the veto, the addition was probably intended to kill off the licenses recently granted in Boston or elsewhere. Whether such will be the effect of the new clause, is for the lawyers and courts to decide. The clause in question is not in the copies of the act as it is published in the Boston Courier and Mail. In others it is inserted, and we presume the above is the correct reading.

The Maine Law in Havana.

The American captains of Havana having been much troubled on account of the drunkeness of their crews, who purchased liquor of the freight-boats which came out to them, got up a petition to the authorities to have the nuisance abated. It was signed by forty-five captains then in port, and received the endorsement of Judge Sharkey, the Consul. After considering the matter, a regulation was issued by the Captain of the port, forbidding the sale, and affixing the following penalties: First offence, the destruction of the liquor; second offence, the confiscation of the boat and destruction of the liquor; third offence, the former penalties, with the addition of two months imprisonment, and a term of years on board a man-of-war.

The convictions for the first offences had been rightly put in force, and all the liquor in possession of the offenders had been poured into the sea.

Portland.

As soon as it was ascertained that the Hon. A. K. Parris was elected Mayor of the city of Portland, a very respectable lady, who had suffered much in her family by having a drinking husband, but who had kept entirely sober the last year, called at the house of the new Mayor, to remonstrate against the selling of liquor again, as she had been informed that the new Mayor would not enforce the liquor law. As she entered the house she met the Mayor, and burst out crying so loud, that it attracted the attention of the passers by. The Mayor, not knowing what the matter was, thought it very strange that a woman should commence crying, the moment she entered his house. He endeavored to ascertain, as soon as possible, why the woman was crying. When she could speak, she begged of him not to let any liquor be sold again in Portland, for if he did, her peace and happiness in this world was at an end, as her husband could not withstand the temptation, and stated that she had been informed that he did not intend to enforce the liquor law. Mr. Parris said to her, 'Give yourself no uneasiness; I shall enforce the law to the very letter.' The lady's fears were quieted, and she returned home. The rum party caught a Tartar when they elected A. K. Parris, Mayor of the city of Portland.—Visitor.

THE Augusta (Me.) Banner records a "Prophecy Fulfilled." No doubt many of the listeners supposed that Gov. Lincoln was "clean daft."

Twenty odd years ago, we recollect that Gov. Enoch Lincoln, when he laid the foundation of the Maine State House in Augusta—it was before there were hardly any rail roads in the United States—stood upon the Corner Stone, and made a speech to the people assembled, in the course of which he uttered the prophecy—an astounding one at the time—that there were some standing there who would live to see the time when a person might breakfast in Augusta, dine in Boston, and return home to supper at night. This very week fulfills his prophecy.

Our rail road is completed, and on Tuesday last the arrival and departure of trains was so arranged that a passenger may leave here at 5 1-2 A. M., spend two hours about noon in Boston, and return home before bed time, and all this for $5 up and back. When Gov. L. uttered this strange prophecy, we depended on stage coaches to run over bad roads, and it took a week to go to Boston and back, at an expense to passengers of twenty-eight dollars.

The State Temperance Convention, lately held at New Haven, Connecticut, was the largest ever held in the State. At the time of making out the roll, there were 740 delegates present, which was afterwards, probably, increased to one thousand.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
TEMPERANCE CHART,
THE OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE GRAND DIVISION, S. OF T. OF INDIANA.

VOLUME II.

Several attempts have been made by the Grand Division of this State to establish a permanent temperance paper in this State, which from various causes have heretofore failed. In the spring of 1851, the Grand Division resolved to take the paper under its own patronage, and the plan has succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations. The paper is now permanently established, and will after the commencement of the 2d volume, be published weekly. It will continue to advocate the cause of temperance in its broadest sense, embracing all the various organizations having for their object the entire destruction of the liquor traffic.

TERMS:

The CHART will be published weekly, on good paper, and new type, on the following terms:

Single subscribers, 75 cents per year.

Clubs of ten or more to one post office, 50 cents per year.

Payable in all cases in advance.

This is the cheapest Temperance paper in the world! It will be published by Bro. JOHN H. OHR, with whom the Grand Division has made a contract, and edited as heretofore by the Grand Scribe. A limited number of advertisements will be inserted, at the usual rates.

All letters relating to the paper, and all communications, should be addressed, post paid, to C. WOODWARD, G. S., Indianapolis, Ind.

All D. G. W. P.'s, and W. P.'s are, by a resolution of the Grand Division, authorized agents of the Chart.

Remittances can be sent through the postmasters free of postage.

The postage on the Chart will be as follows:

In Marion County, free. Any distance not exceeding 50 miles 5 cents per quarter, over 50 and under 300 miles, 10 cents per quarter.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

AND THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

WITH detailed notices of the Expedition in search of the missing vessels under Sir John Franklin; by P. L. Simmonds. To which is added an account of the American Expedition, under the patronage of Henry Grinnell, Esq., with an introduction to the American Expedition, by John C. Lord, D. D., 400 pages, price $1,25. To contain a map of the Arctic Region and plates illustrating the work.

"Where for relentless months continued night,
Holds, o'er the glittering waste, her starry light."

"The natives of America and England have before met upon the Ocean, but they met for deadly strife. Now, too, they met for strife, equally determined, but not with each other. They met in the holy cause of benevolence and human spmpathy, to battle with the elements beneath the Arctic Circle; and the chivalric heroism which the few stout hearts of the two nations displayed in that conflict redounds a thousand fold more to the glory of the actors, their governments and the race, than if four score ships and ten thousand armed men had fought for the mastery of each other upon the broad ocean, and battered hulks and warred corpses had gone down to the coral caves of the sea, a dreadful offering to the demon of Discord, in which event troops of widows and orphan children would have sent up a cry of wail. Now the heroes advanced manfully to rescue husbands and fathers, to restore them to their wives and children."

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Of all the numerous medicines extant, (and some of them valuable) for the cure of pulmonary complaints, nothing has ever been found which could compare in its effects with this Preparation. Others cure sometimes, but at all times and in all diseases of the lungs and throat where medicine can give relief, this will do it. It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe in accordance with the directions. We do not advertise for the information of those who have tried it but those who have not. Families that have known its value will not be without it, and by its timely use, they are secure from the dangerous consequences of Coughs and Colds which neglected, ripen into fatal consumption.

The Diploma of the Massachusetts Institute was awarded to this preparation by the Board of Judges in September, 1847; also, the Medals of the three great institutes of Art, in this country; also the Diploma of the Ohio Institute at Cincinnati, has been given to the CHERRY PECTORAL, by their Government in consideration of its extraordinaty excellence and usefulness in curing affections of the Lungs and Throat.

Read the following opinion founded on the long experience of the eminent Physician of the Port and City of

ST. JOHNS, May 8, 1851.

Dr. J. C. Ayer:—Five years trial of your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, has proven what I foresaw from its composition, must be true, that it eradicates and cures the colds and coughs to which we, in this section are peculiarly liable.

I think its equal has not yet been discovered, nor do I know how a better remedy can be made for the distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

J. J. BURTON, M. D., F. R. S.

See what it has done on a wasted constitution, not only in the following cases, but a thousand more:

SUNBURY, Jan. 24th, 1851.

Dr. Ayer:—In the month of July, I was attacked by a violent diarrhœa in the mines of California. I returned to San Francisco. My diarrhœa ceased, but was followed by a severe cough—and much soreness. I finally started for home, but received no benefit from the voyage. My cough continued to grow worse, and when I arrived in New York, I was at once marked by my acquaintances as a victim of consumption. I must confess that I saw no sufficient reason to doubt what my friends all believed. At this time I commenced taking your truly invaluable medicine with little expectation of deriving any benefit from its use. You would not receive these lines did I not regard it my duty to state to the afflicted, through you, that my health, in the space of eight months, is fully restored. I attribute it to the use of your Cherry Pectoral

Yours truly, WILLIAM W. SMITH.

WASHINGTON, Pa., April 12, 1848.

Dear Sir:—Feeling that I have been spared from a premature grave, through your instrumentality by the providence of God, I will take the liberty to express to you my gratitude.

A Cough and the alarming symptons of Consumption had reduced me too low to leave me anything like hope, when my physician brought me a bottle of your "Pectoral." It seemed to afford immediate relief, and now in a few weeks time has restored me to sound health.

If it will do for others what it has for me, you are certainly one of the benefactors of mankind.

Sincerely wishing you every blessing, I am

Very respectfully yours,
JOHN J. CLARK,
Rector of St. Peter's Church.

With such assurance and from such men, no stronger proof can be adduced unless it be from its effects upon trial.

POETRY.

"I See Beautiful Objects."

The Christian Times says, the following beautiful lines were written by a valued correspondent, and were suggested by a scene at the death-bed of her father. He was observed all at once to raise his hands and clasp them together, while an expression of delight passed over his features. "What do you see father?" she asked, "Oh I see beautiful objects," was the reply:

Father! the pearly gates unfold,
The sapphire walls, the streets of gold,
Are bursting on thy sight;
The Angel bands come singing down,
And one has got thy starry crown
And one thy robe of white.

Poising above on silvery wing,
They're waiting thy freed soul to bring
To its new home above:
There, folded to thy Saviour's breast,
How sweet, how full will be thy rest
Beneath his eye of love.

I would not hold thee longer here,
Though well I know that many a tear
For thy dear sake will flow.
The morning dawns upon thy sight,
How long, how dark has been the night!
Father! dear Father! go.

To Parents.

He who checks a child with terror,
Stops its play and stills its song,
Not alone commits an error,
But a great and moral wrong.

Give it play and never fear it,
Active life is no defect;
Never, never break its spirit,
Curb it only to direct.

Would you stop the flowing river,
Thinking it would cease to flow?
Onward it must flow forever;
Better teach it where to go.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Trembling Eyelid.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

It was the day before Christmas, in the year 1778, that during our war of revolution an armed vessel sailed out of the port of Boston. She was strongly built, and carried 20 guns, with a well appointed crew of more than 100, and provisions for a cruise of six months. As she spread her broad white sails; and steered from the harbor with a fair, fresh breeze, she made a noble appearance. Many throbbing hearts breathed a blessing on her voyage, for she bore a company of as bold and skilful seamen as ever dared the perils of the deep. But soon the north wind blew, and brought a heavy sea into the bay. The night proved dark, and they came to anchor with difficulty near the harbor of Plymouth. The strong gale that buffeted them became a storm, and the storm a hurricane.

Snow fell, and the cold was terribly severe. The vessel was driven from her moorings, and struck on a reef of rocks. She began to fill with water, and they were obliged to cut away her masts. The sea rose above the main deck, sweeping over it at every surge. They made every exertion that courage could prompt, or hardihood endure. But so fearful were the wind and cold, that the stoutest man was not able to strike more than two blows in cutting away the mast, without being relieved by another. The wretched people thronged together upon the quarter-deck, which was crowded almost to suffocation. They were exhausted with toil and suffering, and could obtain neither provisions nor fresh water. They were all covered by the deep sea, when the vessel became a wreck.

But, unfortunately, the crew, got access to ardent spirits, and many of them drank to intoxication. Insubordination, mutiny, and madness ensued. The officers remained clear minded, but lost all authority over the crew, who raved about them. A more frightful scene can scarcely be imagined. The dark sky, the raging storm, the waves breaking wildly over the rocks, and threatening every moment to swallow up the broken vessel, and the half-frozen beings who maintained their icy hold on life, lost to reason and to duty, or fighting fiercely with each other. Some lay in disgusting stupidity, others, with fiery faces blasphemed God. Some, in temporary delirium, fancied themselves in palaces, surrounded by luxury, and brutally abused the servants, who they supposed, refused to do their biddings. Others, there were, who, amid the beating of that pittiless tempest, believed themselves in the home that they never more must see; and with hollow reproachful voices, besought bread, and wondered why water was withheld from them by the hands that were most dear.

A few, whose worst passions were quickened by alcohol to a fiend-like fury, assaulted or wounded those who came in their way, making shrieks of defiance, and their curses heard above the roar of the storm. Intemperance never displayed itself in more distressing attitudes. At length death began to do his work. The miserable creatures fell dead every hour upon the deck, being frozen stiff and hard. Each corpse, as it became breathless, was [illegible] of dead, that more space might be left to the survivors.—Those who drank most freely were the first to perish.

On the third day of these horrors, the inhabitants of Plymouth, after making many ineffectual attempts, reached the wreck, not without danger. What a melancholy spectacle! Lifeless bodies stiffened in every form that suffering could devise. Many lay in a vast pile. Others sat with their heads reclining on their knees; others grasping the ice-covered ropes; some in a posture of defence, like the dying gladiator; others with hands held up to heaven, as if deprecating their fate.

Orders were given to search earnestly for every mark or sign of life. One boy was distinguished amid the mass of dead, only by the trembling of one of his eyelids. The poor survivors were kindly received into the houses of the people of Plymouth, and every eeffort used for their restoration. The captain and lieutenant, and a few others who had abstained from the use of ardent spirits survived. The remainder were buried, some in separate graves, and others in a large pit, whose hollow is still to be seen on the south-west side of the burial ground at Plymouth.

The funeral obsequies were most solemn. When the clergyman who was to perform the last service, first entered, and saw more than seventy dead bodies, some fixing upon him their stony eyes, and others stiffened into the horrible expression of their last mortal agony, he was so affected as to faint.

Some were brought on shore alive, and received every attention, but survived only a short time. Others were restored after a long sickness, but with their limbs so injured by the frost as to become cripples for life. In a village, at some distance from Plymouth, a widowed mother, with her daughter, were constantly attending a couch, on which lay a sufferer. It was the boy whose trembling eyelid attracted the notice of pity as he lay among the dead.

"Mother," he said, in a feeble tone, "God bless you for having taught me to avoid ardent spirits. It was this that saved me. After those around me grew intoxicated, I had enough to do to protect mysnlf from them. Some attacked and dared me to fight. Others pressed the poisonous draught to my lips, and made me drink. My lips and throat were parched with thirst. But I knew, if I drank with them, I must loose my reason as they did, and perhaps blaspheme my Maker.

"One by one they died, those poor infuriated wretches. Their shrieks and groans still seem to ring in my ears. It was in vain that the captain and other officers, and a few good men, warned them of what would ensue, if they thus continued to drink, and tried every methed in their power to restore them to order. They still fed upon the intoxicating liquor. They grew delirious; they died in heaps.

"Dear mother, our sufferings from hunger and cold you cannot imagine. After my feet were frozen, but before I lost the use of my hands, I discovered a box among the fragments of the wreck, far under water. I toiled with a rope to drag it up; but my strength was not sufficient. A comrade, who was still able to move a little, assisted me. At length it came within our reach. We hoped that it might contain bread, and took courage. Uniting our strength, we burst it open. It contained only a few bottles of olive oil, yet we gave God thanks; for we found that by occasionally moistening our lips with it, and swallowing a little, it allayed the gnawing, burning pain in the stomach.—Then my comrade died; and I laid beside him as one dead, surrounded by corpses.

"Presently, the violence of the tempest, that had so long raged, subsided; and I heard quick footsteps and strange voices amid the wreck where we lay. They were the blessed people of Plymouth, who had dared every danger to save us. They lifted in their arms and wrapped in blankets all who could speak. Then they earnestly sought all who could move. But every drunkard was among the dead. And I was so exhansted with toil, and suffering, and cold, that I could not stretch a hand to my deliverers. They passed me again and again.

They carried the living to the boat. I feared that I was left behind. Then I prayed earnestly in my heart, 'O Lord, for the sake of my widowed mother, for the sake of my dearest sister, save!' Methought the last man had gone, and I besought the Redeemer to receive my spirit. [illegible] strained every nerve. My whole soul strove and shuddered within me. Still my body was immovable as marble. Then a loud voice said: 'Come back, and help me out with this poor lad. One of his eyelids trembles—he lives.' Oh the music of that sweet voice to me! The trembling eyelid, the prayer to God, and your lessons of temperance, my mother, saved me."

Then the loving sister embraced him with tears, and the mother said: Praise be to Him who hath spared my son to be the comfort of my age!"

Two in a Grave.

Old Tom R—— was a man of good feeling and no little wit—and yet a terrible drunkard. An awful spectacle he was, when I last saw him—but I'll not think of that. Let me rather relate an adventure that befell him.

"Pretty well over the bay, as usual, Tom was one Saturday night heading for home, when he took a lee lurch and brought up in the grave yard. Now it is not my opinion that Tom went there for the purpose of meditation, for he was not much given that way. In fact he always declared that the only part of him that ever reflected was his nose—and it certainly was a great and shining light, in its way. Tom found the land more billowy here than in the road and instead of looking upon the last earthly tenements of the departed as incentives to serious thought, only found them stumbling blocks in the way. Now it happened that the sexton had that day dug a grave for old widow P., who was to be buried on the morrow. This he had left uncovered, not supposing that any one 'would seek a lodging there.' After tumbling about for some time, Tom found himself at the bottom of this grave, 'struck all of a heap.' 'Down among the dead men sure enough, said he, quoting a part of the chorus of a song. After some ineffectual attempts to rise, 'Well,' he continued, 'I suppose I shall rise, when the rest do,' and with this he settled himself to rest in his narrow bed.

Now it fell out that old Johnny Jones, who kept a bit of a shop on Fore street, was about this time wending his way to his fireside and his wife. Johnny had the reputation of being a very 'snug man,' and well-knowing that time is money, he was in the habit of saving a minute or two by striking across the grave yard on his way home. On this occasion he had with him a new pair of boots, which he had been to the extravagance of procuring for the morrow's wear. On he went over the graves, thinking only of his gains, when he should have been considering his ways, until, not suspecting any pitfalls, he pitched head foremost into the open grave, much to the discomfiture of our hero, who considered himself the lawful tenant by right of pre-discovery. Raising himself therefore with an effort, he hiccupped forth with much drunken indignation, 'For God's sake, (hic) can't you let the dead rest.'

If Johnny had been decomposed by his fall, he was horrified by this interrogation. Disturbing the dead was the last thing he desired to be guilty of. How he got out of the grave he never knew, nor how he got home, but when he recovered himself, he replied to his wife's interrogations, by exclaiming,—Captain B. came out of his grave, as I passed by, and swore at me like a pirate!

As for Tom, he awoke next morning a sober if not a wiser man, and finding a nice pair of boots at his feet, appropriated them, and went his way, well satisfied with his dealings with the dead.'—Portland Transcript.'

Be sure the Fox is Dead.

The following anecdote, instructive on many other subjects besides that of the Maine Liquor Law, was related by a venerable speaker at the late anniversary meeting of the Free Will Baptists. We find it in the columns of the Morning Star:

"Father Phinney wished to relate an anecdote for which the audience were all ready. He proceeded. While hearing Bro. Peck telling how whist these rumsellers have become, I was reminded of one John Skillins, an old bachelor, who lived in Gorham, my native town. Old John was a fox hunter. At one time, an old fox came to his trap, eat off the bait and went off. John went to his trap, looked and said (for he was always taking to himself,) "What does that fox think to outwit John Skillins?" So he fixed the bed, and he set his trap the other side up to outwit the fox. But it was one of the cunning old foxes, and he managed to get off the bait, spoil the bed, and get off again without being caught. John went to his trap, and looked on astonished; but he was not to be outwitted by a fox; he would show them that he knew more than the whole tribe of foxes. So he borrowed another trap, and set two, so that while the fox was in one, he got his hind leg caught in the other. When John came to his trap, he said, "Good morning, Mr. Fox. Did I not tell you that it was of no use to attempt to outwit John Skillins?" He then took up a pitch knot and whaled him on the head, till the fox laid down just as Bro. Peck says those rumsellers do (applause.) Now, said Phinney, what I want is, that we should not be deceived, but be sure and kill the fox dead."

Keeping Tavern.

Some twenty years ago, a carpenter, who was tired of making an honest living came to a friend of mine in Philadelphia, with a petition for a tavern license, which he requested him to sign. My friend looked at him, and asked why he did not stick to his plane and bench? The answer was.

'Tavern business is a more lucrative trade; I want to get rich.'

'Well, but don't you think you will be affording additional facilities to drunkards to destroy themselves?'

'Perhaps I shall.'

'Do you believe at least five men every year will die drunkards if you succeed in getting a license?'

'Why I never thought of that before; but I suppose it would be so.'

'Then if the Lord lets you keep tavern ten years, fifty men will have died through your agency—now what becomes of the drunkard? Does he go to Heaven?'

'I suppose not.'

'I am sure he does not, for no drunkard shall inherit the Kingdom of Heaven; what becomes of him then?'

'Why he must go to hell.'

'Well, do you think it will be just, if the Lord, at the end of ten years, sends you down to hell too, to look after those fifty drunkards?'

The man threw down his petition, went back to his honest occupation, and never was tempted to desire a license again.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. Jones' Soliloquy.

BY FANNY FERN.

"Mercy on us! what a double and twisted fool I was to marry a handsome man. He never finds a spare minute to adorn me, because he is all the time adorning himself. I never could see the necessity of beauty in a man. For a woman might just as well cut her throat and be done with it, if she isn't pretty; but if a man has a fine, well made figure, and is a gentleman in his manners, that's enough, provided he neither squints, nor smokes, nor swears, and knows enough to hold an unbrella over a lady's bonnet without giving her all the dripings, (A rare masculine accomplishment.)

"Now my husband, Sam Jones, has beauty enough for a dozen of men, and what's more, he kows it. He spends one half his time at the glass, and the other half in making eyes at the women. Couldn't I be the death of him? If we go out to walk every body says what a handsome fellow! How came he to marry such a dowdy little wife? (That's pleasant!) I haven't got a closet in the house that isn't lumbered up with his superfluous rattle-traps. Checked, striped, and plain pants, double and single breasted vests, of every color and shape; boots and pumps without limit; smoking caps, dressing gowns, revolving shirts, with dickies plain on one side, white on the other, made for dress or travelling, with accommodating bosoms to suit all emergencies: Eau de Cologne, club, Macassar oil, curling tongues, scented shaving soap, whisker dye, and a score more of fooleries that I have neither time nor patience to mention.

"I'm never sure what the man's about! it takes me all my time to look after him, and then I get awfully humbugged; and that puts me in mind to inquire (privately) about that 'new club' he has joined.—Don't believe a word of it! Clubs don't meet every night in the week, Samivel!

"Next to clubs, I hate widows. They are the very ——! I've heard the heathens called 'benighted;' they've sense enough to burn up the widows when the husband's die—and that's a step further in civilization than we've taken. There's nothing like 'em. If they make up their minds to marry a man it's done. I know one that was terribly afraid of thunder and lightning, and every time a storm came up, she would run into Mr. Smith's house, (he was a widower,) and clasp her little hands and fly around, till the man was half distracted for fear she would get killed; and the consequence was, she was Mrs. Jones Smith before three thunder storms had passed over her head. Wasn't that diplomatic?

"Then there's that little blue eyed widow Wilkins. Didn't she drop her prayer book coming out of church for my handsome husband to pick up? And didn't I see him squeeze her hand when he handed it back to her? And when I told him a long rigamarole of a story going home, to divert his mind from the little minx, didn't he answer 'yes' and 'no' at random, and laugh at the wrong place? And didn't he the next morning put salt in his coffee, and sugar on his beefsteak?

It is astonishing widows will be so indelicate as to doff their weeds. It's nothing more nor less than a walking advertisement for another husband. Mrs. Lee was spending a short time at the sea shore, in her new regimentals, when one of the ladies at the tea table, struck with a sudden thought, said, very innocently, 'By the way, Mrs. Lee, where is your husband?' I should have been very sorry to have told where I thought he was, for the way he used to swear when he talked, was awful to mention!

"Now what a glorious example I'd be to the sex if Providence should see fit to make me a widow! I wonder if Samivel will pop off? I should hate to put my curls behind my ears, but I'd do it, and I wouldn't so much as look at any man, unless it was Tom King. Wonder if he'd marry me? Well! there now! I have spoke in meeting! It can't be helped now, as deacon Smith said, when his daughter surprised him kising widow Moore—'It's natur, Sally; natur.'"

Upwards of fifty ships have sailed from China for California, taking it is estimated, about 16,000 emigrants.

The new banking law of this State went into effect on the first day of July.

Temperance in Scotland.

We learn from various sources that there is a great temperance revival now in progress in Scotland. Weekly temperance meetings are held in Edinburgh and other cities and towns, and a general effort is making to put a stop to the public sale of all intoxicating drinks. The authorities of Edinburgh have ordered all drinking houses to be closed on the Sabbath, which is in that country a bold push towards accomplishing the end sought. May they be successful is our earnest prayer.

Michigan State Temperance Convention.

This body assembled at Detroit on Wednesday, July 7. It was a very enthusiastic meeting. Seven thousand persons formed a procession, and after marching through the principal streets of the city, retired to a beautiful grove and organized the Convention.

Hon. Jacob M. Howard, of Detroit, formerly a member of Congress from Michigan, was elected President of the Convention, assisted by nine Vice-Presidents and two Secretaries.

Mr. Howard, on taking the Chair, addressed a few appropriate remarks.

Rev. George Duffield offered a fervent prayer to Almighty God, for his divine blessing upon the vast assemblage, and the good cause in which they were engaged; after which Hon. Neil Dow, author of the "Maine Law," was introduced to the meeting, and received with three tremendous cheers.

Mr. Dow proceeded at length with an eloquent, argumentative, and effective speech. He was listened to with the most undivided attention by the great multitude assembled, and was frequently and heartily applauded.

Rev. Dr. Duffield then addressed the assemblage in a short but earnest speech. We have never seen the Doctor more deeply moved, or speak more effectively.

He was followed by Rev. G. L. Foster with a few pointed remarks.

Rev. J. A. Boughman then spoke for a few minutes, in his very happiest vein, sounding the very notes of triumph in our glorious cause, with his clarion voice.

After Mr. Boughman concluded, Mr. "Gardner, the original and inimitable New England Soap man," spoke for a few moments, commending, with a most amusing compound of the comical and pathetic, the astonishing virtues of pure cold water and his own New England Soap.

The following resolutions were then passed:

1st. Resolved, That the evils of intemperance cannot be prevented, whilst the traffic in intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is continued; and that it is the right and the duty of the people, in self-defence, by legislation and other suitable means, to bring such traffic to an end.

2nd. Resolved, That the principles of the "Maine Law" meet the approbation of this Convention.

3rd. Resolved, That in urging the enactment of such a law in this State—and urging it with the profoundest and most solemn conviction of its necessity—this Convention, without asking freemen to sever their old relations to political parties, do most earnestly appeal to them, in selecting candidates for seats in the Legislature, to keep steadily in view this great object;—an object before which ordinary interests sink into insignificance,—an object appealing not only to the highest moral feeling of community, but to the highest sentiments of patriotism and pride of country.

We pass over the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th resolutions, for want of room.

8th. Resolved, That it is the duty of every citizen, without distinction of political parties, to keep in view this great object, and in the exercise of the elective franchise, to cast their votes in such way as to secure the passage of laws necessary to effect the banishment from the State of the evil of drunkenness.

A large amount of business was transacted, and speeches made by Dr. Jewett and others, and the Convention closed with nine cheers for the author of the Maine Law, Neil Dow, who was present.

Prince Edward's Island.

A grand Demonstration of the Sons of Temperance, under the auspices of His Excellency, Sir Alexander Bannerman, Lieutenant Governor, came off on Thursday, July 15, on Prince Edward's Island, British America.

It was a gala day with the Sons in that vicinity, and was a splendid affair. The British Provinces are now far in advance of most of the States on the subject of temperance and are making every effort to enact the Maine Law in each one of them, and some already have it.

☞ A Temperance Camp-meeting will be held near South Bend, on the 5th and 6th of August next. Many distinguished speakers are expected and we hope the friends will have a glorious gathering.

Reapers in Australia were, at the last accounts, earning $7 per day.

New Publications.

National Portrait Gallery.—No. 1, of this excellent work is now before us.—Many years since we recollect seeing this same work which is now being republished and thought then, as we think now, that it was a work of great value. It will contain steel plate portraits of one hundred and twenty distinguished Americans with a biography of each. It was originally published at forty dollars. It is now published in better style at ten dollars—the plates alone are worth the money. We recommend it to every American citizen as one of the "treasures of history."—Robert E. Patterson & Co., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Western Odd Fellow's Magazine.—The first number of this Magazine is now upon our table. The editors are Rev. P. G. Geo. B. Jocelyn and John B. Anderson, A. M. It is a well printed periodical and possesses ability and sterling worth. We are not a member of the Order, but recommend it to those who are. Terms—$1 00 per year in advance. It is published monthly at New Albany, Ind. Anderson & Warren, Publishers.

American Temperance Magazine.—The publisher has sent us No. 1, of Vol. 3, of this excellent periodical. It is much improved since the close of the Second Volume. The number before us contains a striking likeness of our old friend B. S. Edwards of Illinois. We can recommend the Magazine as a first class work.

Published by P. T. Sherlock, New York. Terms—single copy $2; 4 copies $7; 7 copies $11; 10 copies $16; 20 copies for $30 and one copy to the person sending for the club. We will forward subscriptions for the work.

☞ We were in the procession yesterday, attendant upon the funeral obsequies of Henry Clay, and we saw but two places of business open on the streets through which we passed; these two places were a couple of liquor shops, one on the north east corner of First street and Jefferson Avenue, the other just above, on the Avenue.—Mich. Organ.

What better things could be expected from liquor shops.

When residing in a neighboring State the principal liquor seller of the town lost his wife, and by his orders his clerk kept the shop open from the time she died until after she was buried, and the funeral procession passed by the door which was open, and the usual crowd about it. The owner returned from the funeral to the shop before going to the house, and sent his child, a daughter of ten years, home alone to mourn in solitude the death of a most excellent mother—killed by the brutality of that father, who now left her in silent grief that he might save a few coppers at his miserable rum shop. These things we saw with our own eyes, and though it appears strange, yet it is one of the effects of the traffic—it makes man worse than a brute, and sells his character and his soul for money. We would sooner, much sooner, be a highwayman than a whisky-seller, for while the former takes the purse and leaves the character, the latter takes the purse and "the good name which is rather to be chosen than great riches."

Voting Temperance.

The New York Herald says the temperance men can and will, at the next fall elections, cast a vote of fifty thousand in that State, more than sufficient to change the aspect of the whole State government.

From all our sources of information we are convinced that the temperance men of Indiana will cast at least twenty thousand votes. Both these States have been under the power of Whisky Barrels, Champaine Baskets, and Brandy Bottles long enough, and we hope our voters will now assert their rights as freemen, and cast out such rulers.

Duke of Wellington a Maine Law Man.—The Duke, during the Peninsular War, heard that a large magazine of wine lay on his line of march. He feared more for his men from barrels of wine than batteries of cannon, and instantly dispatched a body of troops to "knock every wine barrel on the head."

The Vincennes Gazette says 10 or 12 deaths from cholera, have occurred among the laborers on the Wabash and Erie Canal, South of Petersburgh, in Pike county.

Maine Law in New Brunswick.

The law recently adopted by the Provincial Legislature differs from that of Maine, in that it tolerates beer-shops.

This we consider a sad defect, principally for the reason that it leaves a loop hole for the violation of the whole law. It is very easy to change the name of a grog, to that of a beer-shop, and sell bald-face whiskey under the name of ale. They will get tired of that feature soon, however, and repeal it.

We see it stated that Queen Victoria has vetoed this Law, but this is untrue. The Queen is an advocate of temperance, and recently, with Prince Albert, attended an immense gathering of children at a juvenile temperance jubilee at Manchester. Bro. Coy also denies it in the following note:

Fredericton, June 26th, 1852.

Worthy Brother:—I presume you have seen it stated in the Loyalist that Her Majesty had disallowed the Liquor Bill which passed last winter. I have it from the best authority that this is not the case; but on the contrary, this Bill will in due time be confirmed by Her Majesty's Government.

Yours, very truly, Asa Coy.

So "Little Vic's" Canadian children will yet have the benefit of legal protection from the curses of the liquor traffic.

Maine State Temperance Convention.

On the 7th of July, this body assembled at Portland, and was organized by the choice of A. S. Richmond, Esq., as President, with three Vice Presidents and three Secretaries. A very large number of the friends of temperance from every part of the State were present and participated in the proceedings, which we have not the space to publish. The following resolutions, which speak for themselves, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the passage of the Maine Law by the Legislature of this State, was not as has been alleged, an act in advance of public sedtiment, but a measure which the people had long desired and had a perfect right to demand.

Resolved, That this law is not as its enemies assert, unjust and despotic but eminently humane, republican and christian in its provisions and principles; that it works no wrong to the dealer, but seeks alike his good and the good of all mankind.

Resolved, That it is the imperative duty of every friend of Temperance to vote for such men and such only, in the coming election, for all offices in which their official action will bear upon the law, as are out-spoken, unequivocal friends of the Maine Law.

Resolved, That the State Central Committee be requested to present to the several Candidates for Governor, the doings of this Convention, and interrogate them as to their real position in relation to the Maine Law.

John B. Gough.

We perceive by our Canadian Exchanges that this celebrated Temperance advocate is traveling in Upper Canada, making a vast number of converts to the Maine Law doctrine and gathering crowds wherever he goes.

There is no man who is doing more good at the present time than J. B. Gough, and none whom we would hail with greater delight in Indiana. An effort has been made to get him to our Campmeetieg in September.

The old oak tree, beneath whose branches Elliott preached to the Indians at South Natick, in 1690, is still standing, a "hale green tree."

The wheat crop throughout the Western States is spoken of as looking extremely fine the present season. In Alabama the crop is also very good, and the yield will be greater than for several years past.

Civilization Progressing Westward.—A Post-office has been established at Traverse des Sioux, an Indian trading post, and site for a city in prospective, about 100 miles West by South of St. Paul, on the Minnesota river.

Another New Planet.—J. R. Hind, Esq., of Bishop's Observatory, London, has discovered yet another planet, being the fourth first seen by him, and the fourteenth known to exist between Mars and Jupiter, all of which have been discovered during the present century.

The corner-stone of the Bible-house, in process of erection on the Fourth Avenue, New-York, was laid last week by the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuyson, President of the American Bible Society, with appropriate ceremonies. The new building will cost, according to the estimate, $8,000.

Magnificent Field.—Major J. Jones, of Wheatland, New Castle county, Delaware, the present season, has in wheat, a field of three hundred acres, without a single fence or ditch, or hedge, or any obstruction, save the fence which surrounds it.

Munificent Donation.—George Peabody, Esq., the eminent London banker, has given to the town of Danvers, Mass., which is his native place, the munificent sum of seventy thousand dollars, for the establishment of a lyceum and library, and the erection of the necessary buildings.

How to make large Currants.—The currant likes a moist, and a somewhat shady situation. Downing says: "No shrub shows the good effects of high manuring so completely as the currant. If you wish to get a very large fruit, train the bush on the north side of a trellis, and feed the roots with half-rotten stable manure."

The rowdyism of the week ending June 12th, has fortunately come considerably short of the previous seven days. Not more than three persons have died—this week—from wounds received in assaults; that is, we have had but three murders from rum and rowdyism. We are improving considerably.—New York Tribune.

There is to be at Portland a two days State Temperance Convention of all the friends of temperance in Maine, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 28th and 29th of July, 1852, "to form a more perfect organization throughout the State, with a view to sustaining our admirable Anti-Liquor Law, against the assaults of those who seek its overthrow."

Owing to the negligence of a switch tender, a passenger train on the Michigan Central Railroad, when under full headway, near Marshall, was thrown from the track. The locomotive was overturned, and a fireman named Danforth was instantly killed, his brother, the engineer, had his arm broken, and the baggage-man, Albert Warren, had his shoulder put out. Some of the passengers in the second class cars were considerably, and a woman severely bruised.

MR. EDITOR:—When I first read the article in your paper of the 14th inst., which is intended to be a review of my position on the Temperance question, I determined to leave the writer "alone in his glory;" first, because it is anonymous, and secondly, because it is so manifestly absurd that it needs no reply. But on further reflection I have concluded that there may be other weak-minded, but kind-hearted brethren who may doubt my orthodoxy, and thus be offended. Lest there should be, I will give it brief notice. It may pay, even to relieve the mind of 'Washingtonian' himself, for, judging from the communication alluded to, he is a well-meaning man, and may have some influence in the immediate neighborhood in which he lives. I do not consider it, then, an unworthy notice, to satisfy one so humble in talents and position as he, for even our weakest brethren have claims upon us.

Now, the brunt of my offending is expressing a preference for the details of the "Massachusetts Law" over those of the "Maine Law." I am sorry to differ from as sincere a Temperance man as "Washingtonian" on so vital a question, but when I find myself in company with such men as Neal Dow, Gen. Carey, Judge O'Neal, Wm. R. Stacy, and, I believe, every member of the late National Division, except one man from Rhode Island,—at least so far as I heard any expression from them—I can afford to have my well-meaning friend "Washingtonian" gently rap me on the knuckles for dissenting from him. I presume "Washingtonian" takes the "Chart," but he does not keep posted up in all things appertaining to the Temperance question, or he would know better than to say the section which tolerates the manufacture of liquors was a concession to the "rum power." It was the dictate of common sense. The section prohibiting the manufacture in Maine is about as much needed there as is a law in Indiana forbidding catching cod-fish. There was but one distillery in Maine, a one-horse affair, making the meanest kind of whisky, mostly out of potatoes. It was an act of mercy to dry it up. Yet the Maine Law provides for selling liquor. Now the Massachusetts Law is as stringent in reference to the traffic as the Maine Law, but, with good sense, provides that for legitimate purposes it may as well be made at home as imported.—But my very good friend does not appear to object to the provision which allows its manufacture for legitimate purposes in Massachusetts—the defect is that it allows it to go out of the State for any purpose the purchaser may choose. Now had the law said, "To be exported out of the State for mechanical and medicinal purposes only," it would have satisfied my friend. Yet any man with two grains of common sense would see, in a minute, that such a clause would be nugatory. What control could the maker, or any one, have over the barrel of whiskey, after it had passed the State? Such a law would only provide for an indefinite amount of fraud. Every man who bought, would only buy for lawful purposes, and sell as he pleased after he got home. I never had unbounded confidence in the wisdom of Yankees, but I always gave them credit for more common sense than such a law as that would imply. Even in the palmiest days of the blue laws they never enacted such an absurdity. Now I am prepared to show that it is as "manifestly right" to manufacture whisky for innocent purposes, as it is to manufacture meal or flour, and no man but a one-idea'd fanatic will dissent from it. It is the design of this law to allow such a manufacture. If it proves defective, it can and will be amended. I was particular in inquiring about the origin of that section, and found it had been inserted, not by the "Rum power," nor as a concession to it, but because such men as Stacy and Wilson and others deemed it "manifestly right."

Now this par excellence Temperance man, who tortures my suggestion into a "fulminating edict," designed to bind all concerned, would make it appear if he could, that I take a position different from the Temperance Convention of last winter, when, in fact, my position is identical with the position they adopted. Had he been present, as all such good Temperance men should have been, he would have learned that that very point was discussed at great length, and the result was, that we resolved to suppress the manufacture and sale of liquors as a beverage, and no more. This is just what the Massachusetts Law does. The Maine Law suppresses the manufacture altogether, and our Temperance Convention thought this manifestly wrong, hence, after a lengthy discussion by as good Temperance men as the sun ever shone on, we adopted the Massachusetts Law, in this respect, as the platform of Indiana, and it was adopted almost unanimously. No one, so far as I remember, advocated that section of the Maine Law as applicable to Indiana. There was too much good sense in the Convention to propose a law which provides for selling liquor, and then compels the agent to go out of the State for what we make purer, better and cheaper at home. Had our soil been as barren as that of Maine, so that we could make no spirits here but the meanest kind, it would have been wise and humane to have dried up mean distilleries. By the way, it is rich, that some wiseacre in Indiana, has discovered that, after all, those Bostonians and other Yankees, who have been filling our land with their rejoicings over the passage of the Maine Law, were mistaken. They have only got a thing sort o' like it, but marred by concessions to the "Rum power." I guess that the rummies in Boston are like a famous General who lost most of his best men in battle, yet retaining the field. He replied to a friend who was congratulating him on the victory, "Another such a victory and I am done." Another such a concession will about finish these men, if indeed they are not "done finished" already.

Now, Mr. Editor, if your correspondent wishes to discuss the relative merits of the details of these two laws, let him come on if he thinks it will be promotive of good. I am for the Maine Law, with such modifications as will suit it to our latitude, not as concessions, but manifest rights.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA TERRITORY, June 30th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD—Dear Sir:—You may, perhaps, be a little surprised to receive a communication dated as above, but the great cause of Temperance meets with such a hearty response, that I cannot but drop you a few lines. By the way, you will think it strange, no doubt, when I tell you I came up on a steamboat on the Mississippi that was a Temperance boat, out and out, and is in the regular trade from Galena to St. Paul. She neither countenances or keeps liquor, nor runs on the Sabbath—two important traits in her character. I must give you her name—NOMINEE, Capt. Smith. I want you to put her name in glowing capitals, as she is an excellent boat, not to be surpassed by any in this Western country, and should any of your folks ever take a trip to St. Paul, I advise them to go on her. But what I want to get at is this, you know they have the Maine Law in this Territory, and I tell you they carry it out in all respects. To illustrate this, I will give you an instance. A young gentleman of the Bar went down the river to purchase some of the good crater, and found it, as he thought, to his advantage to make a large purchase, which he did, and shipped it for Galena, as all goods have to be re-shipped there. Well, when he got to Galena, some of the good Temperance men told him he had better leave it, and not send it to St. Paul, as they had the Maine Law up there; but he persisted, and finally concluded to go up first and investigate the matter, which he did, and at the advice of some of his particular friends, he concluded he was of the upper law crust, and could evade the law. But when the liquor came to be landed at St. Paul, sure enough here stood an officer; and when it was rolled out on the dock, the officer had made ample provision for taking care of it, and confiscated the whole shipment, amounting to $4,000. Thus you see how they do things up here.

Gen. Riley has up his handbill for one thousand able-bodied men to come and hear the wrongs of the widow and orphan, for which he proposes to pay wholesale dealers 25 cents per hour, retailers 18¾, and idlers 12½. This I suppose is the drilling of recruits, as on Monday, the 5th of July, they are to have a grand rally and celebration, and everybody is invited to attend. I should like if you could only be here. Gen. Cary is expected to address the meeting, with other distinguished persons. There is no danger of Minnesota not being right on the Temperance question. I hope Indiana will take pattern.

I must say a word about my trip from Galena here. Never having been on the Mississippi before, of course it could not but be grand to me; but I must confess that it far surpasses anything I had ever expected to see. It is not so wide as I supposed, nor as muddy. You are never out of sight of islands, nor from seeing one side of the river, all the time. The first thing of any note that attracted my attention was old Fort Crawford, situated at Prairie-du-Chien, which affords a magnificent view. It is here that Gen. Taylor was quartered for some time, and was superintending the building of this Fort, much of the work having been done under his immediate direction. There are many old papers now to be found with his own signature to them. His residence, while here, is still in good repair and taste. The Fort is very large, being about three hundred yards square, and all built of sandstone, and plastered inside. The outer enclosure is about fifteen feet high, made of higher timber, about one foot square, set upright into the ground, which affords a perfect barrier against any invasion.—Gen. Scott was also quartered here for a time. It is now all evacuated, and is in a manner worthless, having cost the government about one million dollars. The government hires a man to take charge of it, and keep it from decay as much as possible, but of course it must eventually go to ruin. It is from this Fort that Gen. Atkinson marched, when he followed up and fought the great battle of Bad Axe, fifty-five miles above the Fort, and which resulted in the capture of Black Hawk, and the total destruction of his whole army, including women and children. From the river you have a most beautiful view of the point or elevation from which he could overlook the whole battle, both on the river and on land. It seems as if Nature designed it for the very occasion, as I could no other point possessing all the advantages for our army to be so completely victorious. But I have already written too long.

Yours in L. P. & F.,

DELPHI, July 6th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—The friends of temperance, in "Old Carroll," are up and doing. Bro. Pease reanimated the dry bones last winter. Since then we have been at work; the county has been pretty thoroughly canvassed, and success, to a considerable extent, has crowded our efforts. We had a Mass Meeting, on Wednesday, June 30th, at which about five thousand persons were present—some excellent speeches were delivered, and a free dinner served up in a delightful grove. The young ladies of Pittsburg came out with a banner, on which was inscribed "Total abstinance or no husband," and the citizens of the same village appeared under a banner, on which was "Spread in bold relief their firm resolve, to vote for no man who is not a firm and constant temperance man, and a like resolution to sustain no 'Press' that panders the whisky click."

Although we have gained ground, we are yet in a critical situation. Many of our leading men, especially politicians, are at heart opposed to the cause, but they dare not come out like men and avow their hostility. They are moderate, milk and water temperance men—in other words, they have stolen the "livery" of temperance to serve alcohol in. Men who have enlisted in our ranks, have sunk with the filth and dirt of the "under current." Some tell us they are good temperance men, but when it comes to legal suasion, they are out, and some are perfectly horror stricken at the idea of legislating on a moral question.

There is not a doubt but we shall be represented in the next Legislature by temperance men; but whether they will be counterfeit or genuine, is not yet certainly known. Our opponents are posted up in the way of trickery, and will have to be closely watched. However, since our mass meeting, the "powers that be" have not been heard to call us a "set of Jack Asses," "fanatics," "ultraists," "fools," &c., as heretofore; and I am inclined to think that the "moderate men," including some political aspirants, long faced church members, and others too tedious to mention, will henceforth let us alone.

Yours for the war, J. H. F.

HUNTSVILLE, RANDOLPH Co., July 7.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Allow me to give you a brief account of a Temperance Celebration, on the 3d inst., at this place.

We were favored with a pleasant day; and against 11 o'clock, near three thousand persons, from the neighboring towns and country, had assembled in our village. Several Divisions, and most of the Daughters of Economy Union, were here.

At 11 o'clock we formed in procession, and proceeded to a grove near town, where, at the stand, our Division was presented with a copy of the Sacred Scriptures, by Miss E. Kelso, as the representative of the Ladies of our place and vicinity. After which we formed again in procession, and proceeded to dinner. The Sons of our Division, and the friends of temperance of our place and vicinity, prepared a free dinner, which was placed on a table about three hundred feet in length, not far from the stand. After dinner, we returned to the stand, where the large audience was ably addressed by the Hon. George W. Julian, of Centreville, and the Rev. Mr. Luce, of Winchester.

The prospects of our Division are flattering. We have many good and zealous temperance men in this vicinity. We shall exert our influence to the utmost, to elect men to represent us in the next Legislature, who are temperance men, and who will favor a stringent law prohibiting the making and vending of ardent spirits.

Yours in L. P. and F.

W. F. KELSO.

LADOGA, July 3d, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I now sit down to give you and the friends of Temperance a brief history of the progress of temperance in this town and vicinity, though we cannot progress much farther for want of material, and we feel ourselves fortified against any invasion of the rumites, and we feel that we could with propriety say, that we have attained to the highest pinnacle of temperance. On Saturday the 3d of July, we had a public celebration. The Orders of Sons of Temperance, Odd Fellows, and Cadets of Temperance, together with the Sabbath Schools, formed in procession, and after taking the circuit of the town repaired to one of the churches, and were very eloquently addressed by Bros. Wells, Harney, and Harrison, after which the congregation dispersed to their daily avocation, much delighted with the interview. As for our sentiments with regard to legislation on the liquor traffic, we endorse the sentiment, "go for the Maine Law, all of the Maine Law, and nothing but the Maine Law will do us;" we speak our opinion boldly and independently, and none dare molest or disturb us. Our Division is still on the increase, and we are true to the cause, true to ourselves, and true to all humanity. The Cadets are also doing a good part in this great and glorious work.

We have also a Social Order organized in this place, and already one hundred and sixty-five have signed their names to that instrument, which if faithfully kept, will insure them forever against the curse of intemperance, and render them a blessing to their families and to the community at large. UTICA, Ind., July 1st, 1852.

DEAR SIR:—The Temperance cause is flourishing in Utica. Both the Sons and Cadets are at work. When the Cadets first started here, there were a great many boys who chewed and smoked tobacco, and used profane language, but there are few now; and when the Sons of Temperance started here there were many degraded drunkards in our community, but now some of them fill the highest station in the Division, and what few there are left are ashamed to be seen with their bottles. Not long since I was in conversation with a drunkard's boy and inquired of him if his father kept a bible, he answered no, nor we hain't got any books neither. I then inquired of him if he ever had a newspaper, he said no. O how I felt for him, I thought I would never be a drunkard. I have been much gratified to read some pieces from the Chart, and I hope you will endeavor to send us plenty more of the same sort. Seeing there was no correspondence from our Section, I concluded to let you know how we are getting along. Excuse my bad form of writing.

Yours, in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,

A TRUE CADET.

Temperance Celebration.

We had the pleasure, last week, of attending the Fourth of July Temperance celebration and Barbecue, at Mt. Pleasant, and we are happy to say that our highest expectations were more than realized. We have never, in all our life seen a more orderly concourse of people. Everything was well conducted, and good will and harmony seemed to pervade the entire assembly.

Early on Saturday morning the glorious Stars and Stripes were run up at half mast trimmed in black, on a tall pole in the public square prepared for the occasion, in mourning for the greatest of Statesmen, Henry Clay. At about half past ten o'clock the Sons of Temperance met at their Hall, and about 11 o'clock, in connection with the Daughters and Cadets of Temperance, and a very large number of citizens, numbering in all near one thousand persons, preceded by the Mt. Pleasant Brass Band, formed a procession on the public square, under the auspices of our friend James Bryant, Esq., and marched to the grove, where prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. McMahan. The Temperance Declaration was then read by Dr. W. R. Sherman, after which Rev. Mr. Shumate delivered a very able and eloquent address, when the procession formed and marched to the table, where a sumptuous dinner was prepared by the citizens. We believe about ninety persons signed the pledge.

We heartily congratulate the fraternity on the successful termination of their first effort. All who were participants of their hospitality on that occasion—for their hospitality is unbounded—will ever remember that celebration with pleasurable emotions. May success crown all their efforts for the furtherance of the glorious cause.

At a temperance meeting of the citizens of Hagerstown, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted, to-wit:

WHEREAS, the custom of drinking spirituous liquors has ever been and still is, of all evil that affect the human family, the most ruinous, as it deprives us of our credit, injures our families, perverts our judgment, corrupts our affections, fills our neighbor's houses with scenes of bloodshed, separates the kindred ties of affection in families, alienates husband from wife and wife from husband, parents from children and children from parents, sows the seeds of disease in our very vitals, and does not withdraw its infernal influence until its laboring subjects, worn out by sickness and pain, sink forever, in untimely and dishonorable graves, and even then its deadening, withering blasts pursue the orphans and widows which it has made, and point them out as suitable objects for the scorn and contempt of a cold and unfeeling world; therefore,

Resolved, That the traffic in intoxicating drinks as a beverage is morally wrong.

Resolved, That all places where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage, are in a moral view, nuisances and should as such be legally treated.

Resolved, by the citizens of Hagerstown, that they are in favor of the enactment of a law in the State of Indiana similar to the Maine Liquor Law.

AWFUL DESTRUCTION OF LIFE.—The steamer St. James, on the 5th inst., while returning to New Orleans from Boixi, exploded on Lake Ponchartrain, and burnt up. Fifty lives were lost, among whom were Judge Preston, of the Supreme Court, and Attorney Wolf. What makes this disaster so melancholy in its character is the criminality of the officers—they were racing with the Mobile packet at the time.

The Choctaw Nation has for many years had a law prohibiting both the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks. It has worked happily. So says the Rev. Mr. Byington, a missionary who has been among them thirty years.

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

Smithers on going home the other night was run against by a three story house which was chasing a lamp post up Canal street. On coming too, he thus reasoned with himself. Is that mud, (hiccup) or is it brains? (hiccup.) If it's mud I'm mortally 'toxicated. If it's brains I'm slightly dead [hiccup,] that's all." When we left he was trying to persuade a freestone stoop that it was unconstitutional to leave awning posts out of doors after nightfall.

Mr. O'Flaherty undertook to tell how many were at the party. "The two Crogans were one, meself was two, Mike Finn was three, and—and—who the nick was four? Let me see (counting his fingers) the two Crogans was one, Mike Finn was two, meself was three—and—bedad! there was four of us, but Saint Patrick couldn't tell the name of the other. Now its meself that has it; Mike Finn was one, the two Crogans was two, meself was three—and—and—by my sowl, I think there was but three of us, afther all."

The Boston Post says the book case which the Queen of England is about to present to the Emperor of Austria, will cost $50,000. If she would give him a New Testament worth one dollar, and then $49,999 to read it, there might be some prospect of improvement in the young man.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
TEMPERANCE CHART,

THE OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE GRAND DIVISION, S. OF T. OF INDIANA.

VOLUME II.

Several attempts have been made by the Grand Division of this State to establish a permanent temperance paper in this State, which from various causes have heretofore failed. In the spring of 1851, the Grand Division resolved to take the paper under its own patronage, and the plan has succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations. The paper is now permanently established, and will after the commencement of the 2d volume, be published weekly. It will continue to advocate the cause of temperance in its broadest sense, embracing all the various organizations having for their object the entire destruction of the liquor traffic.

TERMS:

The CHART will be published weekly, on good paper, and new type, on the following terms:

Single subscribers, 75 cents per year.

Clubs of ten or more to one post office, 50 cents per year.

Payable in all cases in advance.

This is the cheapest Temperance paper in the world! It will be published by Bro. JOHN H. OHR, with whom the Grand Division has made a contract, and edited as heretofore by the Grand Scribe. A limited number of advertisements will be inserted, at the usual rates.

All letters relating to the paper, and all communications, should be addressed, post paid, to C. WOODWARD, G. S., Indianapolis, Ind.

All D. G. W. P.'s, and W. P.'s are, by a resolution of the Grand Division, authorized agents of the Chart.

Remittances can be sent through the postmasters free of postage.

The postage on the Chart will be as follows:

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

AND THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

WITH detailed notices of the Expedition in search of the missing vessels under Sir John Franklin; by P. L. Simmonds. To which is added an account of the American Expedition, under the patronage of Henry Grinnell, Esq., with an introduction to the American Expedition, by John C. Lord, D. D., 400 pages, price $1,25 To contain a map of the Arctic Region and plates illustrating the work.

"Where for relentless months continued night,
Holds, o'er the glittering waste, her starry light."

"The natives of America and England have before met upon the Ocean, but they met for deadly strife. Now, too, they met for strife, equally determined, but not with each other. They met in the holy cause of benevolence and human sympathy, to battle with the elements beneath the Arctic Circle; and the chivalric heroism which the few stout hearts of the two nations displayed in that conflict redounds a thousand fold more to the glory of the actors, their governments and the race, than if four score ships and ten thousand armed men had fought for the mastery of each other upon the broad ocean, and battered hulks and warred corpses had gone down to the coral caves of the sea, a dreadful offering to the demon of Discord, in which event troops of widows and orphan children would have sent up a cry of wail. Now the heroes advanced manfully to rescue husbands and fathers, to restore them to their wives and children."

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Of all the numerous medicines extant, (and some of them valuable) for the cure of pulmonary complaints, nothing has ever been found which could compare in its effects with this Preparation. Others cure sometimes, but at all times and in all diseases of the lungs and throat where medicine can give relief, this will do it. It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe in accordance with the directions. We do not advertise for the information of those who have tried it but those who have not. Families that have known its value will not be without it, and by its timely use, they are secure from the dangerous consequences of Coughs and Colds which neglected, ripen into fatal consumption.

The Diploma of the Massachusetts Institute was awarded to this preparation by the Board of Judges in September, 1847; also, the Medals of the three great institutes of Art, in this country; also the Diploma of the Ohio Institute at Cincinnati, has been given to the CHERRY PECTORAL, by their Government in consideration of its extraordinaty excellence and usefulness in curing affections of the Lungs and Throat.

Read the following opinion founded on the long experience of the eminent Physician of the Port and City of

ST. JOHNS, May 8, 1851.

Dr. J. C. Ayer:—Five years trial of your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, has proven what I foresaw from its composition, must be true, that it eradicates and cures the colds and coughs to which we, in this section are peculiarly liable.

I think its equal has not yet been discovered, nor do I know how a better remedy can be made for the distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

J. J. BURTON, M. D., F. R. S.

See what it has done on a wasted constitution, not only in the following cases, but a thousand more:

SUNBURY, Jan. 24th, 1851.

Dr. Ayer:—In the month of July, I was attacked by a violent diarrhœa in the mines of California. I returned to San Francisco. My diarrhœa ceased, but was followed by a severe cough—and much soreness. I finally started for home, but received no benefit from the voyage. My cough continued to grow worse, and when I arrived in New York, I was at once marked by my acquaintance as a victim of consumption. I must confess that I saw no sufficient reason to doubt what my friends all believed. At this time I commenced taking your truly invaluable medicine with little expectation of deriving any benefit from its use. You would not receive these lines did I not regard it my duty to state to the afflicted, through you, that my health, in the space of eight months, is fully restored. I attribute it to the use of your Cherry Pectoral

Yours truly, WILLIAM W. SMITH.

WASHINGTON, Pa., April 12, 1848.

Dear Sir:—Feeling that I have been spared from a premature grave, through your instrumentality by the providence of God, I will take the liberty to express to you my gratitude.

A Cough and the alarming symptons of Consumption had reduced me too low to leave me anything like hope, when my physician brought me a bottle of your "Pectoral." It seemed to afford immediate relief, and now in a few weeks time has restored me to sound health.

If it will do for others what it has for me, you are certainly one of the benefactors of mankind.

Sincerely wishing you every blessing, I am

Very respectfully yours,
JOHN J. CLARK,
Rector of St. Peter's Church.

With such assurance and from such men, no stronger proof can be adduced unless it be from its effects upon trial.

POETRY.

Each one hath a Part to do.

Men and brothers! up, be doing,
Help each other by the way,
Aid with hand and heart the dawning
Of a great and mighty day.
Think not earth hath fixed teachers,
Progress centred in the few;
All men more or less are missioned—
Each one hath a part to do.

Lend your aid, however little,
Lend your talent, though it's small;
Trifles thrive by combination,
Working for the good of all;
Truth is slow, and wants assistance
Of the many with the few;
Every man, however feeble,
Hath a part he's skilled to do.

Faint not, lag not in your doing,
Still press onward; ye will find
Brilliant sunbeams flashing ever
From the archives of the mind;
Earth holds not a human creature,
Meanest pauper ye may view,
If he hath a spark of reason,
But he hath a part to do.

All men may assist each other,
Though it but a trifle be;
The flowing streams make flowing rivers,
Rivers make a mighty sea.
One may do the work of many,
Many help the toiling few;
Thus with all men, high or low,
Each one hath a part to do.

Many pillars bear the temple,
Varied in their strength and height;
And, though versatile in greatness,
Each contributes to its might.
Thus, though men proclaim their weakness,
And their talents small and few,
Each one shares in human greatness,
Each one hath a part to do.

Men and brethren! onward! onward!
Lag not till the work is done;
Grow in ardor, grow in earnest,
For the dawning has begun.
Let no heart be found to tarry.
Stirring impulse bear you through,
All men aid the day that's dawning—
Each man hath a part to do.

MISCELLANEOUS.

For the Temperance Chart.

To Mt. Pleasant Division, No. 191 S. of T.

W. P. AND BRETHREN:—In compliance with your request for a copy of a Temperance Declaration, delivered on the 3d of July, I hereby submit the following for your consideration:

Yours, in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,
W. R. SHERMAN, M. D.

LADIES AND FELLOW CITIZENS:

It becomes my duty to read to you the Declaration of Independence, or a substitute in sentiment, corresponding with the exercises of the occasion. We do not refrain from reading that immortal instrument which gave us national birth, because we lightly esteem its composition, nor because we cannot appreciate its noble sentiments. Nay! we consider it the production of a gigantic mind; it holds in combination the "Flowers of Eloquence, the force of Logic, and the soul of Wisdom. It is the grand palladium of equal rights, the polar star of rational Liberty, and the Magna Charta of universal Freedom."

But while we entertain such a high regard for that instrument, and for the proud blessings of Liberty, which this day swell the hearts of the American people, we are still forceably impressed with the painful reflection that our foes are not all vanquished—that we are now oppressed with a Tyrant, who is stronger to defeat, and who has long defied us by murder and bloodshed.

We are thoroughly convinced that we are now suffering more oppression and injury under the reign of the King of morbid appetite, than was ever inflicted by a British Crown during its most sanguinary conflicts. Therefore we think we have just cause to renounce our allegiance to his oppressive power, and declare as did our Fathers, in the open face of Heaven, that it is our right and our determination to be free. We will now proceed to read to you our Temperance Declaration, and though it contains language and embodies sentiments of the great original instrument, we think it quite applicable to our present condition:

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the oppressive bands which connect them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and nature's God entitle us, a decent respect to the opinions of others, require that they should declare the causes which impell them to a separation.

We hold these truths self evident, that all men were created and endowed intellectually with powers and capacities in their nature, calculated to elevate and dignify his character, and that the beautiful sentiments of Holy Writ is full of meaning and eloquence, that declares him to have been created "a little lower than the Angels." These noble qualifications we maintain should forever debar the exercise of all influences which are degrading and ruinous in their tendencies.

He is also endowed with certain unalienable rights, such as the pursuit of happiness, life, and Liberty to do right, and promote the welfare of humanity. To secure these rights laws are instituted by those who derive their powers from the consent of the majority, and whenever those persons and laws become oppressive, and destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter and abolish such laws, by electing such individuals as will afford them protection, safety, and happiness.

Our own nature seems to dictate, that laws and governments long established, though defective, should not be changed for light and trivial causes. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, begun at a remote period, pursuing invariably the same object and evinces a design to reduce them under absolute tyrany, forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and duty impells us to throw off such unwarrantable oppression and make new provisions for our future security.

Such has been our patient suffering for centuries, and such is now the necessity that brings us together, to express our grievances and to consult how we can best divert the gathering storm, and dry up the gushing streams of intemperance which are desolating our land and nation.

The history of "King Alcohol" is a history of unremitting injuries and bloodshed, having in direct object the establishment of absolute ruin and destruction among our inhabitants. To prove this, we submit the following facts to a candid world:

Far back in the annals of our race we find the doleful traces of this awful Tyrant, then as now, he proved a "fell destroyer" to all grades of society, plunging alike the Prince, the miser, and the poor into one common grave; his onward march and blighting influence without cessation, have accompanied the progress of time, until today in all his hideousness he is slaying our brethren, poisoning our sons, and rendering the hearts of mothers and wives desolate, mingled streams of blood and tears are flowing to our feet, groans and agonies are rushing upon our ears, the entreaties of our friends, the impulses of our nature, are all asking us why! why! cannot we have some security and protection.

He is now dictating our mighty republic, is triumphing in our Congressional Halls, and is leading captive the great men of our land. He is refusing obedience to moral government and acknowledges no laws but those that are ruinous to our peace and quietude. He has been treading among our Legislative bodies, utterly forbidding them to listen to the cry of millions, and from passing laws for the general good. He is then fatigueing and denouncing the stern lover of his country, who refuses to submit to his authority, causing their hearts to bleed over his ruinous sway.

He is actually monopolizing the affairs of State, by moving upon the morbid appetites of his Law-makers, is stupefying their consciences and rendering them proof against every moral sensibility.

He is utterly opposing the election of sober men to office, unless they will pledge themselves to use him in the purchase of votes, and if elected will legislate in favor of his bloody deeds. No man can have favor in the sight of his mighty host, unless he is willing to quaff the dregs of drunkenness and act as an efficient agent to carry on his destructive designs; he is guilty of forcing on sober men into his service by contending that his side is most popular, and that it is folly to contend against his long established sovereignty. He is preventing the population of these States by poisoning the infant in the lap of its mother, and by taking the youth of our land captive at his will.

He is erecting multitudes of liquor shops all over our land, and with the price of blood he employs his agents to deal out liquid poison, to make our people drunk, and to eat out our substance, he bids them stand proof against the appeals of injured wives, who frequently urge their footsteps to their door, and with broken hearts and trembling lip they relate the story of their domestic trials, though they tell you it is in your power to make them happy and entreat you to spare their dear husbands by witholding the intoxicating draft, yet "spurn and mock them at your feet."

He is quartering around those haunts of wretchedness, standing upon the alert to repell the influences of moral suasion, to protect the guilty from justice, and the high-handed aggressor from civil retribution. He is taxing us without our consent, the steady and constant march of the unfortunate inebriate from the drunkard's manufactory to our poor-houses, jails, lunatic asylums, and courts of justice, thence on to the Penitentiary or the suspended gallows. All tell us in language not to be misunderstood, that we are taxed without our consent. King Alcohol is now rallying all his forces—combining all his influences to complete his work of death among us. He is constraining our luke-warm citizens, and even many professors of religion, to bear arms in his favor, or at least to loan him their influence in perpetuating his ungodly traffic.

He is exciting domestic insurrections by causing our husbands to abuse, murder, and destroy their own families.

He is fireing the brains of the unfeeling dram-seller's, causing them to persevere in their well known rules of warfare, which is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes, and conditions; and at the same time they are declaring that they are but exercising the liberty for which their fathers struggled and died. We ask a candid world if they are not casting a stigma upon the character and designs of the patriotic heroes of '76? What! did the crimson current so freely flow, and the vital spark so quickly fly, to give us liberty to injure and destroy our fellow beings? My God! what a thought! O! could a Washington speak, as the representation of slumbering millions he would declare in tones of thunder, that they fought for liberty to do right and right alone.

If men have guarantied to them the liberty of doing as they please, abolish all law and let them revel in crime and bloodshed until our sun shall be put out in obscure darkness, and our 'stars and stripes,' shall be given to another nation—how preposterous such a position.

But we have not been wanting in attentions to our opposing foes, we have warned them from time to time of their attempts by Legislation to extend an unwarrented jurisdiction over us, by supporting such measures as are calculated to ruin the objects most dear to us. We have kindly asked them to extend to us and to our brethren, some protection by Law, that would secure our peace and safety; but while they have acknowledged the justice of our claim, they turned from us, and obeyed the voice of their King.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms, but the prayers and supplications of one hundred thousand Indianians have been answered by repeated indifference and injury. A Prince and people whose character is thus marked by every act which defines a tyrant, are unfit to rule over that portion of this great nation who are struggling for freedom from the galling chains of drunkenness. Future ages will scarce believe that the ruinous traffic ever existed for so long a period, under the support and sanction of the people of these United States.

But we will no longer dwell upon these unwelcome truths—we look for a better day, whose sparkling light is already breaking forth into glorious effulgence, and soon promises the universal brilliancy of the brightest sunbeams.

In view of the oppression and injury which we have so long received, under the tyranical influence of the great King of Poison, we must acquiesce in the necessity which impel us to dissention, and regard him as the enemy of our race and of the world.

We therefore, the anxious solicitors of human happiness appeal to the Supreme Judge of the world, for the rectitude of our intentions do in the name and by the authority of the good people of these States, reject and renounce all allegiance and subjection to alcoholic drinks, and utterly dissolve all connection with the traffic, and with those whose object it is to bring us under its influence; and do assert and solemnly publish and declare our right to be heard, our duty to act, and our highest privilege to be regarded. And for the support of these Declarations, with a firm reliance on Divine Providence, we pledge to each other our reputation, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

LIQUORSELLER'S TACTICS.—The Common Council, or in other words, the rumseller's agents in Boston, fearing the vigilance, and energy, and above all, the duty it would be to enforce the new law, and not having the courage to remove him, in an honorable, and in the usual manner, have taken the cowardly, and mean course, to abolish the office of city Marshal, leaving the duty of attending to violators of that law, to their Sheriff, who is supposed, has a more pliant conscience—will have more regard to the votes of the liquor party than to his oath of office—Liquor-sellers die hard.—Rochester Journal.

DARING THEFT.—We learn from the St. Louis Intelligencer, that a passenger on the Dr. Franklin No. 2, was robbed a few nights since, of $50. As the fellow was taking the money from under his pillow, he gave unmistakeable signs of waking, and the thief, with great coolness, proceeded to awaken him rather rudely, and hurriedly informed him that the boat was sinking. The passenger being considerably frightened, rushed from the state room, which gave the thief time to leave with his plunder.

The grave of Aaron Burr, at Princeton, N. J., has been daguerreotyped. Not a stone marks the spot, though Burr is understood to have left a wealthy widow, and his ashes lie surrounded by the impressive monuments of Jonathan Edwards, John Witherspoon, Ashbel Green, and other deceased officers of Preston College, whereof Burr's father was once President.—such is the end of evil greatness.

Mr. Gough has returned from his Western and Canadian tour, and will spend a few of the coming "Dog days," with his family at his pleasant little farm in the Boylston suburbs of Worcester, and there in domestic, social, and agricultural recreations, recover his strength for the further efficient, and constantly solicited efforts in behalf of the cause of sobriety, and the "Maine Law."

$1,000 REWARD.—The above reward will be cheerfully given if it can be clearly and conclusively proven, that there ever was in the United States a dram shop that was a blessing to society, no matter whether licensed or unlicensed; no matter whether kept by Jew or Gentile, Christian, Pagan, or Mahomedan—no matter how well regulated by law.—Organ of Temperance Reform.

While the fire was consuming the distillery at South Boston, yesterday morning, a young wag of about 14 years of age remarked to his neighbor—"That's what I call enforcing the Maine Liquor Law before it's time."—Mass Life Boat.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Glorious Woman.

The Temperance Chart has an account of a spiritual rapping manifestation, which accords most perfectly with our own belief.

It seems that a certain Judge of the Probate Court of Wayne County, got disgracefully drunk at a doggery after the wife had forbidden the keeper to sell him liquor. The seller avowed his determination to sell all that the Judge wanted. After the Judge had found a place of rest in the stable, his wife made a hunt for him at the drunkery. On learning that he had been there and got drunk, she armed herself with a good cudgel and made a total smash of bottles and windows throughout the house, not forgetting a compliment for the head of the rumseller as he attempted to interfere. She then attempted to carry her husband home. Some of his companions interfered, whereupon she beat some of them most soundly and bore her husband home in triumph. The Chart says:

"We do not advocate mob law, but if we had a son, a brother, or a father, whom these blood suckers would entice into their snares, and continue to do so after being warned; before we would see that son, brother, or father, go down to a drunkard's grave, we would, at the risk of life, break the last bottle a grocery contained, and spill the last drop of liquor. If law does not protect us, we must protect ourselves."

Amen again! So say we. What protection had the woman from Government? What was the Government worth to her? Her happiness and rights were all trampled down. She turned like an enraged tigress and boldly assailed the hell where her husband had been degraded, and destroyed its fixtures. She had a right so to do.—If the free men of America will not profided to their keeping, the women themselves will arise indignantly and interests consider them the enemy of their homes. The cheek should burn with shame when woman is driven to seek that protection which government and recreant men, deny her. We hate the mob law. But so help us God, were a rumseller to basely persist in brutalizing one of our family, we would have protection from his murderous clutches, though we had to smite him to the earth, and over his dead body enter and raze his accursed den to the ground. Nature cries out against the worse than heathen iniquity.—Cayuga Chief.

Intercourse between Sexes.

There is too much restraint is social intercourse. We wish our female readers, all of whom, as a matter of course are not only respectable, but intelligent, to adopt some new rules on the subject. Let them make it a principle to extend the hand of friendship to every man who lends his influence to maintain good order in society, who aims to discharge the duties of his station with fidelity, and who is indisputably respectable, not merely in name, but on account of his good conduct of life.—You should not stop to enquire whether he rides in his carriage, driven by a hireling, or whether he drives the jack plane, or draws the thread or tills the earth. There is no evidence of vulgarity so strong to me, as the turned up nose of some purse proud upstart of the dunghill, at the mere offer of a farmer or mechanic to elevate himself into what the world calls good society.—The Plow.

John C. Rives says: I have seen the manuscript writings of most of the great men of this country during the last twenty years, and I may safely say, that no twenty of them could stand the test of the scrutiny of one-half the journeyman printers employed in my office.

A LARGE YIELD.—Twelve and a quarter pounds of butter were made in one week, recently, from the milk of a cow belonging to Mr. Leonard Emmert, of Washington county, Md.

Mrs. Partington asks, very indignantly, if the bills before Congress are not counterfeit, why there should be such difficulty in passing them?

A lady at New Orleans, for disobeying a summons to attend as witness, was ordered by Judge Larne to be imprisoned for one night for contempt of Court.

Another woman was killed in New York last week by a drunken husband.

STATE LIBRARY INDIANAPOLIS

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 11, 1852.

☞ No. 17, of Vol. 2, of "Boston Carpet Bag" has not reached us. The publisher will forward the missing No., as we wish to preserve them.

A Cross.

Should any of our subscribers notice a cross on their papers after the name, they will understand that their former subscription has expired, and that the paper will be stopped, unless renewed. This is the only method we have of ascertaining who wish their papers continued.

☞ We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Indianapolis Commercial Institute, W. M'K. Scott, Principal. This institution is earning a well deserved popularity, and young men desiring to qualify themselves for commercial pursuits should go through a course of studies at this institution.

Liquor at Funerals.

We were aware that it was formerly a very prevalent custom to provide liquors at funerals, but we had supposed that it was long since abandoned. It seems however, that we are mistaken. Among the funeral expenses of the late Henry Clay, we find a large item for liquors. A committee of twenty of the aristocracy of New York city acccompanied the remains to Albany, a distance of 160 miles, and their bill of liquors [illegible] committee accompanied it from Cincinnati to Louisville, and Madam Rumor asserts that their conduct was such as would have disgraced the lowest doggery, and that, too, while in charge of the honored remains of the illustrious dead. These things are disgraceful, and the more so coming from those who are looked up to, as of high standing in society. When will the accursed bowl be driven from the high places of the earth? When will it cease to degrade the funerals of the great men of the earth?

Licenses in New York.

Two thousand four hundred and four Licenses were granted in the city of New York to retail liquors, in the month of May, for which the city received twenty-five thousand one hundred and sixty dollars and twenty-six cents. We venture the assertion that two hundred thousand dollars will not pay the pauper expenses, jail and court fees, and the thousand other expenses caused by thus opening the flood gates of ruin on that great city. O! for the Maine Law.

☞ Shooting at balloons appears to be quite common lately. Mr. Paullin, who made an ascension from this city on the 20th ult., was shot at with a rifle by a man in Hancock county, as he was about making a landing, and Mr. John Wise, who made an ascension from Portsmouth, Ohio, on the 3d, was fired at three times from the Kentucky shore, and one ball struck his balloon. Some people are very ignorant or very careless.

☞ The "Organ of the Temperance Reform" comes to us this week in new type, and much improved in appearance. We are glad to learn that it is well sustained. With such men at its head as Bros. Cary and Clark, it must be popular, and we wish it all success.

☞ THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE MAGAZINE for August is before us, and contains a likeness of A. B. Morean, P. G. W. P. of Illinois. The Magazine is as usual very interesting, aud should be in possession of all temperance men. We will furnish it and one copy of the Chart one year for $2 00.

Temperance in Dupont.

We have received a communication from this place, signed a "Daughter of Temperance," giving the following facts:

There resides in Dupont a very steady old man, who, when he can be kept sober, is a valuable mechanic, but if opportunity offers, will sometimes get most gloriously drunk, and abuse himself and all around him, and spend all his money.

He is in the employ of a gentleman there extensively engaged in business, and one of the most zealous temperance men in the State. The old man, after working very steadily for some time, concluded to have a spree, and as there was no liquor to be had in the place, he determined to go to the headquarters of whisky, the city of Madison, and get a barrel.

Obtaining money from his employer he started, procured his barrel of whiskey and to prevent suspicion and save frieght had it marked Vinegar and shipped it to Dupont. His employer happening to have some goods on the same train discovered the so called Vinegar, and soon ascertained it to be whiskey. Knowing the effect it would produce on the old man, if he was allowed to take it, he determined to prevent it if possible, and offered to purchase it of the old man and pay a profit on it. This the old man refused, saying that he was going to open a grocery and sell it, and started off for a team to haul it home.

The gentleman had now chosen his course and was determined to pursue it, and procuring a hatchet, cut the hoops off the barrel and spilled the "vinegar" on the ground. The old gentleman returned for his liquor, and finding it gone was in a great rage, and made all sorts of threats, but upon reflection concluded to compromise the matter, when the gentlemen above alluded to paid him for his liquor and his trouble, and so the matter rested.

Thus by the firm determination of one man, and the sacrifice he was willing to make for the cause, a man and his family have been saved from degradation, and the community from the curse of a vile grog shop.

Would there were more such men in Indiana, for then would our cause speedily triumph.

A city miss newly installed as the wife of a farmer, was one day called upon by a neighbor of the same profession, who, in the absence of her husband, asked her for the loan of his plough a short time.—"I am sure you would be accommodated," was the reply, "if Mr. Stone was at home. I do not know though where he keeps his plough, but," she added, evidently zealous to serve, "there is the cart in the yard—couldn't you plough with that till Mr. Stone gets back?"—Cayuga Chief.

This is an old story revived, and actually happened in a town in one of the New England States, where we once resided.—The name is given correctly, but the "city miss" is an error—it was the wife of a clergyman, who to help support himself carried on a small farm. We have heard the "neighbor" tell it many a time.

Temperance Camp-Meeting.

In pursuance of a recommendation of the friends of Temperance in this State, a Temperance Camp Meeting will be held at the Sulphur Spring, four miles south-east of Richmond, commencing on the first Thursday in September next, for the purpose of advancing the general interests of the cause of Temperance. Eminent speakers from our own and adjoining States are expected to be present. Every effort will be made to make the proceedings interesting and attractive.

Further notice will be given from time to time, and the press friendly to the cause are requested to notice it.

J. P. BURGESS, Chairman,
Committee of Arrangement.

The building of the Lafayette and Indianapolis railroad so far has cost less perhaps than any other road in the Union, being only, as we are informed, about ten thousand dollars per mile. We learn that the able and energetic President, Hon. A. S. White, has gone to Dayton, Ohio, for the purpose of procuring a passenger car, which is to be put on the road immediately.—Lafayette Journal.

☞ The Louisville Journal says a man of family in that city, has a dog that will not permit him to enter the house, if the least intoxicated.

If some of the "nice young men" of this city owned this dog, they would find it a difficult matter to get home sometimes.

The Chart.

This excellent little paper continues to come to us, well filled with useful and interesting Temperance matter. Bro. Woodward displays good taste in his capacity of editor. We regret, however, to learn from its columns, that since it has been changed from a semi-monthly to a weekly, its prospects are not very flattering—that the G. D. of Indiana, being responsible for its cost of publication, will have a very considerable bill to foot, if the "Sons" do not come up to its rescue. The Chart is a good and efficient Temperance paper, and it will be a burning shame if the Temperance men of that State suffer it to expire of the disease incident to Temperance publications generally—want of patronage. The G. D. of Indiana committed an error, (and we thought so at the time), in changing the paper to a weekly, without changing the price in the same proportion; but that body acted for the good of the cause, and the "Sons" of the State should have magnanimity enough to save the G. D. from the anticipated loss. Let them send in the 8,000 subscribers asked for, and all will be well. We have had considerable experience in the publication of Temperance papers, and know that it is a difficult matter to sustain them. If the strictly Temperance people do not support them, where can the publisher look for support? There are enough Temperance men in Ohio and Indiana to support half a dozen such papers as the Chart and Organ. They all admit that an organ is essentially necessary to the existence of the cause; but when they have a good paper offered to them, why do they not support it? It cannot be on account of poverty; for idleness, intoxication and poverty are indissolubly connected, and vice versa. We do not like to attribute it to stinginess, &c., for the Temperance cause can boast of a large number of liberal souls in its ranks. We wish every friend of the cause in the West would act as if the existence of their paper depended upon him! we would then have the right kind of papers, and the subscribers would not be bored to death with reading the losses of the luckless publishers. We hope our readers will take "time by the forelock," and save the Organ from the very shadow of danger: we are not grumbling about the patronage bestowed upon the Organ; but we wish to create the impression, that the more the Organ is patronized and circulated, the better we can afford to make the paper, and the more good we can accomplish.

We insert below the notice from the Chart, hoping that our [illegible] sister State, (and we have a good many), will see the necessity of doing something immediately for their own paper. They must have an organ, and they cannot do better than to place the Chart upon a permanent footing.

The above is from the Cincinnati Organ, edited by Bro. S. F. Cary. We insert it partly on account of its flattering notice of the editor, but especially on account of the noble appeal to the Temperance men of Indiana to sustain our paper. We have 12,000 Sons of Temperance in the State, and at least 50,000 temperance men, and the idea that they will let a temperance paper die for want of patronage, which can be procured weekly at fifty cents per annum, or less than one cent a week, is to us incredible.

As the Organ remarks, there are temperance men enough in Ohio and Indiana to sustain half a dozen such papers as the Chart and Organ. Will they do it? We shall see.

The Dime Contribution to the Washington Monument.

We mentioned some time since with approval the suggestion made by the southern (Louisiana) Sentinel of placing at the polls, on the occasion of elections, boxes in which voters could deposite contributions to the Washington National Monument. We learn from the Sentinel that at a late election held there the plan was tried, and with a success which attested its practical and patriotic character. The boxes were placed at the polls, with the inscription 'One dime to the memory of Washington,' and, though there were but 667 votes polled in the parish, the contributions amounted to $84, showing that the appeal produced more than the named sum from each voter. We hope that this suggestion will meet with general acceptance at the Presidential election, and that at every poll throughout the wide extent of country which now calls Washington its patria pater, boxes will be furnished into which these contributions may be cast.—Such a course will furnish a result in connection with the election in which both the victor and the vanquished may rejoice, the offering of a national contribution to the memory of him whom all parties can unite to honor.—Baltimore American.

The man who borrowed an umbrella and forgot to return it, is not dead as has been reported. We can swear that he was living last week.—Cayuga Chief.

Temperance Celebration at Rushville.

We learn from a gentleman who was at the temperance celebration at Rushville on the 29th ult., that it was a splendid affair. The day was beautiful, and early in the morning crowds of people began to assemble from the surrounding country, and the cars came up from Shelbyville loaded. About 12 o'clock a procession was formed, consisting of Sons, Cadets, and citizens, more than a mile in length, with two bands of music, who discoursed sweet sounds to the vast multitude as they proceeded to the grove where the stand was erected, and where were collected the beautiful daughters of old Rush.

The exercises were opened by prayer, and singing from an excellent choir, when Bro. S. F. Carey commenced his address.

After speaking for nearly two hours, the meeting was broken up by a shower of rain, and adjourned to a neighboring church where Bro. Cary finished his speech in an hour and a half more. His subject was the Maine Law and nothing else, and he handled it with a masterly hand.

At the close of his speech he called on his audience for a vote, and every man, woman and child in the vast assembly, except three, voted in favor of the law.

He then called for the opposite side, and whisky had no advocate bold enough to show his head. We have received several communications on the subject, but the above embraces the substance of them all. It was a glorious affair, and will long be remembered in Rush.

Economy of the Maine Law.

The Hon. Neal Dow in his final report, says:

'At the commencement of the year the number of open rum shops of all grades in full operation was supposed to be from 300 to 400, as estimated by those who were best able to judge; 300 were the lowest estimate: at present there is not one. The receipts at each of these places per day, at the lowest figure, may be reckoned to average three dollars; this for 300 days, and Sundays were the best days for such places, would give $270,000 per year! It may be thought that this sum is much too large to have been expended annually by the people of this city for intoxicating drinks, but it is believed that a number of grog shops, set down at three hundred, and the sum received by each per day at $3, is within fact. But if we consider the expenditure in this way to have been only $200,000 or about $2,22 per day for each of the 300 shops, the fact will be sufficiently important to arrest the attention of every man who has any regard for the prosperity of the city and the welfare of the citizens.

'The whole of this sum, or of whatever sum may have been expended in this way, was entirely lost to the city: no valuable return was obtained from it. This amount will purchase 40,000 bbls. of flour at $5 each, or about five cords of wood to every family in the city, estimating the number of families at 4000.'

The commitments in eight successful months, from June 1st, 1850 to March 20th, 1851, and June, 1851, to March 1852, to the Alms Houses, were reduced from 252 to 146; to the house of correction for intemperance, from 46 to 10; to the common jail for drunkenness, larceny, &c., from 279 to 135, to the Watch House, from 431 to 280.

Eight Questions.

1. Is it the duty of Government to protect the personal rights of the people?
2. Are the rights and duties of the governor and the governed reciprocal?
3. If the government does not protect the people, has it a right to require and enforce obedience from them?
4. Does a person whose rights are purposely sacrificed by the municipal laws, owe obedience to such laws?
5. Is a person justified in resisting such laws as are passed to sacrifice his inalienable rights?
6. If he is, has he a right to call upon others to assist him, and will they be justified in doing so?
7. Is any law, written or unwritten, constitutional or statutory valid, that commands what is wrong, and prohibits what is right?
8. Are laws, written or unwritten, constitutional or statutory, passed in violation of natural right and justice, of binding force and efficacy?

FORTUNE-TELLING is the easiest thing in the world. When you hear a young lady say that she "hates" a young man, just set it down as a fact that she will be married to him in less than six months. When you hear a "young gent" say that he trusts to luck for a living, you may prophecy that you see before you a youth who will yet see the day when he will go on tick for cold potatoes.

Items of News.

There is no doubt but that the Presidential campaign will be carried on with much spirit.

A Dutchman having recently heard rum called spirits, asked the waiter at an inn, who had given him his grog too much reduced, "why the thunder he did not put more ghosts on the top of his water.

The Boston Post says, that Deacon Grant, at Andover, read to the audience a petition from a widow to the city authorities of Boston, one hundred and seventeen years old, for the liberty of selling rum in Mackerel Lane.

IF YOU would be popular be successful—it is only the winning horse that meets with encouraging shouts, and yet he is the only horse that don't stand in need of it. Now men are just like horses, only more so; if you "go in" therefore go in to win.

CUSTARD WITHOUT EGGS.—One quart of sweet new milk, four table spoonsful of flour, two of sugar. Season it with nutmeg, or cinnamon if you prefer it, and salt to your taste. The milk should be put in a pot over a brisk fire, and when boiling, the flour should be stirred in, after having been mixed with cold milk, to prevent its lumping. As soon as thoroughly scalded, add the sugar, salt and spice. It may be baked either in crust or cups. This is a fine custard and by many preferred to that made with eggs.

MEXICAN WHEAT.—A bunch of twenty-five heads of wheat has been shown to the editor of the Newberry (S. C.) Sentinel, by Gen. Jas. H. Williams, of that town, which the Sentinel says is hard to beat.—The heads are from six to seven inches in length; and the one he shelled yielded sixty-one heavy well-filled grains. The seed from which this sample was grown was brought from Mexico by Gen. Williams, on his return from the late war. It may be sown about the first of December, and it matures about one week later than May wheat.—St. Louis Intelligencer.

A PLANK.—A plank, or as a New Englander is pleased to call it, a board, is quite a common, every day affair, especially in these days of plank roads; but the papers have recently chronicled the arrival of one at Portsmouth, England, which is a plank. It was carried thither on board of a vessel, and said to be the largest plank known to the "oldest inhabitant," or any one else, being two hundred and forty-eight feet long. It is twenty-two inches broad and six inches thick. What a fine thing it would be if some one of our political parties in this country could procure it to make a "platform"—it would allow so much room for dodging.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

DISTRESSING!—John Smith, a resident of New Albany, on returning home from his labors, a few nights since, found his wife intoxicated, and unable to attend to her domestic duties. Supper had been neglected, and feelings of anger were aroused in the breast of the husband.—Words of anger passed between them, which resulted in a personal rencounter, in which a blow from the open hand was inflicted by the husband, which caused his wife to fall upon the floor. The fall caused her death in a short time afterwards.—Smith made no effort to escape—was arrested, examined and recognized in a bond of $500, which was promptly given.—Much sympathy is felt by the citizens generally, in behalf of the unfortunate man.—W. R. Standard.

PRESENT TO AN EDITOR.—The editor of the New York Journal of Commerce has received from Florida, four quarts of mosquitoes, in a glass receiver or jar, marked "Preserved Mosquitoes from Florida."—They are specimens of the mosquitoes, according to a statement in the Journal of Commerce, thrusts their bills through an old boiler, in which an unhappy Yankee had taken refuge to avoid the enormous mosquitoes of the overglades. The story goes, that the Yankee, on finding how matters stood in the morning, went to work and clinched all the bills inside the boiler, when the mosquitoes, taking the alarm, rose with the boiler, and flew off at a thundering rate, in the direction of the Okeefenokee swamp. Nothing is now wanted to substantiate the story but the boiler.

☞ In Rensslaer county, New York, a tavern keeper had abandoned the trafic in alcohol, after having been several years engaged in it. Whenever the subject of his selling liquor was referred to, he was observed to manifest feelings of deep regret and sorrow. A friend one day inquired the cause. 'I will tell you,' said he; and opening his account book said, 'Here are forty-four names of men who have all been customers, most of them for years—thirty-two of them to my certain knowledge now lie in the drunkard's grave! ten of the twelve now remaining confirmed sots! These are the fruits of this dreadful and degrading business.' Who would be willing to engae in it for the paltry wages of a few pence? Can a man follow this traffic and be a Christian?—Temperance Courier.

Correspondence.

For the Temperance Chart.

MR. EDITOR:—I am peculiarly gratified that a gentlemen occupying so exalted a position in the great temperance movements of the day, as the Grand Worthy Patriarch of Indiana, should condescend to explain to a "weak-minded, but kind-hearted" brother like myself, his reasons for breaking off from the great temperance army as at present organized, and enlisting under a new banner—for however "humble in talents and position" a man may be, he likes to be noticed—and this is to me the more gratifying from the fact that it was looked for. But I have a word to say in relation to Mr. Goodwin's article:

He says: "Now the brunt of my offending is expressing a preference for the details of the 'Massachusetts Law' over those of the Maine Law." I beg the gentleman's pardon, I spoke not of "details" but of "principles." The Grand Worthy Patriarch in the circular from which I quoted before, says: "But we do not wish to discuss details," hence I carefully avoided it. The question between us is not one of detail, but of division—the temperance army is composed of different organizations, totally independent of each other, but having a common end in view—namely, the suppression of intemperance. We have a united enemy to fight; we have pecuniary interests, appetite, precedent, long established usage, and strong prejudice, all arrayed in solid phalanx against us—hence the necessity of perfect union and harmony among all who are battling in this glorious cause. To effect this, a State Temperance Convention was called, where all the different organizations were represented, and the result was an agreement unanimously to fight for the total suppression of the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits as a beverage. Under this banner we resolved to fight—this was regarded as but another name for the "Maine Law," and our watchword was the "Maine Law," upon this we were all united until the G. W. P. saw proper to publish his circular, in which he proposes to adopt the "Massachusetts Law," and says, "it tolerates the manufacture under suitable restrictions," and that it is "manifestly right," here we take issue. I do not understand that there is any restrictions in this law, manufacturers are restricted from selling it to be used as a beverage within the State, but this is restricting the traffic, not the manufacture. Every man, as I understand the law, has a right to manufacture what kind of liquor he pleases, and in any quantity he pleases, and for any purposes he pleases, only he must not sell it to be used as a beverage within the State of Massachusetts.

But, Mr. Goodwin seems to think his position identical with the position of the Temperance Convention last winter. If so, this is no controversy between us, but doubtless owing to my "weak-mindedness." I do not so understand his position. I understand the "Massachusetts Law" to prohibit the sale of ardent spirits as a beverage, but that there is no prohibition to the manufacture at all—while the position of the Temperance Convention was in opposition not only to the sale but the manufacture also. Is there no difference here? if there is not, I do not understand the meaning of language. Mr. Goodwin is "prepared to show that it is as 'manifestly right' to manufacture whisky for innocent purposes, as it is to manufacture meal and flour." I am glad he is thus prepared, for there may possibly be some "one-idea'd fanatic" who is unwilling to concede this point, and I rejoice that the proof is ready. I will endeavor to hold myself in readiness to prove, that in this country at least, a man who has no horse to ride has a "manifest right" to walk, a position which I consider about as likely to be disputed as the one Mr. Goodwin is prepared to defend.—But I am not disposed to discuss this question at length. The "Massachusetts Law" may be the best, and yet Mr. Goodwin's course wrong. Either of these laws will be a manifest improvement in Indiana, but in order to get either we must be united. Experience shows that politicians are afraid to teach either—that neither can be obtained until the force of public sentiment compels our Legislature to enact it. Every subterfuge will be resorted to, for the purpose of evading responsibility, and division among temperance men, as to the kind of law desired, will prove a fruitful field for contention in the Legislature, and a legitimate apology for doing nothing. In this division, I find Grand Worthy Patriarch Goodwin on one side, and the State Temperance Convention, and indeed the whole temperance army of the State on the other.

There appears to be a little inconsistency in Mr. Goodwin's statements, which he will doubtless explain: he says he never had "unbounded confidence in the wisdom of Yankees," and yet the only reason he gives for preferring the "Massachusetts Law," is that Neal Dow, Wm. R. Stacy, Wilson, &c., all "true blue" yankees, are in favor of it.

Now these are all prominent temperance men, and I presume Sons of Temperance, all prominent individuals—but because they have expressed an opinion in favor of the "Massachusetts Law" to Mr. Goodwin, and he has adopted their views, does he suppose that it necessarily follows, that all the temperance men in this State will abandon their old colors, and enlist under this new banner at once, and without any other reason than that Mr. Goodwin has done so before them? And if a part only advocate the "Massachusetts Law," and the others the "Maine Law," neither will be obtained; hence the danger from the course Mr. Goodwin is pursuing. Let us perseveringly adhere to the resolves of our Convention, "cry aloud and spare not" in favor of the essential features of the "Maine Law," let this continue to be our watchword, leaving the detail of the law to be settled by the Legislature in accordance with the resolution of the Temperance Convention. The essential features are what we are contending for, namely, the suppression of the manufacture and sale of liquor as a beverage, and providing for its seizure, confiscation, and destruction, when kept for sale contrary to law—with such other provision as will ensure a faithful execution of law. This I understand is what is meant by the "Maine Law," it is what all understand by it. I hope if Mr. Goodwin persists in his advoeacy of the "Massachusetts Law," he will be permitted to constitute a temperance army by himself. I am aware he is a perfect host either with the pen or on the rostrum, but at the ballot box he is nothing more than common. The "weakest minded" man in the State has as much power as he has.

The terms "weak-minded," "weakest brethren," "one-idea-ed," "fanatic," &c., do very well to embellish an article or round a period, but they contain very little argument, and require no reply. If Mr. Goodwin's taste induces him to use them, I have not the least objection, but I do object to his attempting to induce the Sons of Temperance to forsake their old comrades, and leave us to fight alone. We need their help, and all we ask is that they continue to stand where they have heretofore stood, and not follow off Mr. Goodwin in chase of the "Massachusetts law," or anything else but the "Maine law."

For the Temperance Chart.

REDDINGTON, July 12th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I take this method of giving you a short history of the affairs of Reddington Division, No. 370. There has been but twenty-seven initiated into this Division since it was organized, (which was about 16 months ago,) twenty-two of whom are now members in good standing, ready and willing to stand by the cause of temperance, both in the Division, and out, and unless I am much mistaken will remain so, "to the end of life." The reason I am so certain of the fact, is, they did not join for popularity, but because they were satisfied that King Alcohol was a tyrant, that he had abused the people of this community and had not yet yielded his sceptre; and would never do so until men that were opposed to his administration, should combine to drive him and his mighty power from our midst; and thank God that by help, we have been the means of doing a large amount of good; but still we are not done, and never will be as long as there is a "dog left to move his tongue."

We are yet cursed with a doggery in our pleasant little village, but I think that as soon as the many indictments that may be brought against the keeper are attended to, he will die the death of several of his predecessors. But this is not our only opposition; we are opposed by men that profess to be temperance men, who say, that secret societies are not only anti-scriptural but dangerous to our government; to such trash as that we say, we have no secret society, we meet regular once every week, and if it is so dangerous to governments, why not be patriotic enough, to give two dollars to find it out, and publish it to the world. "O! consistency where art thou fled." Another opposition we have, which is an apostate or two—they say Sons of Temperance will not stand to their laws, will not pay benefits, which they know by experience, having been sick within two months after joining a Division, and got nothing but the kind care and attention of the brotherhood. But the larger portion of community say "God speed, let the Sons of Temperance be the officers of the noble ship, and we will be the gallant crew; and we will finally push our gallant and glorious bark into that haven of tee-totalism, and make that haven here at home;" which we are willing to agree to, if they will only wood when we want it.

"The Ladies, God bless them," are in our favor; by the by, I will quote a remark that was made by one in this community on the 3d inst. She had been in town on that day to our celebration, (which by the way was nicely performed,) and noticed the difference in the two companies, viz: temperance men and whiskeyites. She said it was the prettiest celebration she was ever at, and as far as she was concerned, that never while she lived would she marry any man that was not a genuine Son of Temperance. Let all others say: "this shall be our aim."

When I commenced this epistle I did not intend to speak of half as many different things as I have, I intended only to give a history of the rise and progress of this Division, but have got off from the track considerably. I will now return to the Division. From my former statement, you will perceive that we have all the members that we have initiated except five, four of whom were expelled, two for violating Art. 2., and two for contempt to the Division, and one handed in his resignation, pleading as his excuse, that it was not in his power to let the "critter" entirely alone, paid up his dues and quit honorably. At the present time we are in a more prosperous condition than at any other time since we were organized, for we are not only adding to our numbers weekly, such as shall be saved; but we are causing the blood-hounds to growl, whine, and snarl unmercifully, and are determined to go ahead, increase in numbers, strength, and good works, until there is not a "dog left to move his tongue."

I rejoice that the Chart is changed to a weekly paper, as I am certain it will get at least double the amount of subscribers that it formerly had; and I think it is a paper that should be in every family, whether they are Sons, Washingtonians, moderate dram-drinkers, or drunkards.—More anon. Yours, in L. P. & F.

CONSISTENCY.

For the Temperance Chart.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, July 23th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—As an humble tribute for the privilege of reading your excellent paper during the past year, please find enclosed $5.50 and the names of eleven new subscribers.

How could we hope for a successful voyage across the great ocean of life, unaccompanied by so indispensable an instrument as the Chart. Thousands who have been carried hither and thither, on the turbulent waters of intemperance; overwhelmed by the dark waves of debauch, till nothing but delirium and death stares them in the face; may yet with the Chart in one hand, and the compass of stern integrity in the other, not only escape the drunkard's doom upon the fatal rocks of dissipation; but keeping steadily in view our pledge as the Pole Star of Truth; wafted by the gentle breeze of Love, Purity, and Fidelity: they may yet enter that haven of virtue, honor, and sobriety, upon whose placid bosom so many are already basking in the sunbeams of prosperity and happiness.

Send on your papers then, and may they be scattered all over this land, like "leaves that are for the healing of the nations." In our own town the cause moves steadily onward. Of the 800 names added to the pledge last fall, but few have violated their obligations, and many more have been added since. It is true our Legislature have left us without a law on the subject of the liquor traffic; thus virtually saying to the liquor sellers of our State—go on, and sell with impunity: it is true your calling is more to be deprecated, than that of the thief and the highwayman; we are aware that in the train of your business follow tears, and sighs, and groans, and woes unutterable! It is true we have been appealed to by all that is noble, sacred, or lovely, to interpose the strong arm of the law against you, and in behalf of bleeding humanity. It must also be admitted that many of us were pledged to our constituents previous to the election that we would abide by the will of the people, as expressed through these petitions; but gentlemen, upon our arrival at the great Metropolis of the State, and on a more intimate acquaintance with some of you, and finding that though Rumsellers "you are yet MEN," and that you are not only our brethren, but "men of like passions with ourselves;" why should we so far forget the principles of the great brother-hood, as to institute a law against the very men without whose agency and influence, many of us never could have filled these posts of honor and emolument. No, gentlemen Rumsellers, it is not true that the great heart of Philanthropy in the State Legislature lies congealed (as some say) beneath the icebergs of ambition and moral cowardice: but recognizing the great principles of reciprocity; we scorn the doctrine of returning evil for good, especially as we may need your co-operation again in the contest of another election. Go on then Rumsellers with your work of death and destruction, not a legal straw shall be laid in your way, only see that your business is rendered subservient to the interests of that party to whom it owes its respectability and support. With such legislators, impelled by such motives, our prospect is gloomy in the extreme. But short sighted indeed, must be that man's policy, who holds himself responsible to no higher tribunal, than that of a corpse of Bachanalean Rumsellers, forgetting that the prayers of 150,000 of Indiana's freemen were by him rejected, all of which must prove swift witnesses against him at a future election. I am not an advocate of "women's rights" in all the modern sense of that term, but if the "lords of creation" would extend to their fair sisters, the elective franchise, even though it were with reference to this question alone, a voice would be heard through the ballot-box, that would neither be misunderstood nor unheeded.

Your Sister in the great work of reform,

BARTHOLOMEW COUNTY, July 26th, 1852.

DEAR CHART:—It has been reported by some of our enemies that Bartholmew Division, No. 146, was gone down, dead, and burried. I tell you Mr. Editor, it is a base falsehood, (no thanks to our enemies,) and we intend to live on for the cause of Temperance. It is true that we lost a large number of members, who had become tired of the temperance cause, and no doubt some good temperance men, who went with the crowd; but we are looking up again, new members are coming in, and some of the old ones are coming back, and we intend to do good service in the temperance cause yet. Our Division is unanimous for the election of good temperance men, be their politics what they may, and we will vote for no other. Now Mr. Editor, I will not detain you or your readers longer, but remain,

Yours in L., P., and F.

THOMAS LAWTON.

Significant.

The Baltimore correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, writing under the date of June 4th, says, that those wishing Gen. Houston to be the democratic nominee for President, claimed for him the support of all temperance men, because he favored the Maine Liquor Law. Is not this a sign of the times? Does it not show that the present Temperance movement is regarded by the people at large as possessing weight and character? Does not the fact, that a portion of the leading men of our nation chosen as delegates to a National Convention to select a candidate for the chief Magistracy, in deliberate conclave, claim support for their favorite not simply because he is a temperance man, but because he favors the Maine Liquor Law. Does not this, we ask, show that the influence of Temperance is not slight; that we are advocating no flimsy or merely temporary reform?—Chrystal Fount.

FIDELITY.—Never forsake a friend.—When enemies gather thick around him—when sickness fall heavily upon him—when the world is dark and cheerless, this is the time to try thy friendship. They who turn from the scene of distress, or offer reason why they should be excused from extending their sympathy and aid, betray their hypocrisy, and prove that selfish motives only prompt and move them. If you have a friend who loves you—who has studied your interest and happiness—defend you when persecuted and troubled, be sure to sustain him in adversity. Let him feel that his kindness is appreciated, and that his friendship was not bestowed upon you in vain. Real fidelity may be rare—but it exists—in the heart. Who has not seen and felt its power? They only deny its wealth and power who have never loved a friend, or labored to make a friend happy. The good and the kind, the affectionate and the virtuous, see and feel this heavenly principle, for heavenly it is; it is fruit gathered from a sacred germ implanted by heaven in man's bosom.

ASKING TOO MUCH.—A young couple were sitting together in a romantic spot, with birds and flowers about them, when the following ensued—

"My dear, if the sacrifice of my life would please thee, gladly would I lay it all at thy feet."

"Oh, sir, you're too kind! But it just reminds me that I wish you'd stop using tabacco."

"Can't think of it. It's a habit to which I am wedded."

"Very well sir, since this is the way you lay down your life for me, and as you are already wedded to tobacco, I'll take good care that you are never wedded to me, as it would be bigamy."

A LATE traveler in California says they have got a style of Kangaroo in that interesting country which quite takes down those of New Holland. He has seen them leap, he says, over a quarter of a mile at a single bound. This story either stretches Truth or the Kangaroos, and we can't tell which. Who'll aid us?

Philosophers say that "figures cannot lie."

This only shows that philosophy is but little acquainted with the uses to which the women of the present day put cotton batting and coffee-bags, by which means human 'figures' are made to lie most confoundedly. At least so says thatsour old bachelor, Digby.

Machinery has reached a great state of perfection. We saw some burnt peas put into the hopper of a coffee mill the other day, and in less than two minutes, it was occupying a place in a grocery window, labelled, 'Old Government Java.'

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

TEMPERANCE CHART,

THE OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE GRAND DIVISION, S. OF T. OF INDIANA.

VOLUME II.

Several attempts have been made by the Grand Division of this State to establish a permanent temperance paper in this State, which from various causes have heretofore failed. In the spring of 1851, the Grand Division resolved to take the paper under its own patronage, and the plan has succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations. The paper is now permanently established, and will after the commencement of the 2d volume, be published weekly. It will continue to advocate the cause of temperance in its broadest sense, embracing all the various organizations having for their object the entire destruction of the liquor traffic.

TERMS:

The CHART will be published weekly, on good paper, and new type, on the following terms:

Single subscribers, 75 cents per year.

Clubs of ten or more to one post office, 50 cents per year.

Payable in all cases in advance.

This is the cheapest Temperance paper in the world! It will be published by Bro. JOHN H. OHR, with whom the Grand Division has made a contract, and edited as heretofore by the Grand Scribe. A limited number of advertisements will be inserted, at the usual rates.

All letters relating to the paper, and all communications, should be addressed, post paid, to C. WOODWARD, G. S., Indianapolis, Ind.

All D. G. W. P.'s, and W. P.'s are, by a resolution of the Grand Division, authorized agents of the Chart.

Remittances can be sent through the postmasters free of postage.

CHARLES WOODWARD, Indianapolis, Ind., General Agent for the State of Indiana.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

AND THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

WITH detailed notices of the Expedition in search of the missing vessels under Sir John Franklin; by P. L. Simmonds. To which is added an account of the American Expedition, under the patronage of Henry Grinnell, Esq., with an introduction to the American Expedition, by John C. Lord, D. D., 400 pages, price $1,25 To contain a map of the Arctic Region and plates illustrating the work.

"Where for relentless months continued night,
Holds, o'er the glittering waste, her starry light."

"The natives of America and England have before met upon the Ocean, but they met for deadly strife. Now, too, they met for strife, equally determined, but not with each other. They met in the holy cause of benevolence and human spmpathy, to battle with the elements beneath the Arctic Circle; and the chivalric heroism which the few stout hearts of the two nations displayed in that conflict redounds a thousand fold more to the glory of the actors, their governments and the race, than if four score ships and ten thousand armed men had fought for the mastery of each other upon the broad ocean, and battered hulks and warred corpses had gone down to the coral caves of the sea, a dreadful offering to the demon of Discord, in which event troops of widows and orphan children would have sent up a cry of wail. Now the heroes advanced manfully to rescue husbands and fathers, to restore them to their wives and children."

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Of all the numerous medicines extant, (and some of them valuable) for the cure of pulmonary complaints, nothing has ever been found which could compare in its effects with this Preparation. Others cure sometimes, but at all times and in all diseases of the lungs and throat where medicine can give relief, this will do it. It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe in accordance with the directions. We do not advertise for the information of those who have tried it but those who have not. Families that have known its value will not be without it, and by its timely use, they are secure from the dangerous consequences of Coughs and Colds which neglected, ripen into fatal consumption.

The Diploma of the Massachusetts Institute was awarded to this preparation by the Board of Judges in September, 1847; also, the Medals of the three great institutes of Art, in this country; also the Diploma of the Ohio Institute at Cincinnati, has been given to the CHERRY PECTORAL, by their Government in consideration of its extraordinaty excellence and usefulness in curing affections of the Lungs and Throat.

Read the following opinion founded on the long experience of the eminent Physician of the Port and City of

ST. JOHNS, May 8, 1851.

Dr. J. C. Ayer:—Five years trial of your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, has proven what I foresaw from its composition, must be true, that it eradicates and cures the colds and coughs to which we, in this section are peculiarly liable.

I think its equal has not yet been discovered, nor do I know how a better remedy can be made for the distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

J. J. BURTON, D., F. R. S.

See what it has done on a wasted constitution, not only in the following cases, but a thousand more:

SUNBURY, Jan. 24th, 1851.

Dr. Ayer:—In the month of July, I was attacked by a violent diarrhœa in the mines of California. I returned to San Francisco. My diarrhœa ceased, but was followed by a severe cough—and much soreness I finally started for home, but received no benefit from the voyage. My cough continued to grow worse, and when I arrived in New York, I was at once marked by my acquaintancs as a victim of consumption. I must confess that I saw no sufficient reason to doubt what my friends all believed. At this time I commenced taking your truly invaluable medicine with little expectation of deriving any benefit from its use You would not receive these lines did I not regard it my duty to state to the afflicted, through you, that my health, in the space of eight months, is fully restored. I attribute it to the use of your Cherry Pectoral

Yours truly, WILLIAM W. SMITH.

WASHINGTON, Pa.. April 12, 1848.

Dear Sir:—Feeling that I have been spared from a premature grave, through your instrumentality by the providence of God, I will take the liberty to express to you my gratitude.

A Cough and the alarming symptons of Consumption had reduced me too low to leave me anything like hope, when my physician brought me a bottle of your "Pectoral." It seemed to afford immediate relief, and now in a few weeks time has restored me to sound health.

If it will do for others what it has for me, you are certainly one of the benefactors of mankind.

Sincerely wishing you every blessing, I am
Very respectfully yours,
JOHN J. CLARK,
Rector of St. Peter's Church.

With such assurance and from such men, no stronger proof can be adduced unless it be from its effects upon trial.

POETRY.

From the Dublin Magazine.

The Old Oak Tree.

I would I were a child again,
  As when I sported free
Upon the greensward through the glen,
  Beneath the old oak tree.
My father's calm and thoughtful brow
  In memory still I see;
My father's smile shines on me now,
  Beneath the old oak tree.

The sunshine falls as warm and bright,
  As freshly breathes the air;
The stream still dances down as light,
  The flowers still bloom as fair.
Where'er my tearful eyes may range,
  Familiar spots I see;
The scenes I loved seem slow to change
  Around the old oak tree.

But gone are all those cherished forms
  I gazed on when a child,
Like autum's leaves when early storms
  Sweep through the woodlands wild,
And all along within the glen,
  I linger musingly,
And wish I were a child again
  Beneath the old oak tree.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Birthday of Freedom.

WHEN the colonies of North America boldly asserted their inherent and intrinsic right to form one of the great family of nations, the day became a sacred one. It began a new era in the very history of mankind; no event comparable has happened since the period when savages first united in tribes and submitted to laws and a form of government. It was more significant than the rise of a new people, it realized a novel principle: that FOURTH OF JULY 1776 is not even the exclusive property of Americans as the natal day of the nation—it belongs to the race, for it was the GENESIS of political Freedom. Up to that time the generations of men had lived under the usurpations of those whom the various chances of force and fraud, falsely and blasphemously deified, had made their rulers. Like blind men, they were led to the mill and their heroic strength put to base and trivial uses by these their tyrants. But the Declaration of American Independence was the utterance of the weightiest precedent to be found in the laws of man—that self-goverment is his indefeasible right, and that empires, kingdoms, and republics are based on the consent of the governed alone. This day marks just such a period in the political world as that in the physical, when Deity said, "Let there be light." Like the dawn, it separates the elements—freedom from tyranny, truth from error, light from darkness. The intellect cannot imagine in outline the results to spring from that germ of active, breathing thought, then planted; the century succeeding rolls along, just beginning its last quarter, but those seventy-six years measure more in the development of humanity, than all the centuries since the Goths toppled into ruins the fabric of the Roman empire. The rapid discoveries in the science of nature may be considered in some respects as accidental, but the general diffusion among men of a knowledge of their rights, is due directly to the action of the American Congress. We may not presage all the changes and revolutions to spring from the example of the United States, any more than we can tell of the storms that are born from the beams of the sun; but we do know that as life and fertility flow from that orb, so liberty and happiness must descend to the nations from the principles of the American sages. As yet, perhaps, we have witnessed only storms as far as other nations are concerned, but a long period of seed-time and harvest must follow the Equinoctials in the great political year of the world; even America is just in the spring-tide. If freedom is indeed a reality and the very life of the soul; then was the Declaration of Independence an august and sublime act, worthy to be kept in eternal remembrance. Let it be hallowed, for it has placed on the brow of humanity a circle of sovereignty of which a regal crown is but a vain and tinsel counterfeit.

As yet, however, the blessings of a republican form of government are limited to the land of Washington. There are skeptics who think that this state of things will last, and that republicanism cannot be naturalized elsewhere. We repudiate this cold-blooded and arrogant infidelity in the worth of universal humanity; but even if it were true, the progress and triumphs of the United States, if worth nothing as examples, are, in themselves, marvellous.—Three-quarters of a century, and what a change!—the three millions have become twenty-three millions; a territory stretching over half the continent, and, uniting the two great oceans, supplies multitudinous sources of wealth; and a navigation rapidly growing and overtopping its only rival, is the instrument of the national commerce. If liberty is not adapted for human nature generally, it is at all events admirably suited for our use as a nation. It has made us great and strong; it has covered the land with railroads and the sea with ships beyond all competition with other nations; when we take into account the time within which all this has been accomplished. Clouds may cover the future of other nations, but the stars of these States give surer tokens whereon to base calculations of their coming prosperity and vastness. Such are the two aspect in which the birthday of American freedom may be viewed, as the source of national greatness and of happiness to the world, as far as just and equitable forms of government can effect that end. Patriotism and philanthropy, those kindred but long-divided sentiments, are equally interested in the observance of that which, to both, is the most important event in national history. How may the memory of the day be best preserved, in order that men may always have a rallying point and a war-cry against oppression, that they may bear with them a weapon to defend their liberties, and a monitor against the insidious attacks of ambition and the more fatal treasons of luxury and neglect? There is a fitting way to keep the anniversary of American Independence, and there is one incongruous and improper, nay, degrading, contemptuous, and desecrating. This is in reality no child's play, though children join very properly in the chorus of joy and exultation it annually calls forth.—There is a deep wisdom in the common consent wherewith the nation universally, and of their own free will, mark the Fourth of July from the other days of the year. There is a serious use in it far transcending the idea of an annual frolic. Freedom and love of country requires its celebration. The nation in its infancy devoted seven long years of toil and battle to the achievement and accomplishment of that independence, to which they and their representatives pledged "lives, fortunes, and sacred honor," by the Declaration. Thousands of those lives went up from the field of glory, or were wasted away in prisons or by the horrors of the long war: the ills of poverty were cheerfully undergone, but the honor of the new States came out bright after the struggle and the storm. Jollity and idleness are scarcely consonant with these heroic memories of death, suffering, and victory; are then sensuality, madness, baseness, or that essence of all degradations, DRUNKENNESS, the flowers to be laid on the green graves of our fathers, and to be entwined with the laurels of WASHINGTON? Forbid it, shame! forbid it, common sense! forbid it, holy Freedom! The fate of the drunken sons of Aaron, as we learn from the sacred historian, was to be consumed by their own rejected and profaning fires: similar punishment, if not so speedy, must be the lot of those who turn liberty into licentiousness, and celebrate a festival of heroism by a drunken orgie.—Such mistakes have before now been made and atoned for; and if the United States, as a people, and in their masses, should thus err, they would wake and find their charters and constitutions seared by fire and crumbling into ashes. We hope the tendency of the popular mind is in a different direction. The stars move under influences more conservative of freedom.—Four of them have already, by public legislation, prevented the profanation of the great political Sabbath of the year, from the exhibition of a drunken citizen reeling over the land for which the men of '76 fought and died. We cannot afford to make false steps as a nation; these mistakes will be perpetuated unless we manfully fight them down, pledging our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor against their coutinuance. The ages are crowding upon us, the ages we must help shape.—One half of the twenty-three millions of souls in the Republic are children in the eyes of the law; in a few years they will come forward and take active positions for the weal or woe of the country, and on us rests the momentous decision. Not long before these future men and women will become the thinkers and workers, the writers and legislators of the land. Shall we demoralize them by our example? Shall the festival of freedom, the nation's birthday, be turned into a debauch before their young eyes? Shall they be taught either to despise republicanism which endures such practices, or join in the outrage and run the risk of individual ruin, by making the annual frolic run through the year?—We must remember that a people, though a grand spectacle like the ocean, reflects the character of the individuals which make it up. An indolent, ignorant, vicious race cannot become by any magic short of personal reformation, a rich, powerful, and free nation. Our duty to our country requires us to be virtuous; it is nothing but false patriotism vanity, and ambition, that prompt a bad man to serve the land of his birth. Of all the vices, intemperance appears to be most destructive and sapping to a country; it burns out its strength, destroys its laborers, withers its intellect, wastes its wealth, undermines its liberties. There was a beautiful truth which promted the movers in the Reform which began at Baltimore in 1840, to call themselves WASHINGTONIANS. They felt that their self-reform was the best service they could render their country; the closest imitation they could give of the patriotic devotion of the Father of the Republic. And if on any day we are bound in honor to show our obedience to law and good order, and our freedom from mean and degrading practices as men, it is on the day which made us politically free.

We may safely consider it as settled by the general acquiescence that the day is to be commemorated, and the question recurs, How can this be done most impressively, intelligently, and worthily? Let it then be marked by civic and military pomps and parades, to exhibit the material wealth independence has given us, and the might which knows no fear of foreign force. Martial music and the sound of cannon may properly echo along the hills and rivers of the land, for the God of battles smiled on the appeal made to him by our forefathers. The brave and the vigilant are alone worthy of liberty; and while fraud and injustice exist as rampantly as they still do among some nations, the United States must be prepared to repel force by force. The orator and the poet can find no themes more worthy of their art than the heroism of the Revolution; their words will find willing ears, and the thrilling sentences will live long in the hearts where they fall. This is the true wine of the soul, that gives it inspiration and nobility, that in future emergencies, like those of the Revolution, will awaken Americans to rival the deeds of that glorious epoch. Then let the eloquent words of the Bible of Freedom, the Declaration of Independence, be read until it becomes as familiar in our ears as household words.—They can never become too familiar; they are full of the highest and most truthful principles of political wisdom; they can never become stale and unprofitable or useless, while the sceptre of government rests in the hands of the people; the sentiments of the Declaration must be in their heads and hearts. Then let all thank God for the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and resolve to perform the duties connected with that liberty to their God, their country, and their conscience.

We ask no starched, formal observance of the day; with all this seriousness there can be infused enjoyment and pleasure to satisfy any reasonable man. He who employs the Sabbath of religion or that of freedom merely as a day of amusement or recreation, makes a very mean use of it; it was meant for something far better.—The man who has no sentiments and no associations awakened by such days, is either coldly selfish, or unimaginative as a clod. Let him alone in his impassiveness, which is, after all, a species of mental torpor. But of all ways of spending the day, we protest turning it into a Saturnalia of drunkenness. It is beneath the dignity of men: the slaves in ancient Rome had such a holiday, but it was, with all its license, the badge of servitude. How incongruous to boast of political independence, equal rights, republicanism, and that manhood which looks up, with no intervening mastery, to the very throne of God, and then sink into a beast, become a fool, and mad, and dance antics in the fumes of a filthy, sensual, degrading intemperance!—The freeman, forsooth, proves his patent by displaying his serfdom to intoxicating drinks; and on the anniversary of liberty, or the day of election, he perversely reels around to make his intelligence and virtue ocularly evident.

The Sons of Temperance have duties, too; they will not desecrate the day, it is true, but they are bound to bring all the force of public opinion to bear in celebrating it rationally and temperately, which is patriotically also. And the best way is to unite in effort to bring about the passage of laws similar to that in Maine, which will effectually free society from those licensed scourges and pest-shops where the "Glorious Fourth" has been most often profaned, and the memories of the Revolution degraded by the unworthy conduct of American citizens. Rum is incompatible with republicanism, more so even than a standing army. We want these forts and strongholds of demoniac possession levelled—we want humanity disenthralled. Four States can celebrate, without the cruel annoyance of drunkenness, the anniversary of Freedom. Let each son vow on the altar to lend all his energies as a man and a citizen to make his own State free of the curse of SELLING RUM; abolish trading in the lives, the happiness, and the souls of his neighbors and fellow-citizens. Then, indeed, may he celebrate the Sabbath of peace and justice, the blissful twins of Freedom. Then our order may exult in having done an act, the sweet savor of which will ascend and gladden the spirits of the departed sages and patriots of the Revolution. The time must come, for the wheels of Reform do not roll backward, and we see a peculiar fitness in urging it forward in connection with the day of political enfranchisement. Temperance and republicanism are cognate, and have been so considered by the wisest statesmen of our country. At a meeting of the Congressional Temperance Society held in Washington in 1834, Felix Grundy, then Senator from Tennessee, and the bosom friend of President Jackson, offered the following resolution:

"That the practice of not using ardent spirits at the celebration of the 4th of July, the great day of American liberty, is truly REPUBLICAN, and tends to prevent that corruption of public morals which is the deadliest foe to the prosperity of OUR COUNTRY."

Can there be any longer a doubt as to the propriety of our course? Close the GROG-SHOPS; ardent spirits are ANTI-REPUBLICAN; their use is a "CORRUPTION of PUBLIC MORALS, and the deadliest foe to the prosperity of our country." Oh that on this coming Fourth "the deadliest foe to the prosperity of our darling country" was sealed like Satan for a thousand years, that its ravages, more murderous, more devastating, more cruel than British bayonet or British cannon, might be stayed—that the tears of the widow, the mother, and the orphan might be wiped away, for the slain by the demon of Intemperance! Sons of Temperance! for the sake of your country, deliver her from her DEADLIEST FOE: the means, the Maine Law.—American Temperance Magazine.

A STOREKEEPER purchased of an Irish woman a quantity of butter, the lumps of which, intended for pounds, he 'weighed in the balance and found wanting. 'Shure it's your own fault, if they are light,' said Biddy, in reply to the complaint of the buyer, it's your own fault, sir, for wasn't it a pound o' soap I bought here mesilf, that I had in the other end of the scales when I weighed 'em?' the store keeper had nothing more to say on the subject.

They are Gone.

We never wish to tread rudely over the ashes of the dead. Sacred to us are the slumbers of the narrow dwelling beneath the sod. We venerate each blade, and leaf and flower. Even the green mould reads us a lesson as it gathers upon the marble beneath the rank and matted grass; and in silence we thread the avenues between the grassy mounds where the sleepers are at rest.

When good men die, their deeds are pointed to as way-marks to guide succeeding pilgrims. The memory of their lives, like the fading light of the day, lingers upon their graves like a record of beauty. On the other hand the evil that men do, lives after them as well; and we point to their errors and unprofitable end, as beacon lights upon a dangerous shore.

God's righteous retributions have ever followed the traffic in rum. The flame which men kindle around the hearts and homes of their neighbors, sweeps back on the breath of retributive Providence, and destroys the hand which feeds it. Drunkard makers in time become drunkards.—The tempter is swept away upon the tide which he has turned into the bosom of another. The hand which has clutched the life-blood of others, in turn becomes that of a suicide, and claims immolation upon the same altar. Such has been the history of the traffic. The rum-sellers of the past have furnished their full share of the ranks of the drunkard's army. Their property in turn is wasted. They go down to the drunkard's grave. God's deep and fearful judgments are written ever against the business he has pronounced accursed.

While upon the stand the other day, and dwelling for a moment upon this point, we asked a question, and its dull echoes came back from the grave, damp with the blight of death. Were are the WATSONS?—Where? The name is familiar to the people of this county. Their talent for business, usefulness and honor was well known. They might have honored any honorable position, and the world been the better for their living. Where are they? The father plunged headlong into a well. One of the sons died of mania a potu, after rending his own flesh with his teeth, and frothing in fiend-like madness. Another brother soon followed. But a few days since, the last one went down in darkness to his grave, the green turf closing between him and those who robbed and killed him by inches. There is a place of rest for the bruised body of the drunkard where the rumseller can curse him no longer—the rest of death! Tere is an asylum—that of the grave! We stand sadly over the ashes of the Watson family—where is entomed a wealth of intellect debased and destroyed—a world of high hopes and noble aspiration drowned in the cup—and sorrowfully ask, who are their slayers? The genius of Intemperance slowly uncoils her slimy folds from the damp grass, and as her coronet of hydra crests o'erleaps the words which affection has chizzled in the marble, the exultant hiss breathes out with the deadly breath, "They made rum—sold it—drank it—died!"

We may die on the scaffold a red handed murderer. Even there we would thank God if no rum had ever passed from our hand to the lips of a fellow creature.—Better rot on the gibbet than in the grave of a rumseller.—Cayuga Chief.

THE OLD TRAP.—Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who bids fair to become as famous for his wit as for his eloquence, makes the following shrewd reply to those disinterested people who ask temperance men why they don't enforce the old laws against rum-selling instead of framing new ones, like that of Maine. The reader can judge whether he drives the nail home and clinches it:

"It is said, why don't you execute the present laws? This puts me in mind of an old rat, who sleek and fat, comes out of his hole, and sees a new trap. He walks around it, peeps into it, nibbles at it, and finds that it is not like the old one—it is all wire and there is no getting out of it. So he goes to the keeper of the house and says: "Why are you not satisfied with the old trap with the wooden bottom, thro' which I have crawled forty times?"—So with the old liquor rats; they can crawl almost through any thing, but they don't like the Maine Law. These men can tell what the law means. The outcry that they now make leads me to suspect that they smell fire. I never was so much in favor of the law as when I found out how the rum-sellers opposed it."

Bro. Parsley is the authorized Agent for the Chart. We hope our brethren will see the necessity of subscribing liberally for this paper.

Our Camp Meeting.

We call the attention of our readers once more to our Temperance Mass Meeting to be held in this City, Sept. 9th, 10th, and 11th.

Bros. Olds and Carey of Ohio, and Julian and others of this State, will be here, and many others probably from whom we have not heard. All the Railroads leading into the city will carry passengers to and from the meeting, at one half the usual fare. We hope to see a large crowd.

Life Insurance.

Our readers will notice by an advertisement on our last page that we are General Agent for the State of Indiana, of the American Life and Health Insurance Company of Philadelphia.

We wish to establish a sub-agency in every county in the State, and if any of our friends wish such an agency, they will please apply to us by letter post paid.

To an active business man it can be made profitable.

To our Exchanges.

We receive every week several Exchanges directed to the "Visiter," or "Miscellany." We wish to inform our friends that the "Chart" is the only temperance paper published in the State, the Visiter and Miscellany having long since suspended.

Notice.

At a meeting of the friends of temperance, held in Enterprize, Switzerland Co., it was determined to have a mass meeting at that place, commencing Sept. 8th, to continue two or more days, to discuss the principles of Temperance as they are now placed before the people of this State.

Arrangements have been made to secure eminent speakers for the occasion, amongst whom are Gen. Cary, and G. W. P. Goodwin; also Bro. Pease, the Blind Lecturer.

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Camp Meeting advertised in our last to meet at West Point on the First Friday of Septemher is postponed until the Second Friday.

Communications.

Last week we received forty two communications for the Chart. Four of the writers did not send their names; of course we tore their communications up without reading—five did not pay their postage—their communications will not be published. Not one of these communications contained any "material aid" or the names of any subscribers to the paper.

Of the thirty eight who sent us their names thirty two are not subscribers themselves. These communications were of various lengths, from half a page, the shortest, to seventeen and one half pages of closely written foolscap, the longest.—Now were we to publish all these communications they would fill the paper outside and in, with nothing else in it for four weeks, and perhaps we will get as many more this week. What then is to be done? We like to accommodate our friends, but every one can see that under this state of things it is impossible. We will make a suggestion. Let each of the writers of the thirty-eight communications spend as much time in getting subscribers as he did in writing his article, and he will do the cause a vast deal of good, and help the Chart to at least three hundred subscribers.

Let each of the thirty-two writers who are not subscribers, in addition to the above, "fork over" the subscription price, so that they may see their communications when published, without being at the trouble of borrowing the paper from their neighbors, and we shall feel much more like publishing their communications.

Now we say these things in no ill feeling. We like to receive communications from our friends, though we would not like many seventeen pages in length, but we are too highly favored in this line and we must adopt a rule, to publish no communication from any citizen of the State, unless the writer is a subscriber to the paper, and to publish none unless very short and to the point. We are driven to this in self defence. If our friends have any thing to communicate, let them see how much they can say in the fewest words, rather than how little they can say in a dozen pages. This article will explain to our friends the reason why their articles are so slow in making their appearance. We are thankful for the kindness our friends manifest towards us, and we here again assure them that we are doing our utmost for them.—We only ask them to do as much for the paper.

Petitions to the Legislature.

We have received several communications on the subject of Petitions to the Legislature. The next session commences in January, and their will be ample time after the next session of the Grand Division in October, to make all necessary arrangements for petitioning. We think the petitions should be put in the ballot box in the shape of votes for good temperance men—these are the most efficient petitions. See that you have a large number of this kind of petitions, friends, and you need not fear for temperance laws.

Late Elections.

D. S. Reid, (Dem.) has been elected Governor of North Carolina. The Lower House stands Democrats 55, Whigs 61, and three to hear from.

Burning of the Henry Clay.

The recent destruction of this Steamer on the Hudson, is one of the most startling on record for its destruction of human life.

The Armenia and the Clay were racing. Passengers upon the latter remonstrated, but were treated with insolent scorn or indifference. Tar was used in the furnaces of the Clay until she was so hot amid-ships that passengers could not bear the heat.—There were no boats or buckets aboard.—The boat was run ashore at full speed, and there commenced such a wild struggle for life, with the flames and the waters, as we hope will never be witnessed again. The passengers had been strangely ordered aft, which effectually cut them off from escape.

The old, young, and middle-aged, male and female, were engulphed in one common grave beneath the waters of the mighty Hudson.

Over eighty lives were lost, more than half of whom were females and children. It is a horrid record—yet not more so than intemperance brings daily to our view.—The voice of a whole people startled by this calamity shouts aloud for protection, and to the extent of what law can do, they will get it. Yet scenes more revolting, the effects of intemperance are daily witnessed by our law-makers, and the people with equal zeal cry aloud for protection, but do they get it? The tears and groans of the widow and the fatherless have often been sent up to our Legislators for protection against a destroyer more potent than fire—more fatal than the dark waves of the Hudson, but with what success? to be slighted and scorned—made the laughing stock of the politician and the division of the powerful. The insulting answer is sent back "too hasty," "in advance of public opinion," "unpopular and unconstitutional." What whisky seller ever thought a law to send a drunken man to jail was unconstitutional? yet when that same law is made to fulfil its legitimate purpose, and send him who made him drunk to the same dungeon: Oh! then the law is unconstitutional. Oh! consistency—what a difference it makes whose ox does the gor*ing, does it not, Mr. Whisky-seller?*

Let temperance men bear such imposition no longer--let whisky candidates know that they need not look for support from you. Let those who ask for your vote understand, that you have the same right to expect them to vote your sentiments that they have to expect your vote. When it is finally known that temperance men stand up to their principles at the ballot box, the world will be surprised that there are so many temperance politicians.

Important Decision in favor o Temperance.

At a recent term of the Tippecanoe Circuit Court at Lafayette, in this State, in the case of the State vs. Ludley, a motion was made for a new trial, and several points were raised by defendant's counsel, but the most prominent was that a Juror who drank intoxicating liquors during the progress of the trial, between the empanneling of the jury and the rendition of the verdict into court, was incompetent for the performance of his duty. Upon this point abundant authority was adduced to show that the rule was imperative, and that the drinking of spirituous liquor, however small the quantity, by a juror during the progress of a trial, is sufficient of itself, to vitiate the verdict. The position of counsel was fully sustained by the court, and a new trial granted.

This is the first time that this important point has ever been made in this part of the country. We hope our Judges will respect this decision, for if ever a man needs to be perfectly sober, it is when sitting as a juror, with the life, liberty, and property of his fellow citizens, absolutely under his control. Let the jury box be clear of the foul stain of intemperance.

Spunk.

Mrs. Swishelm, editress of the Saturday Visitor, is a woman of the right grit. She says: "If our bigger half would get drunk, and the tavern keepers would sell him the materials, insurance on that species of property would rise in this neighborhood."

That's the way to talk. If all the ladies would talk and act in the same way there would be no need of the Maine Law.

What protection has a drunkard's wife from any law of Indiana?

The Maine Law in Rho e Island.

The following extract from a private letter written by a highly respectable gentleman from Prividence, shows the operation of the Liquor Law in that ctty:

"We are enjoying the benefits of the glorious Maine Law; and the Lord be praised for the fact that it is impossible to buy a glass of liquor as a beverage openly in the city of Providence. It went into operation last week Monday. There was a great amount of joking going on that day, and everybody appeared in high good humor, and all rejoicing. All the principal rum shops were closed. One had an empty bottle hung out, with a crape attached. Some had handbills saying, 'Maine Law!—No Liquor sold here.' It would have done your heart good to have seen the quiet, satisfied, rejoicing countenances of the people on that day. On Tuesday, they issued search-warrants for several places, and executed them faithfully. One man had defied the law and sold openly. They went with a team and took him with all his barrels, jugs, &c., and toted them off to the watch-house, all in the same cart. The next morning he was fined $20 and costs, and his liquor was condemned and emptied into the river. The same was done with other liquors seized. It was all poured into the river, with thousands of people looking on, and doing what? Resisting? No! No! No! They were cheering heartily. The same was done on several days last week, and several gallons were emptied off the bridge. Many searches have been made where no liquor was found, and much liquor has been found in others; but not the slightest resistance has been made in any case. Some have begged hard to have their liquor saved, but it is of no use. The business is done up so speedily, that there is no chance for the rumseller, and the risk of keeping the liquor on hand is too great. The same man will not be apt to try it more than once. * * * * * *

The commitments to the watch-house in this city for drunkenness, for the last four weeks, were as follows:—Weeks ending July 4th, 34; ending July 11th, 78; ending July 18, 32; ending July 25th, six. The last week under the Maine Law. But enough of this. I hope you will do your duty to Connecticut, and get the Law the first opportunity."

Rummies in Maine.

The opposers of the Liquor Law in Maine are getting desperate just now.—Not long since they burned a Division Hall of the Sons of Temperance, and killed a fine orchard of young trees belonging to a staunch temperance man. Such arguments are powerful, and will, no doubt, if persisted in, repeal the Law. If they will now shear a few horses' tails, and daub some signs with tar, cut boats adrift, and upset out houses, they will probably get an opposition law passed. We doubt not they are mean enough to commit murder, if they would not be detected.

Rum Paper.

A new weekly paper called the "People's Herald," is published in Boston by the Messrs. Farwell. Its object is to oppose temperance and temperance laws. It is edited by a renegade minister and a liquor seller and distiller—just the kind of a team we would suppose would be engaged in such dirty business. It will not be published long before its owners and patrons will get ashamed of it. Such things will always help a good cause.

Since writing the above, we learn that after getting out two numbers of the above named paper its proprietors let it die.—Sensible to the last.

Population of California.—It is estimated that the present population of California is from 200,000 to 220,000, and that of Oregon, 22,000 to 25,000. There are now about 22,000 French residents in the country, and 8,000 to 10,000 Chinese.

The last distillery in Newburyport stopped last week. The Newburyport Union says that thirty years ago there were more distilleries than churches in that place.—Now the smoke of their torments offend no one.

☞ A Temperance Camp Meeting will be held near Booneville, Ind., on Wednesday and Thursday, the 22d and 23d of September next.

☞ Mrs. Taylor, wife of the late President Taylor, died at East Pascagoula, Louisiana, on last Saturday night.

☞ The Presidential election takes place this year on the second day of November.

☞ Both branches of Congress have agreed to adjourn on the 31st of August. Good!

Items of News.

The friends of Temperance in Tennessee are moving for the Maine Law.

It is a singular fact that there is not a Temperance Hotel in New-Hampshire.

The Boston officers appointed to see the liquor law enforced, seized upon 200 gallons of excellent brandy on Wednesday.

A man died in New York, of cholera, on Wednesday night, resulting from a drunken frolic.

At the Massachusetts State Temperance Convention, thirteen hundred and seventy delegates were present.

Sixteen thousand dollars had been raised in New York, for the Montreal sufferers, up to Saturday.

Lowell gives its city agent to sell liquor under the new law, $900 salary, and his assistant $300.

The steamboat Lewis Whiteman, recently brought from New Orleans to Cincinnati one hundred Mocking birds.

A man at Utica, who had been sunstruck, and was near dying was saved by putting his feet in warm water.

F. W. Kellogg of the United States, is stirring up the masses of Great Britain for the Maine law.

The liquor destruction has commenced at Providence, amid the shouts of the crowd. Between 160 and 170 gallons have already been thrown into the river.

Havens & Son's large distillery in Elm-st., New York, was destroyed by fire on Thursday afternoon. The loss is set down at $100,000.

J. W. Arwood, while working a gold mine, near Charlotte, N. C., found a diamond of the first water which weighed four grains.

The site of the New York Crystal Palace is a space of 450 feet square, of the Reservoir Square, which will admit of an immense building.

There was not a single arrest made by the police on the night of the fifth, a thing unprecedented in the history of Portland. So much for the Maine Law!

We see it stated that ten millions per month is now the yield of California and Australia gold fields—the first producing about six million, and the latter four.

A locomotive on the Mesina and Gulf rail road, Geo., ran off the track on Sunday, killing one man and wounding three others.

The hotel keepers in Greenfield Mass., have expressed their intention not to violate the Maine Law by the sale of liquors after the 22d instant.

A lady in Paris recovered possession of 3130 francs by the aid of Alexis, the somnambulist. The money had been stolen by a discharged servant.

The Governor of New-Mexico, Mr. Calhoun, died of cholera, on the Plains, on his way from Santa Fe to Washington City.

Several persons were arrested at St. Catherine's, Canada, for celebrating the 4th of July with public displays of fire-works and discharges of fire-arms.

There has been a riot between the blacks and whites at St. Catharines, Canada, in which the negroes were driven to the woods, and their villages entirely demolished. "Rum did it."

The New-York Herald says that the ice-cream saloons of that city are the resort of fashionable females,—the haunts of dissipation, nurseries of intemperance, and places of intrigue.

The Catholic College, at Worcester, took fire Wednesday afternoon, and was entirely consumed, with the exception of a portion of the east wing. Loss estimated at from $40,000 to $50,000.

An Indian got drunk in California and killed a Chinaman. He was delivered to the Chinamen, and they hung him. They also wanted to hang the Rumseller that sold the Indian the liquor. But, no, he must live that the stream of death go on. Better hang the Rumseller and let the Indian live. He was only blameable for drinking the liquor, the Rumseller is a murderer. The difference of guilt between the two is the difference between the sin of Eve and the sin of the devil that tempted her.—Carsou League.

The Newtons, a firm largely engaged in the liquor business in Newport, R. I., gave liquor to all who wished to drink, on the day previous to the taking effect of the liquor law. Men were made drunk who had not been so for years. A regular debauch was the effect of this so-called liberality. The Newport News speaks of the act as one that should be engraved on time's records, for its "kindness and humanity." Unkindness and barbarity would be a more proper name, and if their memory gets down to posterity, it will be associated with the drunkard's curse, and the awards of a retributive justice.

Correspondence.

For the Temperance Chart.

MADISON, WISCONSIN, July 9, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I have been through much of the interior of this State, since I last wrote you, particularly in the mineral regions. Some of the towns I visited two years ago, and I confess this time I was happily disappointed. In regard to the temperance cause, I find that during the past winter a great effort has been put forth to put down the sale and use of liquor. There is an old gentleman by the name of Bronson, known by many as "old Father Bronson," who is down on the traffic, and says he is willing to spend the remainder of his days in advocating the great cause. I believe I stated to you that they came within one vote of carrying the Maine Law last winter, and it seems to be the design of the temperance men to make that vote this year. I find quite a number of towns that will not allow any of the critter to be sold, while others impose the closest restrictions. You know that persons wanting to sell liquor can do so by fileing a bond with sufficient security to pay all damages resulting from the sale of such traffic; a large majority of the towns do not keep it, and those sink holes that do keep it have to keep other Groceries.

I spent several days in Richland county, where I found quite a settlement of Hoosiers who had emigrated hither some three years since; they have quite a good section of country and seem to be prosperous and happy. There are a great many curiosities on the northern side of the Wisconsin River. The hills resemble the high hills in old Connecticut, though that portion of the State is so thinly settled, that it is impossible to tell what it is, or what it will be; the hills are very high and very much resemble a sugar loaf, the valleys however are rich and productive. There is a great deal of game in this country, principally Deer and Bear, either are more plenty than Hogs. I found a great many caves, but had only an opportunity of going into one, I did not penetrate it very far as we had no lights, but was told it went through the hill; the walls were solid stone in form of the roof of a house, the sides thickly coated with Salt Petre, which of course will preserve all matter subject to decay; I found a great deal of wood petrified and presenting the appearance of stone.

The country from Mineral Point to Madison, is mostly hilly and broken, and highly impregnated with minerals. Dodgeville is the only town of importance that I passed through, it took its name from the U. S. Senator whose residence is there, it is supported almost entirely with the miners.—This place being the capital of the State, makes it a town of considerable importance, and I think one of the most beautiful natural situations for a town I ever saw; there are four most beautiful lakes surrounding it, each filled with pure bright sparkling water, affording any amount of the most delicious fish to be found in the world. These lakes all have an outlet from one into the other, each channel having fall enough for a vast quantity of machinery. Madison seems to be laid out something like Indianapolis, but I think not so large, though containing many beautiful buildings. Every thing is quite lively here to-day as the Supreme Court is in session; you have scrcely room to stand up in any of the Hotels, to say nothing about getting a room or bed to sleep in, I would advise all persons fond of novelty going to Wisconsin, to go to Madison. There is a Rail Road in progress from Milwaukie here, and thence to Arena, on the Wisconsin River, and from there to Prairie La Crosse, on the Upper Mississippi; which will make Madison an important point, as well as afford a strait route from Saint Paul to New York City, Boston, &c. I do not see one drop of liqor sold here, nor have I seen but two drunk men since I left home, now nearly three weeks, and having traveled a distance of about 1500 miles. I feel as though every body was beginning to wake up on the subject of temperance; let us wake up and elect men this fall to our Legislature, who will dare to regard the petitions of more than 100,000 citizens.

Yours truly, in haste,

J. Q. A. P.

For the Temperance Chart.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Permit me through the columns of the Chart, to say to the friends of Temperance in the State for their encouragement, that our motto is, "sink or swim, survive or perish," we are for a prohibitory law.

Our camp-meeting has just come to a close, and we had truly a great time. The friends of Temperance were inspired to push forward the battle to the enemies gate, scale the walls and have final victory. Crown their efforts and the proud State of Indiana will be blessed with a prohibitory law, the rum kingdom be destroyed, and peace and happiness reign and triumph throughout our beloved State. Our camp ground was in a beautiful grove on the edge of the Town plat, and our meetings at night held in the churches.

Brother A. Littlejohn commenced a fire upon the enemy on Thursday evening to a large and crowded audience in the M. E. Church, and so directed it that the enemy broke ranks and laid in ambush, and could only be seen occasionally from our point of observation, ready to fight in Indian style, and was not known to do any damage except to their own little army, a few fell.

On Friday morning we went to the camp ground and listened to a discourse from the Rev. D. Thomas, of South Bend, who portrayed in living colors to the minds of all present, the cost and consequences of dram-drinking, alias drunkenness, by giving us such statistical information, that every person could see the evils (liquor sellers excepted) of the infernal traffic.—During the afternoon, Saturday, and Sunday, thrilling speeches were made by Brothers Fuller, Pomeroy, Thompson, Westervelt, Shuman, Col. Sigler, of Winnemac, and Cline J. Shryock, of Rochester. On Sunday morning at 8 o'clock, we held a Lovefeast, or speaking meeting at the church, and a more interesting time I never saw; preachers and people were compelled to shed the tear of sorrow when listening to the tale of ruin and woe with which rum had cursed our world.

On Sunday we had the largest concourse of people that ever assembled at one time in our country and listened to the discussion with interest, and determination to carry the subject to the ballot box. It would have done you good to have seen the political rumites of our county flounce and squirm and talk and rave, some declaring it was a political camp-meeting, others that it was for the benefit of the whigs, others that it was for political aggrandizement, &c. It could be easily seen which way the liquor run, and who were members in good standing in the cold water army. We took the vote on Saturday night to see how many were in favor of the Maine Law, (and as we had previously elected every female present a captain in the cold water army, they as a matter of course were voters) and every person in the house voted for the Maine Law.

It is evident to me that if the party shackles which are almost crushing and ruining many of the good people of our State, could be broken, and they could get their necks from under the political yoke which bears so heavily upon him, and let reason and moral principle govern, (instead of political demagogues and demijohns) the rum power would fall in a day never to have a resurrection in this world, or the world to come.

Sons of Temperance Hall.

COLUMBUS, IND., July 24, 1852.

At 10 o'clock, A. M., in accordance with previous notice, a large number of 'Sons,' from different Divisions of the county, assembled in Convention at Columbus, for the purpose of forming a permanent "Sons of Temperance Union" in Bartholomew County.

The meeting was organized by appointing Bro. G. W. Owens, of Bartholomew Division, President—Bro. Jesse Ruddick, sen., Vice President, and Bro. W. Mack, Secretary.

The object of the meeting having been stated, a committee was appointed to draft the necessary rules for a permanent organization; and another to report resolutions expressive of the views of the convention.

After several enthusiastic speeches had been delivered, the convention adjourned to meet at half-past one, P. M.

In the afternoon the committee on rules reported a series of articles, which were in substance as follows: The object of the organization, as set forth, is to cultivate acquaintance among the brethren of different Divisions—devise means of making the Division room a place of greater interest—and to form a more thorough and complete union of our temperance forces in this county, and drill and discipline them for vigorous and successful action.

It is named the "BARTHOLOMEW SONS OF TEMPERANCE UNION"—is to be composed of delegates from the different Divisions of the county that shall hold their regular meetings quarterly at Columbus, commencing on the first Saturday of September next, and adjourned meetings may be held at any time or place in the county.—Each Division, of twenty members or less, is allowed three delegates, and one for each additional ten members; and all Sons of Temperance are allowed to attend the meetings and participate in debates, but not to vote.

The report of this committee having been adopted, the committee on Resolutions reported the following, which, after being thoroughly discussed, were adopted without a dissenting voice:

WHEREAS, the sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage has been up to this time sustained and fostered: and whereas, the regulating policy of this greatest of evils has produced more poverty, wretchedness, crime and death—and has done more to corrupt and uproot our moral and political institutions than all other evils combined: and whereas, all experience goes to prove that by "the terrors of the law," alone, we can persuade men to desist from the iniquitous traffic; therefore,

Resolved, That we are determined to reform the policy of our State, respecting this matter; and that we will use our personal influence in all honorable ways to secure the election of Legislators who will pledge themselves to use their influence to obtain the enactment of a law in this State similar in its provisions to the present liquor law of Maine.

A committee of three were appointed, consisting of Bros. J. B. Abbott, E. H. Sabin, and W. Mack, to make arrangements for having the county thoroughly canvassed before the State election. The proceedings of the meetings were ordered to be furnished to the Temperance Chart, and county papers for publication.

The business of the convention having been done, a number of brethren delivered thrilling and eloquent addresses urging the necessity for every temperance man to make "legal war upon the traffic" an article in his political creed.

At a late hour in the afternoon, amidst the utmost unanimity and good feeling, the convention adjourned to meet in Columbus on the first Saturday in September, at 10 o'clock, A. M., when it is hoped that every Division will be represented.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Old Maids;---Or a Mistake About Marriage.

BY JEANNIE.

When I was ten years old, I had one sister age fifteen, and another seventeen; and, as usual with girls at that age, they had a set of cronies, some very like, and some quite unlike them in character. One afternoon, as I was tending my doll, Ophelia, who was sick in bed, I heard a brisk discussion among these girls, which, I may almost say, decided my fate for life.

The first words that caught my attention, came from an animated, romantic girl of sixteen, scolding because the heroine of a novel she had just read, was left unmarried at the end of the story.

One of my sisters did not seem to sympathise with this burst of disapprobation; and then came the pithy question—

"What! would you be willing to die an old maid?"

"Mary said, very quietly, "Yes," and sister Ellen added, "So would I."

Then such looks of amazement and incredulity.

"You can't mean what you say," cried one.

"If I did not know you too well to think you a hypocrite," said another.

"Why, it was meant that all women should be married," exclaimed a third.

"Then why are they not all married?" asked Mary, with simplicity.

Eager and hot grew the controversy, and I lost not a word, while Ophelia lay flat on her back, her stiff kid arms sticking out and her croup quite forgotten. Then first did I take notice of that terrible combination of monosylables "Old Maids."—In how many different tones of contempt, dread, and deprecating, did I hear it uttered by those juvenile voices. What anecdotes came forth about cross old maids, and fidgety old maids, and ugly, and dressy, and learned, and pious, and flirting, and mischief-making old maids. Never did a bevy of fifty-year old spinsters utter so much scandal in one afternoon, as was poured forth by these blooming young creatures. Two or three friends of my mother's, whom I had always cherished in my innocent affection, because they talked so pleasantly, and were so kind to me, now appeared like new personages. "Miss Z. was so ugly, she never could have had an offer." "Miss Y. dressed so shabby and wore green spectacles to look literary." And "Miss A. was ever talking about Sunday Schools and prayer meetings," and so on.

You may be sure that the next time these ladies came to our house I scanned very closely the face of Miss Z., a face I always loved before; but now I saw it was exceedingly plain. I looked hard at Miss Y's drab colored bonnet and shawl, perceived that they were old fashioned and ordinary, and that her green spectacles grew pedantic. The Miss Y., besides whom I had always squeezed in on the sofa, encouraged by her kindly smile, and delighted with her conversation—how uninteresting she had become! They were old maids.

It must be observed that my sisters—right good, sensible, domestic girls they were—had no part in this bewilderment of my ideas. They were in the minority, so I took it for granted that they were in the wrong. Besides, what children are ever as much influenced by what is uttered in the familiar voices of their own family, as by the words of comparative strangers?

I learned my lesson thoroughly, for it came to me in some shape every week. I read it in every novel and newspaper and heard it from every lip. The very men who spoke truth and sense on the subject, sometimes neutralized it by an idle jest in some moment of levity, and the jest drove out the truth from my young heart. At eighteen I lived only for the ignoble purpose—I cannot bear to say it—of getting married: but what could have been the ruling wish of one who had been taught by society to dread celibacy worse than death? I dare say I betrayed it in the ball room, in the street, everywhere. I dare say I was duly laughed at.

At last, quaking on the verge of six-and-twenty, I had an offer;—a most absurd one. I was six years older than my lover, had ten times as much sense, probably, except on one point. I knew he was "rather wild," as the gentle phrase has it. In short, I neither loved nor reproached him, but I was willing to marry him, because I should be Mrs. Somebody, and should not be an old maid.

My parents said "No," positively. Of course I thought them unreasonable and cruel, and made myself very miserable.—Still, it was something to have had "an offer" of any kind, and my lips were not hermetically sealed, I had several confidants, who took care that all my acquaintances should know that I had refused Mr. Somebody.

I went on with increasing uneasiness a few years longer, not seeking how to be useful, or trying to find out for what good purpose I was made. Neither was I looking for a companion who could sympathise with my better aspirations and elevate my whole character, for I had no right views of marriage. I was simply gazing about in anxious suspense upon every unmarried man of my acquaintance, for one who would lift me out of that dismal Valley of Humiliation into which I felt myself descending. Had I met Apollyon himself there; with the question on his lips, I believe I should have said "Yes."

At thirty-six I wore more pink ribands than ever, was seen everywhere that a respectable woman could go, wondered why the girls went into company so young, found I was growing sharp faced and sharp spoken, and was becoming old maidish in the worst sense of the word, because I was an old maid against my will; I forgot that voluntary celibacy never affects the temper.

My sisters, be it remembered, were older than I. They too were single. But they had lived more domestic lives than I had, had read fewer works of fiction, had been cultivating their own natures, and seeking to make everybody around them happy. And everybody reverenced them, and loved to look upon their open pleasant countenances,—I mean everybody worth pleasing,—and they were very happy.

At last my good parents died, and left each of us a little independence. Within a year I was married.

I was married for my money. That was ten years ago, and they were ten years of purgatory.

I have had bad luck as a wife, for my husband and I have scarcely one taste in common. He wishes to live in the country, which I hate,—I like the thermometer at 75 deg., which he hates. He likes to have the children brought up at home instead of school, which I hate. I like music, and want to go to concerts, which he hates. He likes roast pork, which I hate; and I like minced veal, which he hates.—There is but one thing which we both like, and that is what we cannot both have, though we are always trying hard for it—the last word.

I have had bad luck as a mother; for two such huge, passionate, unmanageable boys never tormented a feeble woman since boys began. I wish I had called them both Cain. At this moment they have just quarreled over their marbles. Mortimer has torn off Orville's color, and Orville has applied his colt-like heel to Mortimer's ribs; while the baby Zenobia, in my lap, who never sleeps more than a half an hour at a time, and cries all the time she is awake, has been roused by their din to scream in chorus.

I have had bad luck as a house-keeper; for I never kept even a house-maid more than three weeks. And as to cooks, I look back bewildered on the long phantasmagoria of faces flitting stormily through my kitchen, as a mariner remembers a rapid succession of thunder gusts and hurricanes in the Gulf of Mexico. My new housemaid bounced out of the room yesterday, flirting the duster and muttering, "Real old maid after all!" just because I showed her a table on which I could write "slut," with my finger, in the dust.

I never see my plump happy sisters, and then glance in the mirror at my own cadaverous, long, doleful visage without wishing myself an old maid. I do it every day of my life.

Yet half of my sex marry as I did; not for love, but for fear!—for the fear of dying old maids!!

They have their reward. And they whose idle tongues create this mischievous fear, and thus make domestic misery, have their responsibilty.

Timber in Oregon.

A letter from Oregon published in the Baptist Register, says:

"Forests on the bottom lands, and mountains too, when not precipitous, are made up of an astonishing burthen of timber. Trees stand near each other; the number on an acre is great. Large, very large trees are frequent. Yet the great body of timber is of useful size, and a prettier grove from which to select building timber, a carpenter cannot desire to enter. The trees are tall, straight, and hold their size remarkably. The keel of the steamer Lot Whitcomb, is 160 feet long. The tree from which it was hewn measured twenty-four by twenty-seven inches diameter at the butt. Mr. Abernethy, at Cork Point, sawed 101 feet in saw-logs from a fir tree, the butt measured 32 inches, and the top 16 inches.

As beautiful a tree as I have seen, stands on the claim of Judge Strong, at Cathlamet, a drawing of which was made for a London Pictorial newspaper. It is ten feet in diameter at the bottom, and 230 feet high. But trees are found that measure 300 feet as they lay extended on the ground, and near the coast 200 feet in length of saw-logs have been taken from a tree on more than one occasion. Fir and Spruce run up, spire like, farthest among the clouds, never throwing out any large lateral branches. The quantity of lumber would be inexhaustible, if felled only for lumbering purposes. These timbers split freely. They are split into rails and shingles, and at a distance from saw-mills, into siding for houses. Such weather boards are over eight feet long, and half an inch in thickness.

At Pacific City, I went out with a proprietor of a saw-mill to see the manner of felling spruce timber. With a large auger a hole is bored through the green standing tree, or two holes so bored as to meet within the white or sap part of the wood.—Then a coal of fire is put into the hole.—The draft of air sets it burning, and in from six to twelve hours, according to the size of the tree, it falls, with little or no more waste of wood than would be used by an axman. It is then butted and cut up with the saw. Thus 15 minutes with the auger does the work of half or two-thirds of a day with an axe. Fir trees are not so felled for lumber. The white, [which is nearly the same as the balsam fir of the State] does not burn sufficiently well, and the yellow and red burn too freely, and waste the timber.

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

"Why in L didn't you give a signal?" said a fat English cockney, with his mouth full of sandwich, who ran wheezing after the departing cars at Narrowsburgh, the other day.

"We did," said the conductor: "we rang the bell."

"Oh, ay—the b-e-l-l: I see: but w'y didn't you blow an 'orn, and then one could 'ear it; your blaasted steam-'orn, don't ye see!"

The conductor put his handkerchief to his mouth to suppress "skreems of laft-ure," and arranged his tickets.

How is it with You.—At a prayer-meeting in the church in the village of Spunktown, in the State of Maine, a country lad was noticed by one of the elder deacons to hold down his head and wriggle in his seat, while the tears seemed to start at every moment.

A clear case of repentance, thought the old deacon, as he quietly stepped to the side of the lad, and in a whisper affectionately inquired:—'How is it with you, my son?'

The boy looked up, and supposing him to be the sexton, answered:

'Oh! very bad, and I want to go out—my innards is kickin up a revolution and the fourth of July! and if ever I eat a current pie again, my name aint Jeems Billins.'

Champlain is a lake, not a "lakelet," we can tell your poetical lad-correspondent at Burlington, Vermont. You might as well call a hen a "henlet." We like not such "affectations, look you."

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Of all the numerous medicines extant, (and some of them valuable) for the cure of pulmonary complaints, nothing has ever been found which could compare in its effects with this Preparation. Others cure sometimes, but at all times and in all diseases of the lungs and throat where medicine can give relief, this will do it It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe in accordance with the directions We do not advertise for the information of those who have tried it but those who have not. Families that have known its value will not be without it, and by its timely use, they are secure from the dangerous consequences of Coughs and Colds which neglected, ripen into fatal consumption.

The Diploma of the Massachusetts Institute was awarded to this preparation by the Board of Judges in September, 1847; also, the Medals of the three great institutes of Art, in this country; also the Diploma of the Ohio Institute at Cincinnati, has been given to the Cherry Pectoral, by their Government in consideration of its extraordinaty excellence and usefulness in curing affections of the Lungs and Throat.

Read the following opinion founded on the long experience of the eminent Physician of the Port and City of

St. Johns, May 8, 1851.

Dr. J. C. Ayer:—Five years trial of your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, has proven what I foresaw from its composition, must be true, that it eradicates and cures the colds and coughs to which we, in this section are peculiarly liable.

I think its equal has not yet been discovered, nor do I know how a better remedy can be made for the distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

J J. BURTON, D., F. R. S.

See what it has done on a wasted constitution, not only in the following cases, but a thousand more:

Sunbury, Jan 24th, 1851.

Dr. Ayer:—In the month of July, I was attacked by a violent diarrhœa in the mines of California. I returned to San Francisco. My diarrhœa ceased, but was followed by a severe cough—and much soreness I finally started for home, but received no benefit from the voyage. My cough continued to grow worse, and when I arrived in New York, I was at once marked by my acquaintances as a victim of consumption. I must confess that I saw no sufficient reason to doubt what my friends all believed. At this time I commenced taking your truly invaluable medicine with little expectation of deriving any benefit from its use You would not receive these lines did I not regard it my duty to state to the afflicted, through you, that my health, in the space of eight months, is fully restored. I attribute it to the use of your Cherry Pectoral

Yours truly, WILLIAM W. SMITH.

Washington, Pa. April 12, 1848.

Dear Sir:—Feeling that I have been spared from a premature grave, through your instrumentality by the providence of God I will take the liberty to express to you my gratitude.

A Cough and the alarming symptons of Consumption had reduced me too low to leave me anything like hope, when my physician brought me a bottle of your "Pectoral" It seemed to afford immediate relief, and now in a few weeks time has restored me to sound health.

If it will do for others what it has for me, you are certainly one of the benefactors of mankind.

Sincerely wishing you every blessing, I am

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN J CLARK,

Rector of St. Peter's Church.

With such assurance and from such men, no stronger proof can be adduced unless it be from its effects upon trial.

POETRY.

The Disenthralled.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

He had bowed down to drunkenness,
  An abject worshiper;
The pulse of manhood's pride had gone,
  Too faint and cold to stir;
And he had given his spirit up
  Unto the humblest thrall;
And bowing to the poison cup,
  He gloried in his fall.

There came a change—the cloud rolled off,
  And light fell on his brain—
And like the passing of a dream
  That cometh not again,
The shadow of his spirit fled;
  He saw the gulf before—
He shuddered at the waste behind—
  And was a man once more.

He shook the serpent's fold away
  That gathered round his heart,
As shakes the swaying forest oak
  Its poison vine apart;
He stood erect—returning pride
  Grew terrible within;
And conscience sat in judgment on
  His most familiar sin.

The light of intellect again
  Along his pathway shone;
And reason like a monarch stood
  Upon its golden throne;
The honored and the wise once more
  Within his presence came—
And lingered oft on lovely lips
  His once forbidden name.

There may be glory in the might
  That treadeth nations down—
Wreaths for the crimson conqueror—
  Pride for the single crown:
But nobler in that triumph hour
  The disenthralled shall find,
When evil passion boweth down
  Unto the god-like mind.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Coon Hunt: Or a Fence Country.

'Tis really astonishing what a monstrous sight of mischief there is in a pint of rum. If one of them was to be submitted to an analization, as the doctors call it, it would be found to contain all manner of devilment that ever entered the head of man, from cussin and stealin up to murder, and whippen his own mother and nonsense enuff to turn all the world out of their senses. If a man's got any badness in him, it'll bring it out just as sasafras tea, does the measles, and if he's a good for nuthin sort of a feller, without no bad traits in partickerler, it'll bring out all his greenness. It affects different people in different ways—it makes some men monstrous brave and full of fight, and some it makes cowards—some it makes rich and happy, and some poor and miserable, and it has a different effect on different people's eyes—some it makes see double and some it makes so blind that they can't tell themselves from a side of bacon. One of the worst cases of rum-foolery that I've heard of for a long time, tuk place in Pineville last fall.

Bill Sweeney and Tom Culpepper is the two greatest coveys in our settlement for coon huntin. The fact is, they don't do much of anything else, and when they can't ketch nuthin you may depend coons is scarce. Well, one night they had everything ready for a regular hunt, but owin to some extra good fortin, Tom had got a pocket pistol, as he called it of regular old Jimmakey to keep off the rheumatics.—After takin a good startin horn they went out on their hunt, with their lite-wood torch a blazin, and the dogs barkin and kelpin like forty thousand. Every now and then stoppin to wait for the dogs, they would drink one another's healths till they began to feel very comfortable, and chatted away about one thing and another, without mindin much which way they were gwine. Bimeby they cum to a fence.—Well over they got, 'thout much difficulty.

'Whose fence is this?' ses Bill.

'Taint no matter,' ses Tom, 'let's take suthin to drink.'

After takin a drink they went on wonderin what on yearth cum of the dogs.—Next thing they come to was a terrible muddy branch. After pullin through the briers, and getting on 'tother side, they tuck another drink, and after gwine a little further they cum to another fence a monstrous high one this time.

'What upon yearth is we got too, Culpepper?' ses Bill, 'I never seed such a heap of branches and fences in these parts.'

'Why,' ses Tom, 'its old Sturlin's doins—you know he's always bilden fences and makin infernal improvements, as he calls 'em. But never mind—we's through them now.'

'Guess we is,' ses Bill; 'here's the allfiredest tall fence yet.'

Shure enuff, they was right agin another fence. By this time they began to be considerable tired and limber in the jints, and it war such a terrible high fence;—Tom drapped the last piece of the torch, and thar they was in the dark.

'Now you is done it,' ses Bill.

Tom know'd he had, but thought it was no use to grieve over spilled milk, so said he, 'Never mind old hoss; come ahead, and I'll take you out,' and the next minit kerslash he went into the water.

Bill hung on to the fence with both hands like he thought it was slewin round to throw him off.

'Hellow Tom,' ses he, 'whar in the world is you got to?.

'Here I is,' ses Tom, spouting the water out of his mouth, and coffin like he'd swallowed something. 'Look out, thar is another branch here.'

'Name o' sense, whar is we?' ses Bill. 'If this is'nt a fency country, dad fetch my buttons.'

'Yes, and a branchy one too!' ses Tom; 'and the highest and thickest that I ever seed in my born days.'

'Which way is you,' ses Bill.

'Here rite over the branch.'

The next minit, in Bill went up to his middle in the branch.

'Cum ahead says Tom' let's go home.'

'Cum thunder! in such a place as this, whar a man ain't more'n got his cote tail unhitched from a fence, fore he's got over head and ears in the water.'

After getting out and feeling about in the dark a little, they got together again. After takin another drink, they set out for home, denouncing the fences and the branches, and helpin one another up now and then but they hadn't got more'n twenty yards before they brung up all standing in the middle of another branch. After getting through the branch and gwine about ten steps, they were brung to halt by another fence.

'Dad blame my picture,' ses Bill, if I, don't think we is bewitched. Who upon yearth would build fences all over creation this way.'

It was bout a hour's job to get over this one, but after they got on top they found the ground on tother side 'thout much trouble. This time the bottle was broken and they cum monstrous near having a fight about the catastrofy. But it was a very good thing, for after crossin two or three more branches, and climin as many more fences, it got to be daylight, and they found out that they had been climbing the same fence all night, not more'n a hundred yards from whar they first come to it.

Bill Sweeney ses he can't account for it in no other way but that the liquor sort of turned their heds, and he ses he does reelly believe if it hadn't gin out they'd been climbin that same fence, and wadin that same branch yet. Bill promised his wife to jine the Temperance Society, if she won't say anything more about the Coon Hunt.

"Mother, I want Some Gin."

Such was the earnest entreaty of a little boy, four years old, to a sick mother, the other day, whom I was visiting professionally in a neighboring town.

"Why, Johnny, you had some but little while ago."

"Well, I want some more now"

"Do you? Well, you know where it is, help yourself."

John hurried precipitately to the table, seized the bottle, and placing the tumbler beside it, took out the cork, and was pouring out his beverage when his father entered.

"What are you doing, little fellow?—You will get drunk."

"No, I shan't father;" quietly replacing the cork and the bottle.

The father gave him a spoon and some sugar, and he retreated joyfully to an obscure corner of the house, the better to enjoy his potation.

I started instinctively to my feet, having become so far absorbed in "passing events" as to almost lose myself, being also subject sometimes to "absence of mind." I found myself taking the latitude and longitude of the position we were in. The question came up—Can it be that this family, living apparently in a christian community, and in the middle of the nineteenth century, suffer such things? Is this bright sun the light of July, 1852, or the dim light of a darker age?

I said earnestly to the father, "does that boy love gin?"

He answered, apparently in a very indifferent manner, "Oh, yes; 'twon't hurt him."

The countenance of the father showed at a glance his intemperate habits, and the words of the mother to the boy proved her betrayal also. That an appetite thus early formed, connected with the habits and views of those parents, will eventually prove the ruin of that bright-eyed boy, is almost certain. Now the question comes up—who will be sharers in the guilt, if he eventually fills a drunkard's grave?—New York Organ.

Anecdote.

The following old anecdote is worth repeating: Some few years since, as Dr. Dwight was traveling through New Jersey, he chanced to stop at the stage hotel in one of its popular towns, for the night. At a late hour of the same night, arrived also at the inn, Mr. Dennie, who had the misfortune to learn from the landlord that his beds were all paired with lodgers, except one occupied by the celebrated Dr. Dwight.

"Show me to his apartment," exclaimed Dennie: "although I am a stranger to the Reverend Doctor, perhaps I may bargain with him for my lodgings." The landlord accordingly waited on Mr. Dennie to the Doctor's room, and there left him to introduce himself.

The Doctor, although in his night-gown, cap, and slippers, and just ready to resign himself to the refreshing arms of Somnus, politely requested the stranger intruder to be seated. Struck with the physiognomy of his companion, he then unbent his austere brow, and commenced a literary conversation. The names of Washington, Franklin, Rittenhouse, and a host of distinguished literary characters, for some time gave a zest and an interest to the conversation, until Dr. Dwight chanced to mention Dennie.

"Dennie, the editor of the "Port-Folio," said the Doctor in a raphsody, "is the Addison of the United States—the father of American belles-letters. But sir," continued he, "is it not astonishing that a man of such genius, fancy, and feeling, should abandon himself to the inebriating bowl?"

"Sir," said Dennie, "you are mistaken. I have been intimately acquainted with Dennie for several years, and I never knew or saw him intoxicated."

"Sir," says the Doctor, "you err. I have the information from a particular friend; I am confident that I am right and you are wrong."

Dennie now ingeniously changed the conversation to the clergy, remarking that Abercrombie and Mason, were among the most distinguished divines; nevertheless, he considered Dr. Dwight, President of Yale College, the most learned theologian, the first logican, and the greatest poet that America had produced. "But, sir," continued Dennie, "there are traits in his character undeserving so wise and great a man, of the most detestable description: he is the greatest BIGOT and DOGMATIST of the age!"

"Sir," says the Doctor, "you are grossly mistaken; I am intimately acquainted with Dr. Dwight, and I know to the contrary."

"Sir," says Dennie, "you are mistaken; I have it from an intimate acquaintance of his, who, I am confident, would not tell me an untruth."

"No more slander," says the Doctor, I am Dr. Dwight, of whom you speak!"

"And I, too," exclaimed Dennie, "am the Mr. Dennie, of whom you spoke."

The astonishment of Dr. Dwight may be better conceived than told. Suffice it to say, they mutually shook hands, and were extremely happy in each others's acquaintance.

Paul Denton.

Paul Denton, a Methodist preacher in Texas, advertised a barbecue, with better liquor than is usually furnished. When the people were assembled, a desperado in the crowd cried out; "Mr. Paul Denton, your reverence has lied. You promised not only a good barbecue, but better liquor. Where's the liquor?"

"THERE!" answered the missionary, in tones of thunder, and pointing his motionless finger at the matchless double spring, gushing up in two strong columns, with a sound like a shout of joy, from the bosom of the earth. "There!" he repeated with a look terrible as lightning, while his enemy actually trembled at his feet; "there is liquor which God, the eternal, brews for all his children.

"Not in the simmering still, over smoky fires, choked with poisonous gasses, surrounded with the stench of sickening odors and corruptions, doth your Father in heaven prepare the precious essence of life—the pure cold water; but in the green glade and grassy dell, where the red deer wanders, and the child loves to play, there God brews it; and down, low down in the deepest valleys, where the fountain murmurs and the rills sing, and high upon the mountain tops, where the naked granite glitters like gold in the sun, where the storm-cloud broods and the thunder storms crash, and away far out on the wide wild sea, where the hurricane howls music, and the big wave rolls the chorus, sweeping the march of God—there he brews it, that beverage of life, health giving water.

"And everywhere it is a thing of life and beauty—gleaming in the dew drop; and singing in the summer rain; shining in the ice gem, till the trees all seem turned to living jewels, spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a white gauze around the midnight moon; sporting in the cataract; dancing in the hail shower; sleeping in the glacier; folding its bright snow curtains softly about the wintry world and weaving the many colored sky, that seraph's zone of the syren, whose warp is the rain-drops of earth, whose woof is the sunbeam of heaven, all checkered over with the celestial flowers, by the mystic hand of refraction. Still always is it beautiful—that blessed life-water! no poisonous bubbles on its brink; its foam brings not madness and murder: no blood stains its liquid glass; pale widows and starving orphans weep not burning tears in its depths; no drunkard's shrinking ghost from the grave curses it in words of despair! Speak out, my friends would you exchange it for the demon's drink, alcohol?"

A shout, like the roar of the tempest, answered, "No!"

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

An Incident.

A few days since while at Washington, a brother who had been raised from the degradation of the gutter to respectability in society, whose family once experienced all the misery of a drunkard's home, related to us the simple story of his reformation, which will be found in the following words:

While in a state of sobriety he went to the shop of a barber, in order to get shaved. his beard having grown excessively long and dirty while spreeing. After being properly shaved he went home, and put on some clean clothes. He then took up a paper and was engaged in reading, when his little daughter a child of about five or six years, while gazing on the clean shaved face of her father, said to her mother, "Mother, don't papa look pretty when he don't drink?" and then turning to her father said, "Papa, you won't drink any more will you?" The appeal was not made in vain—it fixed the heart of the father. His resolution was taken. He then and there solemnly pledged himself to his wife, his child and his God, that he would thenceforth and forever abstain from the intoxicating bowl.

Years have rolled their annual rounds since that pledge was given, and the father has religiously kept his promise. That now happy family is gliding along with the rapidity of time toward the ocean of eternity; soon they will pass through the gloomy portals of the tomb, and enter the paradise of their God, where happiness for ever dwells.

And now dear reader, if it should be your lot to share the joys of heaven, and you behold, while gazing over millions of the redeemed of earth, a little troop around the throne of God, you will see in the crown of one a brighter gem than all the others and should you ask the reason why this is, the answer will be borne back to your listening ears. "In yonder world that child was made the instrument in the hands of God, in saving a father from a drunkard's grave, and a drunkard's hell."

A Touching Incident.

The affection of Indian parents for their children, and the deference which they pay to the aged, is a beautiful and touching trait in their character.

One extremely cold, wintry day as I was huddled with my little ones over the stove, the door softly unclosed, and the moccasined foot of an Indian crossed the floor. I raised my head for I was too much accustomed to their appearance at any hour to feel much alarmed, and perceived a small woman standing silently and respectfully before me, wrapped in a large blanket. The moment she caught my eye she dropped the folds of covering from around her, and laid at my feet the attenuated figure of a boy, about twelve years of age, who was in the last stages of consumption.

'Papouse die,' she said, mournfully clasping her hands against her breast, and looking down upon the suffering lad with the most heartfelt expression of maternal love, while the tears trickled down her dark face. 'Moodie's squaw save papouse—poor Indian woman be much glad.'

Her child was beyond all human aid. I looked anxiously upon him, and knew by the pinched up features and purple hue of his wasted cheeks that he had not many hours to live. I could only answer with tears her agonizing appeal to my skill.

'Try and save him! All die but him.' (She held up her five fingers.) 'Brought him all the way from Mutta Lake upon his back for white squaw to cure.'

'I cannot cure him, my poor friend.—He is in God's care; in a few honrs he will be with Him.'

The child was seized with a dreadful fit of coughing, which I expected would terminate his frail existence. I gave him a teaspoonful of current jelly, which he took with avidity, but could not retain it a moment on his stomach.

'Papouse die,' murmured the poor woman; alone—alone! No papouse; the mother all alone.'

She began re-adjusting the poor sufferer in her blanket. I got some food, and begged her to stay and rest herself; but she was too distressed to eat and too restless to remain. She said little, but her face expressed the keenest anguish, she took up her mournful load, pressed for a moment his wasted, burning hand in hers, and left the room.

My heart followed her a long way on her melancholy journey. Think what that woman's love must have been for that dying son, when she had carried a lad of his age six miles, through the deep snow, upon her back, on such a day, in the hope of my being able to do him some good. Poor heart-broken mother! I learned from Joe Muskrat's sqaw some days after, that the boy died a few moments after Elizabeth Iron, his mother, got home.—Mrs. Moodie.

HONOR TO WOMAN.—Without her smiles—society's charm would exist no longer. Christianity would languish without her aid and approval.

"In whose principles," said the dying daughter of Ethan Allen, to her skeptical father, "in whose principles shall I die—yours, or those of my Christian mother?"

The stern old hero of Ticonderoga brushed a tear from his eye as he turned away, and with the same rough voice which summoned the British to surrender, now tremulous with deep emotion, said, "In your mother's child—in your mothers." Sacred to the heart is the memory of a mother's love.

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 15, 1852.

Removal.

The office of the Temperance Chart, and of the Grand Scribe, is removed to the Journal building on Pennsylvania street, first door north of the Indiana Journal Office, at Adams & Co.'s Express Office.

Ourselves.

The "noise and confusion" incident to the removal of our office, and the three days mass meeting in this city during the past week, must be an excuse for the lack of Editorial matter in this number of our paper.

The Yeas and Nays in the Senate.

By some accident, a slip we had in our drawer, containing the yeas and nays in the Senate, on the temperance bill of last winter, and which we were saving to embody in an article on that subject, got into the hands of our publisher, and was printed in the Chart last week. It is a correct vote of that body on the best temperance bill that came before them, and the fourteen who voted for that bill may be endorsed as temperance men anywhere.

When we get the journal of the last session, we shall publish some more of the same sort. The name printed "Harfold" should be "Hatfield."

New Postage Law.

The postage law under consideration in Congress, after several amendments, has finally passed.

It is certainly a great improvement on the old one. It will reduce the postage on the Chart from forty to twenty-six cents a year, or six and one-half cents a quarter.

This law goes into operation on the 1st day of next month, (October). Under it

Newspapers, periodicals, unsealed circulars, &c., weighing not over three ounces, are to pay one cent each, to any part of the United States, or half that rate, where paid quarterly or yearly in advance.

Newspapers, &c., weighing not over one and a half ounces, half the above rates, where circulated within the State of publication.

Newspapers, papers, and pamphlets of not more than 16 pages, 8 vo., in packages of not less than 8 ounces, to one address, to be charged half a cent an ounce, without regard to the number of pieces.

Postage on all transient matter to be pre-paid, or charged double.

Books, bound or unbound, of not more than four pounds each, one cent per ounce, under three thousand miles, and two cents over that distance. Fifty per cent. to be added where not pre-paid.

Weekly newspapers free in the county of publication.

Bills for newspapers, and receipts for payment of moneys therefor, may be enclosed in subscribers' papers.

Exchanges between newspaper publishers free.

Newspapers, &c., to be so enclosed that the character can be determined without removing the wrapper—to have nothing written or printed on the paper or wrapper beyond the direction, and to contain no enclosure other than the bills or receipts before mentioned.

Letter postage is not touched at all by the new law, but will remain as at present.

A General Convention

Of the friends of Temperance will be held at Lexington, Ky., on Friday, October 22d, 1852, at 10 A. M., to devise and carry into successful operation all needful measures to rid the State of Drunkenness and Drunkard Makers.

The Kentucky New Era.

We have received the first number of this valuable Temperance paper since the commencement of its publication weekly, and consider it worth at least twice the money charged for it. We hope Kentuckians will sustain it.

Progress of the Law.

In Massachusetts the Law is doing a fine business. We clip the following evidences from the papers of that State:

In Boston.—On Tuesday of last week, Patrick Keenan, grocer, on Maverick street, was complained of, and warrant issued by Judge Russell of the Police Court, to seize, was placed in the hands of Constable Tallant, who with assistants, entered the premises and seized a quantity of rum, gin, and ale. No resistance was offered to its removal. In the afternoon the case came up before Judge Russell, and a part of the liquor was declared forfeited, and ordered to be destroyed. This was done by officer Tallant, assisted by David Leavitt, of the Journal establishment. And Keenan fined $20 and costs. Same day, a quantity of liquor was seized at the store of John McLaughlin, grocer, 42 Havre street. A quantity of cherry brandy, which was not named in the warrant, was seized, and Judge Russell hesitated as to his power to order it destroyed, and to satisfy himself on this point he postponed the case until Friday. Subsequently, we learn the brandy was ordered to be restored, and the rest destroyed. McLaughlin appealed.

On Thursday, Moses Williams, a rich licensed dealer, was complained of for selling a bottle of brandy to John A. Shaw, and on Friday the case was tried before Judge Russell of the Police Court. The proof of the sale was conclusive, but the defendant, by counsel, contended that his holding a license from the city to sell liquors was a bar to the action. The Court deferred the case until Saturday, to consult with the associate Judges, this is to be a test of the licenses granted by the city of Boston, prior to the new law.

Saturday, Justice Russell gave the opinion of the Court, at some length, sustaining the validity of the licenses—and ordering the discharge of Williams.

On Saturday, Joseph Drew, who keeps a liquor store corner of Elliott and Pleasant streets, was brought up on two complaints for selling liquor. He was held to bail in the sum of $500, and the case postponed untill Tuesday. The friends of temperance are in earnest in Boston.

"The number of committals for drunkenness has fallen off in Lowel about 70 per cent. since the new law went into operation."

"The seizure in West Brookfield resulted in a fine on the culprit, and the liquor was ordered to be destroyed."

"At Ware, 36 gallons of liquor were destroyed on Wednesday afternoon, and the owner thereof mulcted in the sum of ten dollars and costs."

"On Thursday last, Seth Keith, of East Stoughton, was arraigned before Justice Kingsbury, charged with a violation of the law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors. He was convicted and dealt with according to the Statute."

In Leominster—Five barrels of rum were seized by Deputy Sheriff Young, in an Irish shanty, on Tuesday, Aug. 17th, and the next Friday, Justice Fletcher, before whom the case was tried, ordered it destroyed.

In Lancaster—Between 60 and 70 gallons of rum were seized by Deputy Sheriff Gibbs, August 18th, in the back room of a house kept by Geo. W. Divoll.

Intemperance and Crime in St. Louis.

We see by the report of the jailor of St. Louis County, Mo., that crime stalks abroad in that city, as it always will, as long as nearly every other house is a whisky shop. The following are the statistics of the county jail, for the year ending August 18, 1852:

Commitments, 444—larcency, 165; keeping house of ill-fame, 15; adultery 4; obtaining goods under false pretenses, 7; merchants without license, 5; maiming, 1; dram-shop without license, 20; embezzlement, 5; assault and battery, 53; assault with intent to kill, 20; runaway slaves, 40; bigamy, 2; resisting officers, 2; free negroes in the State without license, 15; burgarly, 12; forgery, 9; incest, 1; murder 11; as witnesses, 16; arson 5; riot, 19; rape 3:

Progress of Temperance in New York.

A law has lately been passed by the Legislature of New York, which compels liquor shops to keep closed doors on Sunday. A few Sabbaths since the police of the city of New York made an effort which was quite successful, to carry the law into effect, and many of the rumholes which heretofore were open on the Sabbath, are now closed by law. A fine of $50 is imposed for a violation of the law, and it is generally enforced.

The Library of Harvard College contains 92,000 volumes, and 26,000 unbound books and pamphlets.

Candidates for Governor.

Last week we published what we supposed to be the views of the candidates for Governor of this State upon the question of Temperance and the Maine law. We did not then know that letters would so soon be published, giving the views of each candidate; but as we find the following letters published in the South Bend Register, we insert them as they are. Our readers can, therefore, draw their own conclusions:

FROM GOVERNOR WRIGHT.

Indianapolis, August 18, 1852.

G. C. Merrifield, Esq.: Yours of the 7th inst., to Gov. Wright, was received. He is absent with his competitor, Mr. McCarty, canvassing the State. By a letter this day received from Shelbyville, he directs me to enclose you the accompanying copy of a letter to Mr. Tevis, of Rush co., on the subject to which you allude.

Respectfully yours,
Francis King,
Private Sec'y to Gov'r.

(copy.)

Indianapolis, August 14, 1852.

Joel Tevis, Esq.: In reply to yours of the 6th inst., I answer that I am not a member of the Order of the Sons of Temperance. I have never been a member of that body. I am not in favor of the Maine Liquor Law, as you call it. I am the friend of Temperance, and wish success to all associations that are calculated to convince men of the impropriety of intemperance. I trust that my past life has given some evidence of my attachment to the cause of sobriety, temperance, and order.

I do not consider that this question is necessarily involved in the approaching election of Governor, having no doubt that whoever may be the Executive of Indiana, he would carry out the will of the people of the State, as expressed by their representatives.

Yours most respectfully,
JOSEPH A. WRIGHT.

FROM NICHOLAS McCARTY.

Indianapolis, August 14, 1852.

G. C. Merrifield, Esq.: Yours of the 7th inst. came by due course of mail, but absence and constant engagements have prevented a reply till now. You make the following enquiries:

"1st. Are you in favor of the Maine Law? And would you, if elected to the office of Governor, recommend the passage of a similar law by the Legislature?

"2d. If opposed to the law, is your opposition of such a character as would lead you to withhold your assent from such a bill, should it pass the Legislature."

In reply, I have to say, if elected Governor, with my present views, I would not feel disposed to recommend the Maine law or any special law on the subject of Temperance. Believing that the public mind throughout the State is agitated on the subject, and that whatever measures are adopted, to be useful, must be such as a majority approve, the Representatives, fresh from the people, would be much more likely by exchanging opinions to decide in accordance with the public will, upon a subject so generally discussed, than would an Executive, were he disposed to offer his individual opinion.

As to withholding my assent from such a bill, if passed by the Legislature, I have to say that I deem it wrong for a candidate for Governor of a State to give any pledge of what he would or would not veto. In the early part of the canvass, before I thought of being questioned on the subject, at a meeting at Greencastle, the subject came up previous to the candidate for President being nominated; and I expressed my opinion as to their pledging themselves, as they were urged to do, to veto any bill which should alter or modify the Compromise measures. I spoke then to the following effect:

"That it was carrying the matter to an extreme, and I trusted neither of the candidates would allow themselves to make such a pledge. If they did, I considered it extorted from them at their own self-respect, at the expense of the respect due to the station, and at the risk of their pledge as a candidate coming in conflict with their official oath, so various have been constitutional constructions at different times; and great and good men have changed their opinions honestly entertained on constitutional questions."

Such is my opinion as a candidate now for the place named. Any opinion I now have might or might not be my opinion after taking the oath of office and giving all the thought I could to the subject.

With these remarks I will add I have no pledge to make as to what I would or would not veto. But I do pledge myself to act on this or any other subject that might come before me in accordance with my sense of duty, under the solemnity of my official oath.

But I am free to express the opinions I have on the Veto Power, and would remark on the subject that when the will of the majority is clearly expressed upon any measure of public concern, through the Representatives of the People, that is not clearly unconstitutional, (or evidently passed without due deliberation and under circumstances which were convincing that the measure was opposed to the public good, so that if the Legislature had before them the views of the Governor and an opportunity of reviewing their action, they would reverse their decision,) I would not feel at liberty to withhold official assent, whatever might be my individual opinion of the measure. I believe that it is better that the public should suffer for a time the inconvenience of a measure, passed by their mistaken but honest judgment, and left for the people, through their Representatives, to change in their own good time, than that one frail mortal like themselves should set up his judgment against both People and Representatives on a mere matter of expediency.

Of course I do not in this pretend to go into every circumstance that might govern my action on the subject of the Veto, but the substance of such as are now in my mind.

In haste, respectfully yours,
NICHOLAS McCARTY.

Maine Law in Miniature.

A few days since, a farmer came into the city, from an adjoining town, to dispose of a barrel of his "wholesome and nutricious beverage," alias Apple Brandy. Bringing up in front of a liquor shop in State street, he went in to make a trade for his load. But ill-fated "apple-jack." The horse, ashamed, no doubt, to be seen standing in front of a grog-shop, and thus inform the public of the whereabouts of his owner, started suddenly ahead. The barrel—which stood "on end"—by some means tilted over, and with such force as to send the contents oozing out of it at various cracks and crevices.

The farmer, by the sense of smell, we presume, informed of the loss about to be sustained, seized a pail, and, in all haste, ran to save the spilling fluid. Now came the "fun." Some boys standing by, could not resist the opening for sport. "Get up, Dobbin!" cries the mischevious urchins. "Whoa, Billy!" shouted the farmer. "Ha! ha!" roared the by-standers, as "Billy"—mortified, as any honest horse ought to be, caught peddling rum—wouldn't "Whoa"! Sweating and foaming—pail in one hand, and with the other holding on to the "tail of the wagon," followed up the farmer, casting many imploring looks at the boys, and threatening ones at his horse, thinking only to save his wasting "property."

But not to prolong our story: between the leaking barrel, the go-aheadativeness of the horse, and the help of the boys, the apple brandy was pretty much drank up by Mother Earth, and the farmer—cursing the boys in general, and his horse in particular—left for home. Perhaps "Billy" didn't catch it some! when he got out of the city, for the part he played in keeping the fiery beverage of his master from running down the throat of some infatuated drinker. We are very sorry the boys should have been so naughty, but should not feel over bad if all the liquor in town was served the "same sauce."—Maine Law Advocate.

"A Small Business."

There is no more common practice prevailing among the young men of to-day, than that of drawing consolation from the "seductive weed," and were it not for the fact that when viewed closely, the matter assumes an aspect of grave importance, which to some extent has been overlooked, we would not deem it advisable to expend a thought upon it.

How many of our young men expend three, six, and twelve cents a day, to indulge this morbid appetite for smoke, without for one moment reflecting that they are gradually, but surely wasting the basis of an ample fortune. The very lowest sum expended in this manner, say three cents daily, would give an aggregate amount, with compound interest, of about one hundred and fifty dollars in ten years; or in fifty years, over three thousand dollars.—How many young men in this village expend thrice told the sum upon which the above calculation is based, and think it a paltry trifle which no "gentleman" would deem too large an investment by way of keeping up a respectable appearance, and yet, my young ambitious friend, this despised "trifle" would, if properly used, for, say a period of ten years foot up $650; and in fifty years, the "trifle" has walked with amazing rapidity up to the almost incredible sum of over fourteen thousand dollars. A "nice young man" would affect to consider it extremely small business to talk about saving such a very diminutive daily portion as a solitary shilling.

Thirty thousand dollars is an aggregation of the "currency" that comparatively few of our young men dare to hope for.—A point which the highest flight of their ambition has never reached, and yet this sum is only the proper investment of 28 cents daily for the period of fifty years.

How many young men in this village will, from this day forth, agree with themselves to take such sums as would be expended in "amusements" and "luxuries" and put away securely for the uses of old age?—Medina Whig.

For the Temperance Chart.

A Practical Discourse.

BY A LAYMAN.

"Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink."—Isaiah, v., 22.

A great many there are who argue that the subject of temperance has grown stale, and the people have become tired of hearing it talked of as a matter of so much importance, and as a matter over which temperance men have no right to exercise any control. Well, perhaps this is plausible enough—very plausible—in the eyes of rum's votaries; but reasonable men and thinking men are not prepared to give in their adhesion. The prophet, in the above, very clearly tells the fate of wine-bibbers, and affords an inexhaustible text for every temperance man to dwell upon—the preacher in the pulpit, the politician on the husting, the lawyer in the forum, the editor from his sanctum, the doctor at the sick-bed-side, and the private citizen in every walk of life. And the blood of the drunkard will be upon the head of all those who do not discountenance and discourage rum drinking, either in action or in words. No man is without his influence—and woe be to him who does not exercise that influence for temperance—for right—for law and order. The full length and power of this curse, uttered by the chosen prophet of God, is seen in the misery and degradation of every drunkard's life, and in the utter wretchedness of his death!

Drunkenness was one of the leading sins among the Israelites, and in view of this, no doubt, it was, that the prophet further says, "Therefore is the anger of the LORD kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them and hath smitten them, and the hills trembled, and their carcases were torn in the midst of the streets"—v., 25; thus showing, that, although men have a right to drink wine and other intoxicating liquors, they have a right, also, to be punished by God for such indulgence, as is seen in the last quoted passage. This, then, being granted, it is not only every man's right, but his duty, to use his whole influence against the accursed traffic, no matter what position in life he holds, or how humble or exalted he may be before men. If I see a blind man upon the verge of a precipice, with but a step or two more to hurl him headlong to the bottom, it is my right and my duty to warn him of his danger; and if he fails to hear me, or, hearing, does not heed, it is equally my right to lead him forcibly away from the danger, which may not only result in his bodily death, but that of his soul forever! This right no one would deny me, and the voice of humanity would be loud in its approval of my course. Infinitely more danger lies ahead of that man, "who, having eyes to see, seeeth not," and who, seeing the precipice ahead of him, walks wilfully over it; and a great account will he have to settle with the Judge above, who is rigorous in justice, and before whom no false evidence can appear. Precisely in this last predicament stands the wine-bibber, who not only walks wilfully over the precipice, headlong to the bottom, sinking his own soul into eternal perdition, but carries with him thousands, who, but for his influence, might have remained longer on earth as ornaments to society and finally have gone home to heaven among the glorious throng of the redeemed. This being the case, then, temperance men have a right to interfere in behalf of the inebriate. They have a right to snatch from him the damning bowl, and thus save him from plunging himself and others into an abyss of eternal woe.

And the curse does not stop here. As one wine-drinker draws a neighbor into the toils of the drunkard, so that neighbor will draw another into the same net, and thus the influence and evil effect of one individual's drunkenness will spread to a community, and from a community to a state, and from a state to a nation. It being the father of evils, of course all concomitants go with it. It was thus with His chosen people, the Israelites. God cursed them for their iniquity, and so he may do to us, "for all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still." We have a warning in unmistakable words, which, as lovers of humanity, as lovers of our country, of our altars, and our firesides, we should keep ever before us, and use every effort to prevent a similar calamity befalling our beloved country. God is indulging and long-suffering, but he will not always wait on the wicked, and if we fail to do our duty in preaching temperance and acting temperance, at the ballot-box and in the domestic circle, we may so far incur His displeasure as to cause Him to visit us as a nation and as individuals, as He did the unfortunate and stiff-necked Israelites of old. Beware, then, of His wrath! "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink, that continue until night, till wine inflame them!" for "as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flames consume the chaff," so will God's wrath consume these stubbles of community, and devour these workers of iniquity, these "pushers-up" of the fires of Hell!

For the Temperance Chart.

CLOVERDALE, IND., Aug. 11, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD: Seeing no communication yet in your excellent little paper from our vicinity, I will submit the following brief account of the prosperity of the temperance cause in this place and vicinity, and if you think it would be interesting to the readers of the Chart, you may publish it.

Cloverdale is a pleasant and prosperous little village—especially so since the good temperance men of the place have finally succeeded in driving from its borders old King Alcohol, who for many years past has exerted a pernicious and withering influence in this community.

We have a fine Division in this place, and have recently had several additions to our number; the prospect of permanent good being done here is truly flattering. This, in addition to what has already been effected, is certainly encouraging to every good friend of temperance. Our Division has been organized something over a year, I believe, and in that short time, there has been such a manifest change made in the condition of society, that all, even our most violent opposers, must acknowledge the fact. But the Sons have had to contend with strenuous opposition, especially in their first organization, when they were assailed and persecuted, from almost every side, and, I am sorry to say, by many professing Christianity. But, notwithstanding all this opposition, the cause has been onward, till the counteracting influence has so far been changed that public opinion is now in our favor. Though "our weapons are not carnal," they are mighty to the pulling down of murder-mills.

There have been several of these contemptible, ungodly little establishments, where the liquid streams of death have been measured out to our citizens; and many a promising youth has been ensnared by the enticing cup, and gone down the inclined plane into the hopeless shades of a drunkard's grave. But we rejoice that it is not so yet; for since the Sons of Temperance have been at work in good earnest, one doggery after another has been driven out of the place, till but one was left, a contemptible little fiste-ery, that stood out on one side of the village, and could do but little more than bark a little at those who passed by, but would occasionally attract some old customer within its walls; but it soon died for want of patronage, and our town is now entirely free from those lurking-places of vice and immorality; and I believe the people are determined it shall remain free from them. It is very amusing to see the old topers going off some distance before they can get anything to drink; and as our railroad is now in construction, there are many of the sons of Erin who pass through the village daily, and complain very much that they can't find any "bald-face;" to use their own emphatic language, "divil a drop" can they get in the place.

I think, in regard to voting, we are generally about right, for temperance men only need expect to get our support for the Legislature, without distinction of party. Our votes have been sensibly felt in the past elections, and we hope they will tell well on the ensuing one; for it must be clearly seen by all that this is the great lever by which we must now work. Moral suasion has effected and is still efiecting a vast amount of good; but there are yet many who are so degraded, and so lost to a sense of honor, or accountability to God or man, that we think law suasion alone can reach their cases. This is a wide and interesting subject for comment, but perhaps we have already intruded on your columns.

Yours, in L., P., and F.,

J. N. WINANS.

There is a cheering note in the wild and buoyant laugh of a child. Its spirit is catching. It breaks in upon the care-worn mind like the unfettered gush of the mountain stream. It animates, and a flood of school boy memories well up in the heart, and mingle with the sterner current of life. We love to stand and listen to it—to witness their hearty pastimes and boisterous mirth. There is life in its purity there—there is music! The harp has never been swept by a rude blast, and its delicately attuned strings vibrate only to the harmony of happiness and hope. There may be a cloud, but it is only the fleecy shadow of a summer's day, bathed in beauty as it floats; a tear, but it is the rain-drop of a spring shower glittering in the sunshine.

We like the mirth of the young! The eye that beams with unalloyed happiness and the cheek radient with health, is pleasant to look upon. Childhood is like a spring garden at the threshold of life, its flowers all the more beautiful as seen in the distance. And the fragrance of that spot lives to weave itself with the strong winds of the "sear and yellow leaf" of autumn.

Be happy then! your troubles are now light and transient. Those of sterner and more enduring mould are to come. Out then! pell-mell from the school-room; shout, tumble, roll in the dirt. Dirty faces and torn clothes, but what of that? The mind is elastic and the body sound.—Clothes can be mended and faces washed.

A Florida Watering Place.

My cousin accompanied me to the spring—he stopped at what I took to be an enormous hole of water. I asked him where the spring was, at which he pointed to the great basin of water.

"What! do you call this immense hole a spring?" said I.

"Yes; this is one of the small springs of this country," he replied.

This small spring is about sixty feet in diameter, and about fifteen or twenty feet deep.

"Well, how do people get their water to drink—do they lie down to it?" asked I.

"Oh no; there is the cup hanging over your head," said he.

I looked up and saw a tin cup, which I took down and filled with water. I drank off about a pint—it was very disagreeable, being of a warm temperature, I suppose about sixty or sixty-five degrees, and having a strong taste of sulphur; however, I thought it might do me some good.—After drinking, I inquired where people bathed. He pointed to the spring.

"What! people with all kinds of cutaneous diseases bathe in the spring?"

"Oh, it soon all runs off," said he.

I felt sorry I had drank any of the water.

"But," said I, "the spring is too deep for ladies."

He pointed to a log that lay across the lower part of the spring and said, "the ladies bathe below that log, the water there is about waist deep, and there are steps for them to go down on." I saw some very rough looking steps. "The men," he remarked, "or rather such as can swim, go out on that plank which you see projecting over the water and jump in; and there is the dressing house."

This dressing house was only a tent made of palmetto leaves. "But," said I, "do ladies and gentlemen bathe together?"

"Oh no," was his reply.

"Well," I asked, "how can ladies tell when gentlemen are bathing, or how can gentlemenknow that ladies are in the water?"

"I will show you on our return," he said, so about fifty yards from the spring he directed my attention to a board hung on a tree near the path. There was "gentlemen" written on one side of it, and "ladies" on the other, with charcoal.—"Now," said he, "when ladies come to bathe they turn the side with ladies written on it out, and if gentlemen come down they see that, and go back; when ladies come down and see the board with gentlemen turned out, they go back."

And this is the Orange Springs with its "fixins." It is situated in a beautiful grove of palmettoes, not far below the Orange Lake, from which it derives its name.—Journey to Florida.

A Short Lecture to Young Men.

Keep good company or none. Never be idle. If your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Always speak the truth. Make few promises. Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets, if you have any. When you speak to a person, look him in the face. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue. Good character is above all things else. Your character cannot be essentially injured, except by your own acts. If one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that none will believe him. Drink no kind of intoxicating liquors. Ever live, misfortune excepted, within your income. When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day. Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper; small and steady gains give competency, with tranquility of mind. Never play at any kind of game of chance. Avoid temptation, through fear you may not withstand it. Never run in debt, unless you see a way to get out again. Never borrow, if you can possibly avoid it. Do not marry until you are able to support a wife. Never speak evil of any one. Be just before you are generous. Keep yourself innocent, if you would be happy. Save when you are young, that you may spend when you are old.—Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

☞ One darkey met another on the bridge at the foot of Pearl street yesterday, and thus accosted him:

"He, he, he, Samson, you's gittin' quite gentility dese days, wid ye umberellar ober you dis like de white folks, when he ain't rainin' nor notin'."

"Well, 'spose I does, ain't a culod pusson got as good right to carry umberellar in de sun as any body else, eh?" replied Samson.

"Why no, you black nigger, less he rain. De white folks carry one to keep de sun away, so he won't turn mulatter color, but you is color ob de devil, fore God you is."

"Dat's nothin' if I is," said Samson in reply, "and dat's de very reason I got him, for if I is as black as de devil, I wants to keep so; for you see Cato, if de sun shine too hot on dis ole nigger, it might tan me yaller and bring disgrace 'pon a 'spectable color'd family; for I does know why my mudder wos, an' every white folks don't know dat."

The Dandy.

The dandy (says Rev. H. W. Beecher) is the sum total of coats, hats, vest, &c.; he is the creature of the tailor. His destiny is bound up in broadcloth and fine linen. His worth can only be estimated by the yard, cloth measure. We are puzzled to tell whether he is a female gentleman or a male lady. He combines the little weaknesses and foibles of both sexes, but knows nothing of the good qualities of either. He is a human poodle, dandled at home in the lap of effeminacy, but the sport and butt of every sensible dog when he ventures into the street. On pleasant days he exhibits himself upon the fashionable promenades, to the admiration, as he supposes, of every fair lady who is fortunate enough to cross his path. The severest labor his hands perform is to carry a dandy cane about in his daily walks. The only "head-work" to which he would stoop, is to twirl and coax a reluctant moustache, or bathe his glossy locks and ringlets in "odors sweet." He is inconsolable over a soiled boot, and would be driven to distraction were he compelled to appear in tumbled linen. Original sin, with him, consists in not being born with a full suit of the latest Parisian mode; and the clearest proof of depravity, as well as vulgarity, is wearing last year's styles. In fine, his soul is in his clothes; and when at last he goes down to that most unfashionable and undandified place, the house of the dead, a proper epitaph would be—"Here lies all of him that could die; the rest has gone—to the old clothes dealers."

The Queen of Philadelphia.

The richest woman of Philadelphia is Mrs. Rush, the wife of Dr. James Rush, of that city. Dr. Rush is a man of eminent talents and acquirements, but the enormous wealth of his wife overshadows him. We hear little of the husband, but of the movements of this lady, who has an income of one hundred thousand dollars per annum in her own right, the world is not permitted long to remain in ignorance. Her arrivals and departures are epochs in the history of the watering places she condescends to visit. She dwells in a palace, the reception rooms of which will accommodate one thousand guests without being crowded. Mrs. Rush took possession of this magnificent mansion last month, and on the 15th ult. gave a fete to eight hundred of her friends.

Her drawing rooms are said to be unsurpassed, even in Europe, in the richness of their furniture and decorations; and on the occasion referred to, six thousand wax-tapers illuminated the scene. Extensive conservatories, with rare exotics, are attached to the building, and no luxury which money can procure has been omitted in Mrs. Rush's almost regal establishment. She is said to be charitable, liberal, and amiable, although somewhat fond of making herself conspicuous in the world of fashion. It is not exactly the thing to hazard an opinion of a lady's age; but if it it were, we would say that Mrs. Rush is on the sunny side of fifty, although she dresses down to thirty or five-and thirty. Mrs. Rush inherits nearly one-third of the property of her father, the late Jacob Ridgway. Her share, if we mistake not, amounted to between one and two millions of dollars.

American and English Locks.

It will be remembered that Mr. Hobbs succeeded in picking the famous Bramah lock, and that he received a reward of 200 guineas for his skill. The Messrs. Bramah made some alterations and improvements in the lock, and again placed it in the window in Piccadilly, with the original offer of a reward appended to it. It remained in their window a few days, when a report reached the Messrs. Bramah that Mr. Hobbs intended to try his lock a second time. The lock was immediately removed, and has not since been seen. Hobbs' Patent American lock is being manufactured at Birmingham, Sheffield, Wolverhampton, and in London, in large numbers, and of all sizes, and at prices ranging from six shillings to fifty pounds each. The office of Hobb's American Lock Company is opened in Cheapside for the sale of these American locks. The bank lock, price fifty pounds, has already been placed on the vaults of the Bank of England, the East India Company, and several private banking establishments in the city.

THE "China Mail," printed at Hong-Kong, announces the following as "A great Fact for Hen-wives:"

"A cute Yankee has invented a nest, in the bottom of which is a trap-door, through which the egg, when laid, immediately drops, and the hen, looking round, and perceiving none, immediately goes to work, and lays another!"

This is the "Patent Self-Acting Back-Action Hen-Persuader," invented and patented by our ancient cotemporary, the editor of "The Knickerbocker," and described by "specifications," with drawings representing the "elevation" of the hen and nest, and a "transverse section" of the same. It seems hard, and unjust to the American genius of invention, that a work of such a character as this should not be more distinctly "credited" in foreign countries.

THIS is a fine passage of Paulding's:

"Nothing is more easy than to grow rich. It is only to trust nobody, befriend no one; to heap interest upon interest, cent upon cent; to destroy all the finer feelings of nature, and be rendered mean, miserable, and despised for some twenty or thirty years, and riches will come as sure as disease, disappointment, and a miserable death."

None have less praise than those who hunt after it.

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

"Colored ladies,' says an exchange, may be compared to many roses because they were "born to blush unseen." It is the fragrance rather than the hue that makes the rose; and if colored women were "born to blush unseen," they are not born to blush unsmelt. This every one nose.

The surest way of governing, both a private family and a kingdom, is for a husband and a prince to yield at certain times something of their prerogative.

There is a young lady up town who says that if a cart wheel has nine fellows, it is a pity that a woman like her can't have one. Sensible girl, that.

We never yet knew a man disposed to scorn the humble who was not himself a fair object of scorn to the humblest.

It is better to be born with a disposition to see things on the favorable side, than to an estate of ten thousand a year.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Of all the numerous medicines extant, (and some of them valuable) for the cure of pulmonary complaints, nothing has ever been found which could compare in its effects with this Preparation. Others cure sometimes, but at all times and in all diseases of the lungs and throat where medicine can give relief, this will do it It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe in accordance with the directions We do not advertise for the information of those who have tried it but those who have not. Families that have known its value will not be without it, and by its timely use, they are secure from the dangerous consequences of Coughs and Colds which neglected, ripen into fatal consumption.

The Diploma of the Massachusetts Institute was awarded to this preparation by the Board of Judges in September, 1847; also, the Medals of the three great institutes of Art, in this country; also the Diploma of the Ohio Institute at Cincinnati, has been given to the Cherry Pectoral, by their Government in consideration of its extraordinaty excellence and usefulness in curing affections of the Lungs and Throat.

Read the following opinion founded on the long experience of the eminent Physician of the Port and City of

St. Johns, May 8, 1851.

Dr. J. C. Ayer:—Five years trial of your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, has proven what I foresaw from its composition, must be true, that it eradicates and cures the colds and coughs to which we, in this section are peculiarly liable.

I think its equal has not yet been discovered, nor do I know how a better remedy can be made for the distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

J. J. BURTON, D., F. R. S.

See what it has done on a wasted constitution, not only in the following cases, but a thousand more:

Sunbury, Jan. 24th, 1851.

Dr. Ayer:—In the month of July, I was attacked by a violent diarrhœa in the mines of California. I returned to San Francisco. My diarrhœa ceased, but was followed by a severe cough—and much soreness I finally started for home, but received no benefit from the voyage. My cough continued to grow worse, and when I arrived in New York, I was at once marked by my acquaintances as a victim of consumption. I must confess that I saw no sufficient reason to doubt what my friends all believed. At this time I commenced taking your truly invaluable medicine with little expectation of deriving any benefit from its use You would not receive these lines did I not regard it my duty to state to the afflicted, through you, that my health, in the space of eight months, is fully restored. I attribute it to the use of your Cherry Pectoral

Yours truly, WILLIAM W. SMITH.

Washington, Pa.. April 12, 1848.

Dear Sir:—Feeling that I have been spared from a premature grave, through your instrumentality by the providence of God, I will take the liberty to express to you my gratitude.

A Cough and the alarming symptons of Consumption had reduced me too low to leave me anything like hope, when my physician brought me a bottle of your "Pectoral." It seemed to afford immediate relief, and now in a few weeks time has restored me to sound health.

If it will do for others what it has for me, you are certainly one of the benefactors of mankind.

Sincerely wishing you every blessing, I am

Very respectfully yours,
JOHN J. CLARK,

POETRY.

From the Genius of Youth.

Song of the Temperance Band.

BY MISS MARY A REEVES.

Oh! take away your poison drink,
Our souls abhor the name;
From it let all with horror shrink—
'Tis mixed with terror, sin, and shame.

Take, take away your poison drink,
It truth and reason blinds;
Take it away 'tis but the link,
The chain, which man to slav'ry binds.

Oh! look not on the glowing cup—
A purer drink be ours;
A drink which gushes freely up
In plain, and vale, and woodland bowers.

Pure water, clear and unalloyed,
The source of life and health,
The richest gift by man enjoy'd,
The fount of joy, and peace and wealth.

Oh! take away your poison draught
The bev'rage man has made,
For many with it death have quaffed
And in a drunkard's grave been laid.

We'll choose none but that drink, thro' life,
Which God in goodness made;
Which ere man knew of sin and strife
Flowed in fair Eden's fragrant shade.

Which flows for us as pure as when
It bathed fair Eden's sod;
We'll leave the drink that's made by men
For that created by our God.

"Away! Away!"

BY MRS. E. J. EAMES.

Away! away, with the red, red wine!
Though it sparkle so rich and rare;
Though its taste be pleasant, its flavor fine,
Though the gold rimmed goblet in splendor shine,
Yet, yet of the cup beware!

Away! away, with the red red wine!
Though it run so free and fair,
Through the liquid flow of the sunny vine
Around its rosy spells entwine—
Yet, yet of the cup beware!

Away! away, with the red, red wine!
There is danger and darkness there;
Though it comes transformed to a thing divine,
The scales of the serpent in secret shine,
Oh! then of the cup beware!

Away! away, with the red, red wine!
It brings contention and care!
And sorrows around it their fetters entwine;
There is nothing but grief in the juice of the vine—
Oh! then of the cup beware!

Away! away, with the red, red wine!
Though now it may drown thy care,
Its siren song is sweet and fine—
But its victim to death it will soon consign—
Oh! then of the cup beware!

The boy that hung himself with a string of suckers, is not expected to recover.—One of our doctors was trying to open a vein with a pick-axe.

How Mrs. Walker happened to have Pumpkin Pies.

BY ALICE CAREY, Author of "Clovernook."

Has the childhood of my reader passed in the country? If not, I fear he will not care to read the story I am about to tell, for how can he form any accurate notion of the delights to be found in rural sports, unless he has really ridden the long slender iron weeds for horses, and afterwards leaned them in some convenient fence corner, turning it, by force of a little fancy into the most magnificent stable in the world! How can he appreciate the wonderful zest with which my little rustics partook of their pumpkin pie, plainly and simply made though it was, and without any of the spicy ingredients to which he has been accustomed in similar confections, unless indeed, he has planted the plum seeds in the fragrant May soil, watched the thick oblong leaves as they pushed themselves into the light, and under the influence of shine and shower, straggled out into vines, and gradually unclosed their golden cells, that pleasantly dropt away, leaving the as yet imperfectly formed fruit to grow and ripen into perfection?

And furthermore, I verily think it impossible that he should realize the delicious excellency of the aforementioned pie, unless he gathered the hickory chips, or split into slender strips the oven wood; for the pie, in order to be a pie that was a pie, must have been either baked with glowing hickory coals in his mother's skillet, else in the great bake oven with its arched roof and flat floor of bricks. I am inclined, too, to think the appetite will have been sharpened if he held the long handle of the paddle, while the crust with its nicely crimpt edges was filled, and carefully slipt into some nook between great loaves of bread or pans of pudding.

Then having once or twice removed the lid of the skillet, just to see if the the pie was not burning, will have served as well, perhaps.

To have lived in the city and been sent to the bake-shop with a shilling for the procuring of a pie, is quite another thing.

In the first place it is quite questionable from whence the milk came. Of course I do not mean by this whether the cow were thorough bred, or half, whether she were black or white, or had horns or no horns, for I have seen some very ill looking cows that yielded an excellent quantity of milk—but I mean whether she fed in fresh meadows, and drank of the clear flowing water that bubbled up from the root of some sturdy walnut or slanting thorn, sleeping at night in beds of fresh straw, or fragrant clover, or whether she stood all day in some underground stable, the air of which was pestilence to breathe—fed on steaming mixtures that swine would refuse, till her shaggy hide was tightly stretched over her unnaturally distended body—her limbs stiffened and her udder filled with a sweetish and unwholesome liquid that is not milk.

The reader knows well enough, whether he lives in town or country, that a pie, three parts of which such liquid composed, is not such pie as I am writing about.

Then the eggs require to be fresh, clear and lively—if they were gathered with one's own hands from a nest of a dozen, about which the hens are cackling in exultation or prophecy, so much the better. If they have been carried five hundred, or a hundred, or even fifty miles, till they have become dull and heavy, or perhaps the yoke and white mingled together, they will not or ought not to do.

"O mother, mother, what are you going to do? what are you going to make?—custard, or pudding, or pound cake?"

"Little folks must not ask too many question," said Mrs. Walker, the good woman to whom these questions were addressed, as she scooped a hollow in her bowl of flower that was surrounded with various articles, such as a plate of lard, another of butter, another of eggs—a cup of salt, a bowl of sugar, and a great basin of sweet milk, from which the yellow crust of cream had not been skimmed.

The little folks, thus reproved, stood hard by in silent wonder; they had never seen such an array of good things on the table before—there was a great pot too, steaming over the fire, closely covered so they could not tell what it was, but a delightful fragrance filled the room, that heightened coriosity. The deal table, too, seemed very white—surely they thought it had never been so white before.

"Rock the cradle a minute, Mary dear," said Mrs. Walker, as the baby thrust out its arms with a half cry.

The child hastened to obey, saying as she did so, "O, mother, where did the baby get this pretty dress? Come, Willie and see."

Willie hurried to the cradle, and sure enough, the baby had on the prettiest little slip of pink chintz they had ever seen.—Ebbie never looked so pretty before; his hair had been carefully curled along his white smooth forehead, and the blanket wrapt over his pretty chintz seemed soft and white as a new one, so nicely had it been washed and dried.

But the baby was no sooner quieted than they discovered new marvels—on the bed over which a ragged patched quilt had always been spread, there was a counterpane, snowy white—this article they had sometimes seen before in an old chest in the garret, in which was also kept their mother's wedding gown—a yellow silk, the fashion of which seemed to them very curious, together with an old fashioned bonnet that had been their grandmother's; here, as I said, they had seen the counterpane, but always closely folded, and so yellow and dusty that the white, soft spread they now saw, seemed not the same; but their mother said it was the same, and right well they knew she never told an untruth. The little square windows had been washed that morning, and muslin curtains put up—there had never been any before, only such as the spiders wove.

The floor had been scrubbed and was not quite dry; but the hearth was blue and dry, for the blaze shown brightly over it. In the cupboard, the dishes were arranged in tasteful order, and the spoons and platters so bright that they could see their faces in them.

"And what do you think is in that great roll in the corner," asked the mother, smiling complacently, as she moulded the bread. Eagerly they ran, and unwinding the coarse sack in which it was enveloped, the prettiest carpet they had ever beheld, unrolled itself along the floor—true, it was made of rags which they had helped to cut and sew two years before, but the bright checks of red and yellow made it beautiful; and they had wondered why it had been so long at the weavers.

"Now, Willie, put on your hat and pick up a basket of chips for mother," and taking off the lid of the pot, Mrs. Walker stirred the contents with an iron spoon, vigorously. Willie drew softly near, and saw that a pumpkin was stewing, and putting on his hat was back with the basket of chips in a minute. His mother threw a few under the pot till it steamed again, and tken asked Willie if he could not find her a dozen fresh eggs, telling Mary she had better stay in doors, lest she might hurt her arm; but the child took it from the sling in which it hung, and saying it was almost well, began tying on her bonnet. The mother made no further denial, but telling them to be quick, for she wanted to get her pies baked and her new carpet made before their father should come home, they went out together, in silence and as though they wished their father were not coming home at all, though it was a month since they had seen him. And why should they have felt thus? Let me explain.

They were little children—Mary eight, and Willy ten years old—so they did not precisely understand why, but they knew home was never so pleasant when their father was there, which was usually once a week, though he sometimes staid away for a fortnight, and now he had not been home for a month. To them he was only a severe master, and they dreaded and feared to enter the house when he was at home, as they well might; for he seldom spoke except to reprove, or touched but to thrust them out of the way. Often, too, they saw their mother in tears at such times; but when they asked the reason, she only wept the more. They were not allowed to have their usual sports and pastimes, but the playthings were put by when their father came, and an unnatural restraint imposed upon them during his stay generally from Saturday night till Monday morning. They often saw him drinking from a brown jug which he always brought home with him. Sometimes they saw their mother give him money which she found time to earn, besides doing all the work in the house, tending the cow and garden, and making and mending all their clothes.

Much they wondered why he did not have money, for they often heard their mother say how hard their poor father was at work, and yet he never seemed to have any, nor could they see aught for which he had spent it. He wore old patched clothes, never brought any thing home except the brown jug, and never gave money to the minister as their mother did, for they often heard him swear that he did not.

Nevertheless, they had a sort of love for him, and would have loved them more if they dared.

Why they never had new dresses and shoes, they did not know, except that they were too poor as their mother said.

Mr. Walker was an excellent mechanic and worked in the city near the cabin where his wife and children lived. He obtained good wages, and most of the time worked hard; but the brown jug will suggest to the reader where the earnings went. Not that he drank all he earned, but he was naturally of a generous disposition, and on receiving money, caroused with profligate companions till all was gone, when he returned to his family, cross and empty-handed, save the jug.

The last time he came home, now a month ago, he was fearfully drunk. The children at play in the yard supposed him to be sick, as their mother had sometimes told them, when he walked so unsteadily; they therefore ran to relieve him of the jug, and assist him into the house; but refusing their kind offers with curses, he said he could walk as straight as any body, and striding forward, stumbled against a stone, fell prostrate and broke the jug to atoms. When he arose, which was with difficulty, his terrible rage vented itself on the innocent children in such oaths as I cannot repeat, and in a series of rough kicks and thrusts. Willy was not seriously hurt, but a violent jerk given Mary's arm, pulled it out of joint. A low, broken loss of blood—for he cut his left hand on the broken jug, restored his senses in part, so that he was able to take up the child from the ground; but her face was white as death, and her arm dangled helplessly at her side.

"Great God! I have killed my child!" he exclaimed, as he laid her on the patchwork quilt, and bent over her in an agony of terror and despair: cold drops of sweat standing on his forehead, and his lips blue and trembling.

A frightful picture they presented: the child seemingly dead, and the father with the blood streamiug over his clothes and person, while Willy stood at a little distance wringing his hands and wailing in a frenzy of agony. The neighbors rushed in, the village physician was called, the dislocation adjusted, and the hand of the now really sick man dressed.

Monday morning he was quite restored, except a lame hand, and Mary, with her arm in a sling, was able to sit up. Kindly and gently her father kissed her and the other children, and saying to his wife that he might not come home for a month, set out to walk for the city without asking her for money to ride, as he had previously done.

The weeks went by and little Mary was almost recovered. It was the night before that on which Mr. Walker was expected home—the children were asleep, and the mother sat rocking the cradle and finishing a shirt for her husband, whom she still loved, when there was a rap on the door, and a neighbor on his way from market presented himself, and handing in a basket and throwing a great sack on the floor said—

"Here are things Mr. Walker sent."

The happy surprise would not let the wife sleep; the baby's slip was made that night, and the curtains for the windows, and by noon the next day all the arrangements effected which had so happily surprised the children. At sunset the carpet was on the floor, and the table with its snowy cloth beautifully spread, with fresh bread and butter and pumpkin pies, and I cannot tell what else. With trepidation the mother watched at the window, and at last, when the lamp was alight and the fire aglow, the husband and the father came; there was no jug in his hand, but instead, two or three neat parcels, which he smilingly gave to his wife and children—new dresses and shoes!

"And what did you get for yourself?" asked the happy wife, her eyes full of tears.

"This," he said, putting one arm around her, as he drew a small paper from his pocket.

It was the Temperance Pledge.

A Narrow Escape.

Bayard Taylor, in one of his agreeable letters from the Nile, which appear in the N. Y. Tribune, gives the following account of an incident which came near putting an end to his travels.

"The men were about to pitch my tent near some suspicious looking holes, but I had it moved to a clear, open space, not far distant. In the morning as Achmet was about rolling up my mattrass, he suddenly let it drop and rushed out of the tent, exclaiming, 'O, master come out, come out! There is a great snake in your bed!' I looked, and sure enough, there was an ugly, spotted reptile coiled up in the straw matting. The men heard the alarm, and my servant Ali, immediately came running up with a club. As he was afraid to enter the tent, he threw it to me, and with one blow I put the snake beyond the power of doing harm. It was not more than two feet long, but thick and club-shaped, with a back covered with green, brown, and yellow scales, very hard and bright. The Arabs, who by this time had come to the rescue, said it was a most venomous creature, its bite causing instant death.

'Allah kereem!' (God is merciful!) I exclaimed, and they all heartily responded, 'God be praised!' They said that the occurrence denoted long life to me. Although no birds were to be seen at that time, not ten minutes had elapsed before two large crows appeared and alighted near the snake. They walked around it at a distance, occasionally exchanging glances and turning up their heads in a shrewd manner which plainly said, 'No you don't old fellow! want to make us believe you are dead, do you?' They bantered each other to take hold of it first, and at last the boldest seized it suddenly by the tail, jumped backward two or three feet and then let it fall. He looked at the other, as much as sham!' The other made a similar essay, after which they alternately dragged and shook it, and consulted some time, before they agreed that it was actually dead.—One of them then took it by the tail and sailed off through the air, its scales glittering in the sun as it dangled downward."

The Child of Judgment.

I heard a story the other day, (writes a friend and correspondent of the Knickerbocker,) which amused me. An old lady said—

"When my father moved into a new country, one of his children once told a lie. My mother could not ascertain the culprit, but a lie lay between us."

"Well,' said she, 'you may escape now, but you may be sure that it may be known at some day which of you has told me a lie.'"

"Weeks passed on, but nothing more was said on the subject. My father lived in a log house, which contained one room below and one above. The children slept in a chamber. One night a tremendous wind arose, and at midnight blew off the entire roof of the house. My mother, alarmed at the crash, ran up the ladder, and putting her head into the roofless chamber, cried—

"Children, are you all there?"

"'Yes, mother!' piped a small and terrified voice; 'yes mother, we are all here, and if the day of judgment has come, it was me that told that lie.'"

To how many "children of larger growth," does a similar repentance come, and from similar cases; the still small voice" amid the storm!

How a man may change his Name.

A writer in the Boston periodical called "To-day," referring to an individual mentioned by Mr. Edward Livingston, in his reply to President Jefferson, who left Scotland by the name of Ferguson, and turned up at New Orleans as Peter Gun, gives the true history of the case. The man's real name was Flint, and in some of the German districts in the west his name became translated into Feuerstein, which caused him to be addressed as Ferguson; and afterwards, going to New Orleans among the French, his name was again translated into Pierre a fusil, which, on his return home, was translated back into the barbarous English name, Peter Gun; so that he left home as Flint, and came back as Gun.

Who was the first man that swindled the Greek Slave?

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 22, 1852.

The Grand Section of Indiana,
Will hold its Fifth Annual Session at Indianapolis, commencing on Monday, the 25th of October next, at 10 o'clock, A. M., in Temperance Hall. It is hoped the Sections generally will be represented.

HENRY OHR, G. S.

September 18th, 1852.

To Correspondents.

J. H.—Battle Ground. We think your poetry will not do.

M. G. C.—Reddington. Your article is so badly written we cannot read it—we must therefore decline it.

Back Numbers.

The back numbers of the Chart for the present volume, and especially No. 1, are nearly exhausted. Persons wishing a full file must subscribe soon.

New subscribers will please say if they wish back numbers.

Bro. M. H. Pease.

This Brother is again in our State, and ready for service wherever our cause calls him. He will make his head quarters in this city, and communications to him should be directed here. He is accompanied by a young lad who is an excellent temperance singer. We hope the brethren will keep Bro. Pease active, as his services are needed in every part of the State, and as he is totally blind we hope their arrange- reception wherever he goes.

Mass Meeting.

The mass meeting advertised to come off in this city Sept. 9th, 10th, and 11th, did not come up to our expectations as to numbers but still was a very interesting meeting. All the distinguished speakers advertised disappointed us except Bro. Littlejohn, but we are satisfied the meeting did good.

Bro. L. is still among us, and is holding meetings nearly every night. We hope he may be instrumental in producing a glorious revival.

Rev. A. H. Myers.

The friends of this Brother in our city, and the friends of Temperance generally, will rejoice to learn of his safe arrival in California.

The first notice we saw of him was at a temperance meeting at Santa Cruz, which he opened by prayer and afterwards addressed in a long and excellent speech, which is reported in the Pacific, a newspaper published at San Francisco.

We next find him officiating as Grand Chaplain of the Grand Division of California at its recent session at the same place, July 21st and 22d.

Bro. Myers is always on hand in the temperance enterprise, and he has a large field of usefulness open before him in California, which we doubt not he will improve to its utmost extent.

Postage.

We stated last week that postage on the Chart under the new postage law, would be reduced to twenty-six cents a year.

By the law as published it will be reduced to thirteen cents a year for all subscribers in the State, or sixty-three cents for subscription and postage, on a weekly paper one year. Who will not now subscribe. Come on, our books are still open.

☞ We have received the two first volumes of Morrell's Miscellany, and are very much pleased with them. For a traveler who cannot read a long tale on a short journey, or for families of children, we can certainly recommend the Miscellany. New York, A. Morrell, 25 Park Row—12½ cts. per volume.

Union of Temperance Men.

Nothing so much contributes to the success of en enterprise as union among its friends. Let the enterprize be ever so laudable, and the cause ever so popular, yet without concert of action, labor is in vain. If one half the temperance men act in one direction, and the other half in another, the effect is to neutralize each others' efforts, and both come back to the starting point without progress.

But if union characterize our efforts, we can conquer all opposition. How important then, that we understand what we are doing, and do it as one man. If an election is to be carried, let us all unite and carry it—if a law is to be enforced, let there be no division as to the way to enforce it—if any point, however trivial, is to be gained, union only will carry it—"in union there is strength." If we were united in our political views, how much power could we wield for the spread of temperance?

Look at the gigantic efforts each great political party is now making to convince the world that their candidate for the Presidency is the most favorable to the Catholics. Why is this? Simply because the Catholics are a unit when candidates favor their peculiar views, and for this and this alone, do we now behold the strife for their votes.

The Whigs believe that if they are successful in convincing the Catholics that Gen. Scott is more favorable to their views than Gen. Pierce, that he will receive their votes, and by that means be elected, and the Democrats believe, if they are successful, the success of their candidate is certain.

Now let temperance men take their stand firmly and decidedly, and in concert of action determine to carry their point, and how long will it be before politicians will bow to them as their humble servants, and be the strongest temperance men the world ever beheld?

We are aware that their motives will simply be to obtain office, but still if we obtain their votes for the Maine Law, or any good temperance Law we [illegible] point, and obtain the end we seek.

What party, or what candidate would dare to come out in opposition to Catholicism? and if we were as united as we should be, what candidate would dare oppose us?

If then we are in earnest—if all our actions are not mere child's play, let us maintain our ground in the coming election, voting for no candidate who is not out and out a temperance man.

With Union we are successful—without it we are defeated.

Camp Meeting at Blooming Grove.

A Temperance Camp Meeting was held in Blooming Grove, Franklin County, on Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

Gen. Cary, of Cincinnati, was the principal speaker, and his efforts are highly spoken of. About fifteen hundred people were present. A full Temperance County ticket was nominated, and the following resolutions passed unanimously:

Resolved, That we want a law in Indiana, that will annihilate the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Resolved, That we will use our personal and political influence to procure such a law.

Resolved, That when the whisky interests adjures the ballot-box and ceases to control our primary and general elections, then and not till then will we listen to the exhortation, "not to mingle temperance with politics."

Resolved, That no desire for partizan triumph, political preferment, or hope of pecuniary emolument, shall induce us, by our suffrage to elevate any man to office, the duties of which concern the enactment and enforcement of laws in whose temperance principles we have not entire confidence; and who has not given reasonable assurance that he will give his personal and official influence, in favor of a law entirely prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

☞ We received the notice published below, too late for insertion in our last.—We publish it now, in the hope it may yet do good:

COLUMBUS, Ind, Sep. 13, 1852.

EDITOR OF CHART:—By request of Columbus Division, No. 87, I address you, to ask the insertion in the Chart, a notice of our celebration here on the 23d inst.

Yours in L. P. & F.,

A. B. CHURCH.

Camp Meetings.

The friends of Temperance in Indiana are holding, in favorable localities, protracted meetings in the woods. Last week we attended one at Blooming-Grove Camp Ground, in Franklin county. Many thousands were there, gathered from the surrounding country. The most perfect quiet and order prevailed throughout the meeting, and the interest seemed to increase to the very last hour. Several gamblers, we understood, were there, who came a long distance, expecting to have a rich harvest. They remained but a short time, and went away cursing the whole affair. An excellent band of music and a choir of singers were in attendance, and added much to the interest of the occasion. A large number of clergymen, of different denominations, occupied places on the stand, and some of them gave interesting addresses. We had the pleasure of occupying some six hours, during the two days, in discussing the subject of temperance. We made it a special object of our remarks to enforce the claims of a law of prohibition. There was but one sentiment expressed on this subject. All were convinced that the terrible evils of intemperance never could be arrested, until the distillery fires were put out, the grog shops closed, and the liquor destroyed. The vote of the thousands present was unanimous in favor of a Maine Law. All seemed determined to manifest their principles at the ballot-box, and make their whiggery and democracy subordinate to this great principle. The politicians in Indiana, of all parties may rest assured that their parties will be torn in fragments for the time being, unless they yield to the pressure of popular sentiment on this subject.

As an evidence of the popular feeling, we would mention one fact. We happened to be at Laurel on the evening when the competitors for Governor of the State were there to fulfill a previous engagement, to discuss before the people the great issues in national politics, and canvass their respective claims for the office of Governor. We consented to speak on Temperance at the same hour. Notwithstanding the political excitement, and the anxiety to see and hear the standard bearers of the respective parties, they had but a mere corporal's guard," while our meeting was very numerously attended. The bonds of party are growing weaker every day; and the reflecting, sober-minded men of all parties are fusing and melting together, determined to rid the State of the liquor traffic. The day of deliverance is near at hand in Indiana. [illegible] festering sores like Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, and Dayton to corrupt and derange the functions of the body politic.—There is no State in the Union better prepared to enforce the Maine Law, than the Hoosier State. Public sentiment has driven liquor already from nearly all the first class hotels; and the respectable portion of society, both in town and country, are ready for the great measure.

During our absence, we addressed a very large and attentive auditory at Brookville. Here, as elsewhere, we found a hearty response to the strongest appeals we could utter. Rev. Bro. Goodwin, of the National Division, is located at Brookville. He preaches and prints his sermons in tract form, for distribution among the people. Bro. C. F. Clarkson, also of the National Division, is here, and never fails to speak a word in season in his political paper. He is not afraid of the liquor fraternity, and does not stop to enquire whether it will add to or diminish from the vote of his favorite political party, to speak out boldly against the traffic. In fact, the political press throughout the Hoosier State is far more independent, in this respect, than Ohio. In conclusion, we would say that, to us, it is a feast of "fat things" to attend meetings and mingle with the brethren of Indiana.—Organ of Temperance Reform.

NATIONAL UNION, D. OF T.—At the late session of the National Union, the following officers were elected: Mrs. Eliza Stewart, of Md., W. P. S.; Mrs. Eleanor Cline, of Penn., W. S. A.; Mrs. C. Shurlock, of Penn., W. S. S.; Mrs. M. W. Storrs, of Penn., W. S. T.; Mrs. Mary Hampson, of Md., W. S. Chap.; Mrs. C. S. Jackson, of N. H., W. S. Con.; Mrs. Kent, of R. I., W. S. Sent.

MAN MISSING.—Mr. T. M. Rhodes, of Lynn, shoe dealer, left his place of business in Boston on Saturday afternoon with a large sum of money in his possession, and fears are entertained that he has met with foul play, as nothing has been heard of him since.—Post.

The Arithmetic of War.

It is very difficult to credit or adequately conceive, even, the well attested statistics of war. When such a philosopher as Dick, or such a statesman as Burke, brings before us his estimate of the havoc which this custom has made of human life in all past time, it seems utterly incredible—almost inconceivable; and still more are we staggered by the formidable array of figures employed to denote the sum total of money squandered on human butchery.—Baron Von Reden, perhaps the ablest statician of the age, tells us in a recent work of his, that the continent of Europe alone now has full four millions of men under arms—more than half its population—between the ages of twenty and thirty; and that the support of this immense preparation of war, together with the interest and cost of collection and disbursement on the aggregate of its war debts, amount to more than one thousand millions a year.

Let any man try to form an adequate conception of what is meant by either of these sums, and he will give up the effort in despair. The Baron estimates the war debts now resting on the State of Europe, at 7,418,000,000—how shall we estimate what this enormous sum means? Shall we count? At the rate of sixty dollars a minute ten hours every day, for three hundred days in a year, it would take more than eight hundred years to count the present war debt of Europe alone. Let us look for a moment at what England wasted for war from the revolution in 1688 to the downfall of Napoleon in 1815. The sum total, besides all that she spent upon her war system in the intervals of peace, was $10,150,000,000; and if we add the interest on her war debts contracted in that period, the grand total will reach nearly 17,000,000,000! At sixty dollars a minute for ten hours in a day, or thirty-six thousand dollars a day, and three hundred days in a year, it would require more than one thousand five hundred and seventy-five years to count it all. Add an average of 60,000,000 a year for the current expenses of her war establishment since 1815, an aggregate of 2,800,000,000 in these thirty-five years, and we have a sum total of nearly twenty thousand millions!

No wonder the Old World is reeling and staggering under the burden of such an enormous expenditure for war purposes. Twenty thousand millions of dollars! It is nearly thirty times as much as all the coin now supposed to be in the world; and if these twenty thousand millions were all in silver dollars and placed in rows, it would belt the globe more than one hundred and sixty times.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Millions of Gold, and tons of Gold.

Among the thousands, who read in the newspapers of the millions of gold brought by the steamers from California, there are very few who have any definite idea of how much a million is, either in regard to number or weight. If the amount brought in by the Ohio, the other day, were coined in single dollars, and a person should undertake to count, suppose him to count one dollar per second without intermission for ten hours a day, his laborious job, on the "ten hour system," would last him about three months. Again, as to the weight of gold, it is become familiar to speak of it by the ton, and they tell us that, at the rate it is coming in from California, the amount shipped in five months, from the first of August to the first of January, will reach the weight of seventy tons.

A TOAST.—At the celebration of the 4th of July at Port Jervis, the following sentiment was given by Joseph Gibson:

Intemperance—The great Railroad from Respectability to Ruin, Mankind the only Freight, the Devil its Superintendent, the Board of Excise its Directors, Rumsellers its Engineers and Conductors, Tippling Shops its Cars, Distilleries its Locomotives, Prisons and Insane Asylums its Depots and Station-houses, its Track built on broken hearts and ruined fortunes. With the help of a just God and the Maine Law, we'll annul the Charter, discharge the Engineers and Conductors, reverse the steam and save the freight.

The fall election is coming on. Free whiskey and cold dinners will soon bless the hungry and thirsty yeomanry. Dirty children will please be washed so that the candidates can kiss 'em. Temperance men who are afraid of a union of temperance and politics, will see that the right men are selected to pay out the "fund" for liquor. Vox Populi, Vox Dei!—Cayuga Chief.

There is a woman in this county who has drank fifty gallons of liquor since January last. If the Maine Law passes and this market stopped, there will probably be a fall in the price of coarse grains! The woman does right. Carpenter's Distillery must be patronized. Niles licenses the traffic.

"Drink and be mad then, 'tis your country bids!"

Items of News.

The citizens of Alexandria held a Temperance meeting a few days ago, and adopted resolutions approving of the Maine Liquor Law.

It is stated in some of our western exchanges that the grave of the late President Harrison is covered with weeds, and the fences surrounding it are broken down.

A Pittston rumseller, named Cookson, was convicted before Judge Palmer of this city, on Monday, and fined $10 and costs, which he paid.

Edward A. Bradford, of New Orleans, has been nominated by the President to fill the vacancy in the Supreme Court occasioned by the death of Judge McKinley.

Mr. Spencer, a baggage-master on the Maine Railroad, while on top of a car of an outward train from Boston, was struck on the head by a bridge, between South Reading and Reading, and instantly killed.

A Correspondent of the Tribune announces the death, at Kensington, of one Catharine Shorter, by intemperance. Better to have died "Shorter" than to have lived longer, under such circumstances.

Some farmers in the vicinity of Chicago have lost twenty or thirty head of cattle by a strange and fatal disease, which kills them in a few hours. The nature of the scourge is not known; the lungs and heart are found to be in a diseased condition.

A little son of Asa Hatch, of Stratford, N. H., was suddenly killed a few days since, in the haying field. He was playing round a loaded cart, and accidentally falling, one of the wheels passed over his head.

A hat formerly worn by the Emperor Napoleon, was recently sold by auction, at the Chateau Thierry, and brought the sum of eight hundred dollars. It belonged to a person the name of Evered, one of his valets de chambre.

A man named Ordway, broke into the house of Dr. Adams, in Oakham, Mass., and stole a jug of paragoric, supposing it to be rum. The next morning he was found in the doctors barn, and died in a few minutes after his removal. His fidelity was rewarded by—his death!

In Boston, last week, an affectionate father was found by the night watch, staggering home armed with a heavy Butcher's cleaver, with which he said he "intended to smash his son, who had staid out late at night!" He was taken in charge.

Professor Kingsley, a member of the faculty of Yale College, died on Tuesday, the 31st ult., at his residence in New Haven, Conn. He graduated from the above institution in 1799, and has been connected with it, in the department of classical literature, for the last half a century.

A man named Gibson has undertaken to walk 1200 miles in 1100 hours, at Hoboken, N. Y. He has been walking a week, evidently without much fatigue, and is confident of completing his task, and winning the six thousand dollars said to be pending the result.

One hundred and fifty persons died in New York within the past year, of delirium tremens. There were nine murders caused by rum, and nearly ten thousand five-day commitments for drunkenness during the same time. These are powerful arguments in favor of Legal suasion.

John Davis, 35 years old, temporary conductor on the Fitchburg cattle train, was found dead on the track at Cambridge, on Tuesday, with both legs cut off, and his head mangled. It is supposed that he was struck by a bridge. He resided in Charlestown, and leaves a wife and five children.

ALTERED BILLS.—One dollar bills of the Bank of the State of Maine, altered to tens, have made their appearance. The ones have the bust of a female in the centre, with a female figure at each end; the genuine tens have the portrait of Zackary Taylor in the centre, with a ship under sail on the left end of the bill.

The Exchanges bring us the following choice package of horror: "The wife of James Mole, of Alleghany County, Maryland, was tried last week, for the murder of her husband, the jury bringing in a verdict of 'justifiable homicide.' It appeared that the deceased was pursuing his children with a loaded gun, and his wife interfering for their protection, he levelled the gun at her. Seizing an axe, in self-defence, she knocked him down, and with a second blow upon his throat killed him."

On Saturday last, in Boston, a man ordered his wife to go out and purchase some rum at a groggery near by. She refused to go, and he then went himself. Having drank pretty freely, he returned for the avowed purpose of beating his wife, but she having fled to a place of safety, he went into a neighbor's house, threw a little boy out of the window, and was committing other depredations when the watch took him under their fostering care.

Another Victory Won!

VEVAY, SWITZ'D CO., Sept. 10.

Hail! readers of the Chart, and listen to the news from Vevay. We once had here a man who carried on a sort of bakery, and sold, as he said, nothing but port wine. Last week he was brought before a justice, charged with retailing something stronger than wine, without license, and was fined pretty heavily—not less than $100. It also appeared that he went to Bennington, a few miles from here, to a political gathering, and sold some of the same article, which proved to be whisky, and the citizens of that place took it to heart, and got some indictments against him, which would have struck him heavier than the other, but somehow or other he got wind of their movements, and having but little left except his precious person, and not liking to risk that in the hands of justice, he thought it best to betake himself to flight, which he did forthwith.—Thus you see that by one bad adventure of his, we got rid of one doggery, and also struck terror into the ranks of the others, who are still violating the law in a clandestine manner. I hope ere long to have the pleasure of saying that Temperance has finally triumphed over Intemperance, and that the cause of all mankind is in a prospering condition.

Yours fraternally, J. H.

MACKSVILLE, Sept. 13, 1852.

MR. EDITOR: * * * The temperance cause is beginning to look up somewhat in this vicinity; the old friends of the cause are waking up, and are beginning to act. Yesterday we had a meeting preparatory to organizing, in order that we might go into the field better prepared for united and energetic action. We had a good number out, all things considered, and all seemed determined to rally into the ranks. I cannot refrain from giving you a copy of the preamble and resolutions which were passed, and of which you can dispose as you see proper:

WHEREAS, Past observation has proved that moral suasion alone is not sufficient to stop the ravages of intemperance, so long as the shield of the law is thrown around the traffic in intoxicating drinks;

And whereas, Past legislation has proved that it is a traffic whose baneful influence not to be assuaged by palliative or restrictive laws, except those laws amount to entire prohibition; therefore

Resolved, That in future we will vote for no man for any responsible office, who is not publicly pledged to support all the important features of the Maine law.

Resolved, That while we take this decided and important stand, we do it not in passion, nor in a spirit of ill-will for our opponents, but from a firm conviction of Christian duty; and that in all our efforts to advance the temperance cause, we hope to be governed by feelings of kindness and good-will to all.

Only give us enough such resolutions as these, practically carried out at the ballot box, and Indiana shall have the Maine law, and no mistake.

By the way, it was well thought of in our last Legislature to pass that law against watering whisky, brandy, &c., as I suppose a great many of them were fond of "the critter," and they wanted the pure stuff—none of their milk-and-water cider, but their true tea, right from the mint! Who blames them? I don't. But I must close.

Yours, as ever, T. ADDINGTON.

CARROLLTON, KY., Sept. 9, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I hope you will pardon an humble individual for seeking to intrude himself into the columns of your excellent paper; but as I have not seen any notice of our loved Kentucky in your paper, I feel disposed to give you some account of how we are getting along in our town and vicinity. Carrollton is indeed a beautiful site, and the citizens are as urbane, kind, and hospitable, as can be found anywhere. We have some good churches, and have just closed a very interesting meeting, seventy-seven having been added to the Methodist Church. We have one Division of the Sons of Temperance, which is in excellent condition, and is exercising a healthy influence in our town and vicinity; seventeen were initiated during the last quarter. The members are sterling men—just such as would mount a breach, command a forlorn hope, or stand with Leonidas at Thermopylæ.

Allow me to give you an incident, in which one of our number was an actor; it should have been recorded long ago. Before the brother alluded to joined the Sons, he was as low as drunkards get to be; he followed fishing in the Ohio and Kentucky rivers for a living—a pretty hard living at that. A few weeks after he became a Son, he was out on the Ohio river, at the time of the great flood of 1847, and caught a full barrel of whisky adrift—the real stuff itself. Here was a temptation that but few men could have the nerve to withstand; he had but recently been reclaimed, and was poor at that. As a good Son, he could not use it, neither sell it, nor give it away. He brought it to the shore, made a fair investigation as to its dangerous qualities, condemned and executed the monster according to the most rigorous interpretation of the Maine law. Many of the friends of the culprit begged for the life of the victim, and when it was saying good, good, as it escaped from the bung into the river, they begged for some of the "cratur," but not a drop would he give them. He knew that "it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." That man stands firm to this day, and is now the W. P. of Carrollton Division, No. 60, and for the last five years has not been absent from a meeting, when he was at home and well.

Yours, in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,
WILLIAM FLYNN.

NORTHFIELD, IND., Sept. 14.

BRO. WOODWARD: It may be interesting to the friends of temperance to know something from this quarter on that subject.—I can say that the temperance ball is rolling triumphant over all opposition. We organized a Division in our town on the 17th of August, numbering twelve charter members. Since that time we have had one addition, and have a prospect of many more. We intend to have a mass meeting on the 16th of October, which we have no doubt will do much good. We have one doggery in our place, but it looks very pale, and will doubtless "peg out" before a great while.

Yours, in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,
W. A. TIPTON.

Spiceland Temperance Meeting.

The meeting convened agreeably to previous notice on the third of ninth month, (September,) 1852, and was organized by appointing Dr. E. P. AUSTIN President, James P. Antrim, Vice President, and Jeremiah Griffin and M. C. Gordon, Secretaries. The object of the meeting was stated by the President.

On motion of E. Griffin, a committee of three, S. W. Pearson, E. Pleas, and S. Poarch, was appointed to draft resolutions.

Jason W. Macy addressed the meeting, and was followed by Elihu Griffin, of Wayne county, who demonstrated clearly that it is the imperative duty of every temperance man to vote for such men only in the coming election, for all offices in which their official action will bear upon the law, as are pledged to advocate the Maine law.

The following preamble and resolutions were then presented by the committee:

WHEREAS, The use of spirituous liquors has had and still has a greater influence upon the human family than all other vices, as it poisons the mind, diseases the brain, sows the seed of disease in our constitutions, and does not withdraw its infernal influence until its subject is worn out by sickness and pain, and sinks into a dishonorable and untimely grave; and as it perverts the order of nature, and the intention of a wise Creator, by deadening the moral feeling, destroying the inner man, and exciting the animal passions to low scenes of rioting, bloodshed, and murder, with all their horrid abominations, making widows and orphans objects of scorn and contempt in the eyes of a cold and unfriendly world; therefore

Resolved, That we hail with pleasure the agitation that is springing up among temperance reformers, and that we cordially unite with such everywhere, in waging a bold and exterminating warfare against the traffic in intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and in considering the dealers not worthy the fellowship of Christians or the patronage of men, and that they should be held in contempt and derision until they abandon their wicked practice.

Resolved, That the friends of temperance can place no degree of confidence in the pleas of the rumseller for continuing his infernal practice.

Resolved, That we, as citizens of the State of Indiana, are decidedly in favor of the Legislature enacting a law similar to the Maine liquor law.

On motion of J. Macy, the foregoing preamble and resolutions were taken up, separately discussed, and unanimously adopted.

On motion of J. Griffin, the following resolutions were read and adopted:

Resolved, As expressive of the sense of this meeting, that the inhabitants of this town uniformly disapprove of the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and regret that we have not the authority by law wholly to exclude it from our town, except for medical and mechanical purposes.

On motion of Wm. Edmundson, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we will not support any man for office who is not a thorough-going temperance man, and who will not knowingly advocate the same on all proper occasions.

On motion of M. C. Gordon,

Resolved, That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be sent to the editors of our county papers, to the True Democrat, and to the Temperance Chart, and that they be requested to publish the same.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

E. P. AUSTIN, Pres't.

For the Temperance Chart.

BOONVILLE, Ind., Sept. 10th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—You would no doubt be pleased to hear how the good cause is going on away down in this portion of Southern Indiana. There has been as much or perhaps more opposition to the temperance cause in general, and to the Sons in particular, in this county, as in any other community, while the first total pledge existed either in the form of the Warrick County Temperance Society, or as the Washingtonian Society, the charge against us was you are "running the thing into the ground—there is no use for so much ado about the evils of intemperance, what do you want with ladies and children in your societies, they are not drunkards, it will do very well for men, especially for those who are addicted to intoxication, but let sober men, women, and children alone." But lo and behold, how soon the tune is changed, just as soon as the "Sons" were organized then the hue and cry was raised against us that we were entirely too exclusive, why don't you admit ladies and children into your divisions, &c. Such in part has been the objections from the first temperance movement to the present time, but we have moved on the even tenor of our way despite the objections, taunts, and sneers of all those who may oppose; prejudice is fast giving away, and our divisions have almost continual accessions, the cry is still they come, last night we had four propositions for membership, and what is very gratifying to all friends of temperance, a large proportion are from the ranks of those who were intemperate, and young men, many of them not of lawful age.—With present prospects it will not be long until dram drinking in this community will be among the things that were.

We will have a Temperance Camp-Meeting on the 22d and 23d of this month. Brother Pease has been written to for to attend the meeting, if you should know his whereabouts please send him down, he is very popular here as a temperance lecturer, and will be joyfully received. I will endeavor to inform you of the proceedings of the meeting in due time, you can make what use you think proper with this communication, be assured it will give no offence whether you do or do not publish it, as my object in writing is to keep you posted up with regard to the great cause of temperance in this region.

Yours in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,
V. K. PHAR.

WHAT BARNUM AND JENNY LIND MADE.—The following note, from a reliable source, gives us the sum total (in round numbers) that the two distinguished personages, whose names head this article, cleared over all expenses during their connection. It seems that they averaged a trifle over $3000 a piece on each concert:—Musical World and Times.

EDITORS MUSICAL WORLD: Not long since, Mr. Barnum exhibited to me the account current between himself and Jenny Lind, and a truly marvelous document it is. He ought to publish it entire, for the astonishment and edification of the world generally and singers particularly. According to the footings-up and balances, the parties received the following handsome dividends, after all expenses were paid:

Jenny Lind - - -	$302,000
P. T. Barnum, - -	308,000
Total, - - - -	$610,000

I give the even thousands; not remembering the units, tens, and hundreds.—They are of little consequence.

Truly yours, ——.

AN ORDINATION OF THE OLDEN TIME.—Half a century ago, there was more religion than there is now, but an "ordination" was much more of a jollification in those days than it is at present. The Providence Journal publishes the following bill of supplies furnished to the ordaining council at the ordination of the Rev. James Wilson, over the Congregational Church, Providence, in 1793:—

1793. Congregational Sociey to——Dr.

A Clock that is a Clock.

The great clock in the Cathedral at Strasburg (Europe) has been described, by one who particularly examined it; as follows: The letter was written by a traveller who was in that country during their political difficulties a few years since.

"The priests and military have retired, and I am now sitting in a chair facing the gigantic clock—from the bottom to the top not less than 100 feet, and about 30 feet wide and 15 deep. Around me are many strangers, waiting to see the working of this clock when it strikes the hour of noon. Every eye is upon the clock.—It now wants five minutes to twelve. The clock has struck, and the people are gone, except a few whom the sexton, or head man with a wand and sword, is conducting around the building. The clock is struck in this way: the dial is some twenty feet from the floor, on each side of which is a cherub, or little boy with a mallet, and over the dial there is a small bell. The cherub on the left strikes the first quarter, and on the right the second quarter. Some fifty feet over the dial, in a large niche, is a huge figure of Time, a bell in his left, a scythe in his right hand. In front stands a figure of a young man with a mallet, who strikes the third quarter on the bell in the hand of Time, and then glides, with a slow step, round behind Time; out comes an old man, with a mallet, and places himself in front of him. As the hour of 12 comes, the old man raises his mallet and deliberately strikes twelve times on the bell, that echoes through the building, and is heard round the region of the church. Then the old man glides slowly behind father Time, and the young man comes on readily to perform his part as time comes round again. Soon as the old man has struck 12 and disappeared, another set of machinery is put in motion, some twenty feet higher still. It is thus: there is a high cross with an image of Christ on it. The instant twelve has struck, one of the apostles walks out from behind, comes in front, turns, facing the cross, bows, and walks round to his place. As he does so, another comes out in front, turns, bows, and passes in; so twelve apostles, figures large as life, walk round, bow, and pass on. As the last appears, an enormous cock, perched on the pinnacle of the clock, slowly flaps its wings, stretches forth its neck, and crows three times, so loud as to be heard outside the church to some distance, and so naturally as to be mistaken for a real cock. Then all is as silent as death. No wonder this clock is the admiration of Europe. It was made in 1500, and has performed these mechanical wonders ever since, except about fifty years, when it was out of repair.—Watchtowes.

When a young prince, Cyrus, of Persia, visited his uncle, Cyaxares, and to show that there was no merit in being a good cup-bearer, took the cup from Sacas, who attended in that capacity. Astyages admitted his skill, but laughingly observed, "That the young waiter has forgotten one thing."

"What have I forgotten?" asked Cyrus.

"To taste the wine before you handed it to me and your mother."

"I did not forget that, but I did not wish to swallow poison."

"Poison!" exclaimed the king.

"Yes, there must be poison in the cup, for they who drink of it sometimes grow giddy and sick, and fall down."

"Then you never drink in your country?" inquired Astyages.

"Yes, but we only drink to satisfy thirst, and then a little water suffices."

A drunken man, named Cyrus Gorton, was run over by the cars, on the Western Railroad, on Saturday of last week, and instantly killed. A bottle of liquor in one of his pockets showed that he was one of rum's victims. It was not known that any one was run over, till the brakeman, alarmed at seeing small stones flying upon the platform, signaled the engineer to stop, when the poor fellow was found, caught under the tender. The back part of his head was gone—his brains torn away—and his entrails drawn out, by being dragged three-fourths of a mile. He had been coon-hunting, and was returning with a companion about 11 o'clock at night, when he laid down on the track in a drunken stupor, and could not be forced to leave.

On Thursday of last week, as the evening express train from New York, was approaching Bellows Falls, a man was seen staggering along on the track. The engineer reversed his engine, whistled, and did all he could to arouse him or stop the train, but without success, and the engine struck him in the back, throwing him off the track and killing him instantly. In his pocket, unbroken, was found a bottle of brandy, accursed cause of his death, and an eternity of misery in another world! Does not this speak loudly in favor of the Maine Law?

☞ A correspondent says, that when the law says he can't marry his grandmother, or his aunt, or his wife's mother, it makes an ass of itself, for when a man marries now a days he marries the whole family.

An Efficacious Chastisement.

A most exemplary wife had the misfortune to wed a husband who, shortly after their marriage, became almost a sot. He, not a hard hearted, nor an unjust man, but like numerous others, could not resist temptations, and whenever asked to drink, had not the moral courage to say "no." His wife, whom he really loved, expostulated and reasoned, until he promised never to taste liquor again; but as soon as thrown into company, his resolutions were forgotten, and he fell into his old and degrading habit. She wept bitter, bitter tears, and began to despair of ever weaning him from his monstrous vice, especially as she had implored one of his false friends in vain, not to lead her husband into evil company. Regularly, however, the corrupting associate called, and called, and despite of her tears, solicited her husband to visit such and such a place. The infatuated man could not resist, and went and came in a beastly state of intoxication.

The wretched woman, wrought to frenzy by the seeming ruin that awaited her, determined upon some plan to free her leige-lord from the importunities of his deceitful companion. One night, while her husband was asleep, she heard the well-known foot step, a knock at the door, and, opening it carefully, with a stout whip in her hand, seized the unwelcome visitant by the hair of the head, and inflicted upon his body a chastisement of the most severe character. As soon as she released him he ran off, and has never since returned to sow thorns in the domestic patarre of her once peaceful home. Her husband was so impressed with her strength of mind and courage, that he resolved to be as much of a man as she, and has since been abstemious and happy.

This is a fact, and happened in our city not a month past. The parties, however, are not generally known.—Cin. Com.

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

☞ A member, in alluding to the bill for the benefit of married women before the Missouri Legislature, asked if it would not be better for the members to do something for the benefit of single ladies, and not trouble themselves with other men's wives.

An elderly maiden lady writes to a friend: "A widower with ten children has proposed, and I have accepted him. This is about the number I should have been entitled to, if I had been married at the proper time, instead of being cheated into a nonentity."

A gallant wag was lately sitting beside his beloved, and being unable to think of anything else to say, asked her why she was like a tailor.

"I don't know," said she, with a pouting lip, "unless it's because I'm sitting beside a goose."

PROSPECTUS OF THE TEMPERANCE CHART,

THE OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE GRAND DIVISION, S. OF T. OF INDIANA.

VOLUME II.

Several attempts have been made by the Grand Division of this State to establish a permanent temperance paper in this State, which from various causes have heretofore failed. In the spring of 1851, the Grand Division resolved to take the paper under its own patronage, and the plan has succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations. The paper is now permanently established, and will after the commencement of the 2d volume, be published weekly. It will continue to advocate the cause of temperance in its broadest sense, embracing all the various organizations having for their object the entire destruction of the liquor traffic.

TERMS:

The Chart will be published weekly, on good paper, and new type, on the following terms:

Single subscribers, 75 cents per year.

Clubs of ten or more to one post office, 50 cents per year.

Payable in all cases in advance.

This is the cheapest Temperance paper in the world! It will be published by Bro. John H. Ohr, with whom the Grand Division has made a contract, and edited as heretofore by the Grand Scribe. A limited number of advertisements will be inserted, at the usual rates.

All letters relating to the paper, and all communications, should be addressed, post paid, to C. Woodward, G. S., Indianapolis, Ind.

All D. G. W. P.'s, and W. P.'s are, by a resolution of the Grand Division, authorized agents of the Chart.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

REAL ESTATE AND GENERAL AGENCY OFFICE,

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.

UNDER THE CONTROL OF W. M'K. SCOTT, Attorney & Counsellor at Law, and Notary Public.

ATTENTION is respectfully solicited to the following facts and statements in regard to the above Agency;

Indianapolis being the centre and Capital of the State, accessible from all parts by means of the numerous railroads which concentrate within her borders—filled constantly with strangers from all parts of the country—presents one of the most available cities in the West, for the successful carrying out an Agency, such as below described:

The attention of the Agency will be devoted,

First—To the collection of debts and the payment of Taxes for non-residents in any county in the State. Also, the redemption of Lands sold for Taxes, sale, purchase or lease of Lands, purchase of adverse claims, examination and perfection of Title, &c., &c.

To give efficiency to this most important branch of the Agency, the services of an energetic and responsible Attorney in each county of the State has been secured. This, in connection with the fact that the undersigned is himself a practical Lawyer, and has had several years' experience in this branch of the Agency in Ohio, affords a full guarantee that all business in this department will be attended to with fidelity and dispatch.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Of all the numerous medicines extant, (and some of them valuable) for the cure of pulmonary complaints, nothing has ever been found which could compare in its effects with this Preparation. Others cure sometimes; but at all times and in all diseases of the lungs and throat where medicine can give relief, this will do it. It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe in accordance with the directions. We do not advertise for the information of those who have tried it but those who have not. Families that have known its value will not be without it, and by its timely use, they are secure from the dangerous consequences of Coughs and Colds which neglected, ripen into fatal consumption.

The Diploma of the Massachusetts Institute was awarded to this preparation by the Board of Judges in September, 1847; also, the Medals of the three great institutes of Art, in this country; also the Diploma of the Ohio Institute at Cincinnati, has been given to the Cherry Pectoral, by their Government in consideration of its extraordinaty excellence and usefulness in curing affections of the Lungs and Throat.

Read the following opinion founded on the long experience of the eminent Physician of the Port and City of

St. Johns, May 8, 1851.

Dr. J. C. Ayer:—Five years trial of your CHERRY PECTORAL in my practice, has proven what I foresaw from its composition, must be true, that it eradicates and cures the colds and coughs to which we, in this section are peculiarly liable.

I think its equal has not yet been discovered, nor do I know how a better remedy can be made for the distempers of the Throat and Lungs.

J. J. BURTON, D., F. R. S.

See what it has done on a wasted constitution, not only in the following cases, but a thousand more:

Sunbury, Jan. 24th, 1851.

Dr. Ayer:—In the month of July, I was attacked by a violent diarrhœa in the mines of California. I returned to San Francisco. My diarrhœa ceased, but was followed by a severe cough—and much soreness. I finally started for home, but received no benefit from the voyage. My cough continued to grow worse, and when I arrived in New York, I was at once marked by my acquaintances as a victim of consumption. I must confess that I saw no sufficient reason to doubt what my friends all believed. At this time I commenced taking your truly invaluable medicine with little expectation of deriving any benefit from its use. You would not receive these lines did I not regard it my duty to state to the afflicted, through you, that my health, in the space of eight months, is fully restored. I attribute it to the use of your Cherry Pectoral.

Yours truly, WILLIAM W. SMITH.

Washington, Pa., April 12, 1848.

Dear Sir:—Feeling that I have been spared from a premature grave, through your instrumentality by the providence of God, I will take the liberty to express to you my gratitude.

A Cough and the alarming symptons of Consumption had reduced me too low to leave me anything like hope, when my physician brought me a bottle of your "Pectoral." It seemed to afford immediate relief, and now in a few weeks time has restored me to sound health.

If it will do for others what it has for me, you are certainly one of the benefactors of mankind.

Sincerely wishing you every blessing, I am

Very respectfully yours,
JOHN J. CLARK,
Rector of St. Peter's Church.

POETRY.

From the Maine Temperance Watchman.

Temperance Harrow.

Jo'—yoke the team, said neighbor Snug,
And chain them to the harrow:
And yonder in the granite field,
Go scratch and make it mellow.

Away drives Jo—"gee up old star."
And you, "old buck, good fellow;"
Among the rocks and stumps he drove,
To scratch and make it mellow.

But soon the rocks and stumps resist,
And overturn the harrow;
Teeth sometimes up and sometimes down
Would never make it mellow.

So neighbor Snug, to gain his point—
A shrewd contriving fellow,
Like neighbor Smith, said he, can make
Improvements on the harrow.

Then Smith forged teeth, which stood erect,
Straight up upon the harrow;
No matter then which side was up
To scratch the ground so fallow.

So former temperance laws of Maine,
Were like Snug's simple harrow;
Which clods and rocks and stumps upset,
And left the ground still fallow.

The present law has double teeth,
Just like Snug's double harrow;
And if applied through all the States,
Would do the work most thorough.

The thousand rockish stumplike shops
And stores, for vending sorrow;
Forthwith would sure be overturned,
By this great temperance harrow,

Then seeds of temperance springing up,
Would grow quite rank to-morrow;
And neighbor Smith would surely have
Rich premiums for his harrow.

What Maine has now so well begun,
Followed by Minnesota,
May all our sister States adopt,
Nor fail in one iota.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Fate of a Drunkard.

BY DICKENS.

When the dim and misty light of a winter's morning penetrated into the narrow court, and struggled through the begrimed window of the wretched room, Warden awoke from his heavy sleep, and found himself alone. He rose and looked around him, the old flock mattrass on the floor was undisturbed; everything was just as he remembered to have seen it last, and there was no sign of any one save himself, having occupied the room during the night. He had enquired of the other lodgers and of the neighbors; but his daughter had not been seen or heard of. He rambled through the streets, and scrutinized each wretched face, among the crowds that thronged them, with anxious eyes. But his search was fruitless, and he returned to the garret when night came on, desolate and weary.

For many days he occupied himself in the same manner, but no traces of his daughter did he meet with, and no word of her reached his ears. At last he gave up the pursuit as hopeless, and long thought of the probability of her leaving him, and endeavoring to gain her bread in quiet elsewhere. She had left him at last to starve alone. He ground his teeth and cursed her.

He begged his bread from door to door. Every half-penny he could wring from the pity or credulity of those to whom he addressed himself was spent in the old way. A year passed over his head; the roof of a jail was the only one that had sheltered him for many months. He slept under arches and in brick fields, anywhere where there was some warmth or shelter from the cold and rain. But in the last stage of poverty, disease, and houseless want he was a drunkard still.

At last, one bitter night, he sunk down on a door step faint and ill. The premature decay of vice and profligacy had worn him to the bone. His cheeks were hollow and livid; his eyes were sunken, and their sight was dim. His legs trembled beneath his weight, and a cold shiver ran through every limb.

And now the long forgotten scenes of a misspent life crowded thick and fast upon him. He thought of the time he had a home, a happy cheerful home—and of those who peopled it, and flocked about him then, until the forms of his elder children seemed to rise up from the grave, and stand about him—so plain, so clear, and so distinct they were, that he could touch and feel them. Looks that he had long forgotten, were fixed upon him once more; voices long hushed in death, sounded in his ears like the music of village bells.—But it was only for an instant.

The rain beat heavily upon him, and cold and hunger were knawing at his heart again.

He rose and dragged his feeble limbs a few paces further. The street was silent and empty—the few passers by, at that late hour, hurried quickly on, and his tremulous voice was lost in the violence of the storm. The heavy chill again struck through his frame, and his blood seemed to stagnate beneath it. He coiled himself up in a projecting doorway and tried to sleep.

But sleep had fled from his dull and glazed eyes. His mind wandered strangely, but he was awake and conscious. The well known shout of drunken mirth sounded in his ear—the glass was at his lips—the board was covered with rich food—they were before him, he could see them all—he had but to reach his hand and take them—and though the illusion was reality itself, he knew that he was sitting alone in the deserted street, watching the rain drops as they pattered on the stones, and that there were none to care for or help him.

Suddenly he started up in the extremity of terror. He had heard his own voice shouting in the night air; he knew not what or why. Hark! a groan! Another! His senses were leaving him—half-formed and incoherent words burst from his lips; and his hands sought to tear and lacerate his flesh. He was going mad, and he shrieked for help till his voice failed him.

He raised his head and looked up the long dismal street. He recollected that out-casts like himself, condemned to wander day and night in those dreadful streets, had sometimes gone distracted with their loneliness. He remembered to have heard many years before, that a homeless wretch had once been found in a solitary corner, sharpening a rusty knife to plunge into his own heart, preferring death to that endless, weary wandering to and fro. In an instant his resolve was taken; his limbs received new life; he ran quickly from the spot, and paused not for breath until he reached the river side.

He crept softly down the steep stone stairs that led from the commencement of Waterloo bridge, down to the water's level. He crouched into a corner, and held his breath as the patrol passed. Never did a prisoner's heart throb with the hope of liberty and life half so eagerly as did that of the wretched man at the prospect of death. The watch passed close to him, but he remained unobserved; and after waiting until the sound of footsteps had died away in the distance, he cautiously descended and stood beneath the gloomy arch that forms the landing place from the river.

The tide was in, and the water flowed at his feet. The rain had ceased, the wind was lulled and all was for the moment, still and quiet—so quiet that the rippling of the water against the barges that were moored there was distinctly audible to his ears. The stream stole languidly and sluggishly on. Strange and fantastic forms rose to its surface, and beckoned him to approach; dark gleaming eyes peered from the water, and seemed to mock his hesitation, while hollow murmurs from behind urged him onward. He retreated a few paces, took a short run, a desperate leap and plunged into the river.

Not five minutes had passed when he rose to the water's surface, but what a change had taken place in that short time in all his thoughts and feelings! Life, life, in any form; poverty, misery, starvation, anything but death. He fought and struggled with the water that closed over his head, and screamed in agonies of terror. The curse of his own son rang in his ears. The shore—but one foot of dry ground—he could almost touch the step. One hand's breadth nearer, and he was saved—but the tide bore him onward, under the dark arches of the bridge and he sank to the bottom.

Again he rose, and struggled for life.—For one instant—for one brief instant—the buildings on the river's bank, the lights on the bridge under which the current had borne him, the black water and the fast flying clouds, were distinctly visible—once more he sunk and again he rose—bright flames of fire shot up from earth to heaven, and reeled before his eyes, whilst the water thundered in his ears, and stunned him with the furious roar.

A week afterwards the body was washed ashore some miles down the river, a swollen and disfigured mass. Unrecognized and unpitied, it was borne to the grave—there it has long since mouldered away.

Safety of Railroads versus Steamboats.

The conclusion cannot be shut out from the mind of any man, that steamboat travelling, in comparison with railroads, is triply dangerous, and wherever the railroad can be chosen in place of the steamboat, it is recklessly criminal not to choose such a means of conveyance. We defy any person to refute the statement, that more lives have been lost on steamboats, in these United States, during the past three months, than have been lost on all the railroads in our country since the first rail was laid, and that is more than twenty years ago. Many people here profoundly calculated on the certain safety of our North River boats; "they were all low pressure," they said (a mistake, however, many supposing that all condensing engines have low pressure boilers,) "consequently there was nothing to fear," but by the burning of one steamboat, and the explosion of the boiler of another, no less than one hundred and ten of our fellow creatures have lost their lives between the cities of New-York and Albany in three weeks. The late accident was that of the steamboat Reindeer, which burst a plate of her boiler, by which thirty persons came to an untimely end. There was no carelessness nor defective construction in any part of the boat, so far as human eye could judge; of this we are fully convinced by the testimony of witnesses. The cause of the accident was a bad plate of boiler iron—it had a flaw in its heart. The boiler was made of what is called the best Pennsylvania iron; who was the maker of the iron, we cannot tell, but this we do know, that it is the second explosion from the the same cause, a bad boiler plate—which has taken place on New York steamboats this summer. Let us have the names of the makers by all means, so that the public may be made aware of those who make bad work for the endangering of precious lives. In view of the great distruction of life, by steamboat traveling, and even taking into consideration the new Law recently passed by Congress, for the better protection of life, we cannot but advise all who can, to choose the railroad as the safest means of travel, in preference to the steamboat. Of course there have been and will be railroad accidents, but surely, if the past is of any use at all—if we can place any reliance on past eventsfor future guidance—the railroad is assuredly by far the safest medium of modern travel.—Scientific American.

In a town in Connecticut, a loafer was brought before a justice for being drunk in the street—the fine being one dollar for each offence. He paid the fine, and was arraigned again the next day.

"No you don't judge!" said he, "I knows the law—one dollar for each offence and this the same old drunk."

Curtailing Expenses.

Mr. Perkins had laid the "Continent" down, that he had been engaged in reading to his charming young wife, as she sat repairing and sewing buttons on a small garment. Mr. P. had been unusually thoughtful during the past few days, and now he sat with his chin in rest, apparently in deep abstraction, looking at, without seeing, the delicate little hands of Mrs. P. as she plied her needle. His wife, observing his manner, desired, as all good wives do, to know his thoughts.

"Well, my dear," said he at length "I have been endeavoring to devise a plan whereby we might in some degree lessen our annual expenses for house-keeping.—The fact is, my dear," continued Mr. P. "every article we require is wretchedly high at present, and it is with extreme difficulty that I manage to get along. I have thought, therefore, that if it met your approbation, we would adopt certain measures of reform, as they say in government matters, which would bring our expenses more within the compass of our finances."

"Most assuredly my dear William," replied Mrs. P., "I will do all that lies in my power to add to your comfort and happiness. Do tell me now, in what manner I can aid you, and my part shall be most cheerfully performed."

"Well, then, my dear, I have thought that we could manage, without much inconvenience, to do the washing and ironing at home. I have to pay seventy-five cents every week for that alone, which, if saved, would at the end of the year, amount to thirty-nine dollars."

"Thirty-nine dollars!" Why, who would have thought? But trifles when put together are perfectly astounding. If you had thought of it sooner, we might have saved considerable—but it is not too late yet, and although I have to attend to, the sewing, and cooking &c., yet I will try to do the washing and ironing too. I shall only have to set up a little later at night to get through with the sewing—and then you know the idea that it is for your sake, will sweeten the toil."

"That's a dear, sweet wife," said the delighted Mr. P. "Then there is butter. But to do without butter would be asking too much of you; for I know you have been accustomed to it, and cannot make a meal unless it is on the table. And then the children are perfect butter balls—and not much wonder, for they will not touch bread unless it is buttered on both sides. I cannot imagine how they get such a taste for it, as I never eat it. Nothing short of five pounds a week will serve us. And really it appears to me that the cows have entered into a combination against the consumers, for here in the middle of May, we cannot get it for less than twenty cents per pound, and during the year it has averaged that price. If we could save that, there would be a curtailment in that item alone of fifty-two dollars."

"Yes, butter is high, and yet I do not know how I can get along without it, having been accustomed to it from my childhood—and then the dear little ones. But, my dear husband I could be happy with bread and water alone. Your love would make a rich repast."

"Thanks, dearest, thanks! And now, can you think of any other article that we might curtail?" inquired the satisfied husband.

"Can I? really," said Mrs. P., I have not been thinking of anything but how to meet your wishes. But I will think. Yes, there is cream! If we could manage to do without it? I never use it unless for tea, and the children will not touch anything that has cream in it. However, it costs but six cents a day, and you can't do without it."

"Oh that's a trifle, my dear, and I would sooner drink lye than coffee without cream. There, there—that will do! You can't think of anything else I know."

"Now, don't be in such a hurry, my dear William. I will recollect something else. Yes, now I have. I think we might have something at the end of the year, if we would quit smoking cigars and chewing tobacco. Yes, let me see—we smoke five or six cigars per day, at three cents each, and chew twenty-five cents worth of tobacco a week."

"No, no my dear you are wrong there. I never smoke except after meals, and a cigar now and then occasionally."

"Well, that is three a day, and one now and then occasionally, which at four cents each, would amount to——."

"Why my dear Sue, you do nothing but make mistakes," interrupted Mr. P. "I purchase cigars by the thousand, and never pay over three cents a piece for them. And besides—such things as these do not belong to house-keeping, and I see no reason for your being so very particular in regard to them."

"Particular! Oh no, not all. You requested my views as to anything we might curtail, in order to perfect your scheme of retrenchment and reform, and I am only suggesting such things as we could do without. Cream was one item—cigars and tobacco another. One more, my dear William, and I will promise to be quiet.—If we could only manage to do without drinking at the tavern. Oh! how glad I should be and happy—oh! how happily would I strive and toil, and if necessary, sit up the long, long, wearisome night to labor, if thereby I might add to your comfort. Then," said she, a tear glistening in her dark bright eye—"then indeed would my toil be rest. I fear you never thought of this expense. Say, for this, three drinks a day: and now, for my satisfaction, add it all up, and see how much it would save. There, take the pen and paper, and make the calculation."

"Very well! Yes! certainly I will oblige you," stammered Mr. P. "But I can do it without a pen. I will calculate that by the rule of Mnemotechnics. Let see—se, te, ne, me dee. Cream at six cents a day, would be, say five dollars. Cigars at three cents each, would fee, dee—three times three is nine. Twelve months in a year would be se, de. Nine twelves is one hundred and eighty cents. Tobacco, twenty-five cents per week, barring Sundays, ne me, thirty-six weeks—twenty-five times thirty-six would make nine dollars. I really did not imagine it was so much, and will certainly curtail that item. Drinks, three a day—why I know some men who worth while to say anything about three poor fippeny bits. Put all this together, and you will find a remarkable difference between them and the articles I have specified.

"Most remarkable, I admit," replied Mrs. P., "but no more so the difference between Mnemotechnics and Jessie's Arithmetic. If you will look over the sums as I go along, I will go over it as I was taught according to Jessie."

"You cypher? I was not aware of that—nor is it necessary that you should go over the calculation, for I feel confident that it is correct. The fact is my dear Sue, Jessie's system is now obsolete, and so many innovations have been made on the old system of education since you were a school girl, that it is always impossible for me to tell anything without recourse to that system."

"Cypher! Yes, a little. There have been many changes, I admit, but figures remain as they ever were. But let me see—Cream, at 6 1-4 cents a day, is $22 81 per year."

"It is impossible," exclaimed Mr. P.

"Cigars, at three cents each—three per day, and one now and then, occasionally—is $39 94 3-4 per year."—

"The mischief?"

"And tobacco and drinks, including Sundays, $150 per year."

"A hundred and fifty dollars! in the name of common sense, how did you get at that?"

"That item is Mnemotechnized," archly replied Sue. "It is the shortest rule, and I will call in Johnson to examine if I be correct or not."

"We will not trouble Mr. Johnson," thoughtfully remarked Mr. Perkens. "But dear Susan, I will tell you what we will do. We will have the washing and ironing done out, and will have the cream as usual—I will smoke my cigars now and then occasionally—but we will quit drinking brandy!"

"Then indeed am I happy, and your annual, if not your house-keeping expenditures will be curtailed." A TRUE BILL.

One half of mankind pass their lives in thinking how they shall get a dinner, and the other in thinking what dinner they shall get: and the first are more injured by occasional fasts than are the latter by constant feasts.

J. O. McC.—Yours is good but not suited to our columns. It is at your disposal.

L. B. H.—Manhattan. We approve of your communication and endorse its views, but think its publication would do harm at present.

We continue to receive communications from correspondents in various parts of the State without their names. Such we never read and their time and postage is wasted.

We cannot publish the communications of T. W. and E. H. J., for the reason that not one hundredth part of our readers are candidates of the various counties. They should ask their county papers to publish them:

Good Postage Arrangement.

The Washington correspondent of the Commercial writes:

"The cheap postage system has been much prejudiced by the difficulty of prepaying postage on letters; one cannot always go in person or send another to prepay his letters. It would be a hundred-fold increase of the postage tax to do this. Stamps were, therefore, prepared and sold by the post-offices. But these proved useless, because they were untrustworthy;—many have been deterred from using them by the fact that some of them will slip off as fast as put on.

I have myself noticed many instances wherein a messenger taking a bag of letters to the city post office, finds, there, that the stamps have disappeared from the letters.

Congress has provided an excellent remedy for this evil. Some one moved an amendment to the post route bill that meets this case, and in spite of the committee, it prevailed, and is now a law. The Post Office Department is to cause envelopes to be made, with suitable water marks on the paper, identifying them as official, and with a printed stamp, for single or double postage, with a suitable device.

These envelopes are to be sold at all the post offices, at the price of the stamps now sold,—with the very small adition of the actual cost of the envelops.

We hope this is true. Stamps are at best a great trouble, and the imperfect manner in which many of them are made subjects all to loss.

Temperance Mass Metting.

There will be a Temperance Mass Meeting at Jonesville, Bartholomew county, on Saturday, Oct. 9, to which all are invited. We have received an invitation to address the meeting, but our engagements are such that we cannot attend.

Wabash County.

Our friends in this county, failing to induce either of the great political papers to nominate temperance candidates for the House of Representatives met last week, and nominated Col. Benjamin Sayre as the temperance candidate. We hope he may be elected.

The Election.

On Tuesday next, (October 12th), will be held the most important election ever held in the State of Indiana. On that day a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, and Auditor of State, four Judges of the Supreme Court, a Reporter, and a Clerk of the Supreme Court, a Superintendent of Public Instruction, ten Circuit Judges, and ten Prosecuting Circuit Attorneys, some sixty Judges and Prosecutors of Courts of Common Pleas, one hundred Representatives and fifty Senators, eleven Members of Congress, and nearly one thousand county officers, are to be elected by the free voters of this State.

Are the temperance voters of this State fully prepared for the responsibility of that election. Much, very much depends upon it. Never will there be so many candidates before the people at any one election.

The whole Senate is new, and here is a chance to secure your temperance man for four years, as one half of those elected will hold on the full term.

We have published letters from the three candidates for Governor, on the question of the Maine Law, and you have probably read them all. Now we say without fear or favor from any political party, vote for the man regardless of every other consideration, who comes nearest to your standard on this question. So with each and all the candidates, and especially for the Legislature—vote for no man who will not vote for a full blooded Temperance Law.

It is all important also, that the Judges of the Supreme, Circiut, and Common Pleas' Courts, should be strictly temperance men. As you value the purity of the Judicial Bench vote for no others. It is not our purpose to call names, but we say, beware how you follow party in this matter. Some of our most unflinching opposers, are candidates for the highest Judicial offices. Select from both parties if you wish a pure Judiciary.

In many counties our friends have nominated full temperance tickets—this we would not advise, where candidates are selected by the great parties who are temperance men, but if no other course is left, then put up your men and give them all

To make ourselves and our course respected by political parties, we must make them feel our strength. If they find that in order to succeed they must nominate temperance men, they certainly will nominate no others, for success with a political party is the end sought, the means are anything that will succeed.

Every remedy to put down intemperance that has been tried has proved ineffectual. Moral suasion has had its day, and the great army of distillers and venders can never be reached by it. The Law is the only thing they regard, and that we must give them. Virtue, Justice, and Temperance "cry aloud" for our assistance, "they utter their voice in the streets crying aloud and sparing not," and shall we turn a deaf ear? We have petitioned and remonstrated but all in vain.

All our laws are against us, and will be so until we march up in our might and hurl from power, those who can mock the petitions of one hundred and fifty thousand of the inhabitants of our State, setting up themselves to rule over those whose servants they are.

Then as one man, let us march to the ballot box, and taking for our standard Virtue, Truth, Love, Purity, and Fidelity, wage an exterminating war against intemperance in every form, from the genteel wine party to the grossest debauch, and high upon our banner inscribe in letters of living light, A Temperance Law. Let every voter do his duty.

The Maine Law.

There never was a law printed in the Statute book plainer, or easier to be understood than the Maine Liquor Law, and yet there never was one subject to so much misrepresentation. We have never seen an argument framed against the law, that did not grossly misrepresent it in its most essential points, and attack provisions which are not in the law.

The Editor of the Boone County Pioneer, in an article on the subject of this Law, says:

"Not only this, we do not believe in abridging the personal rights of any one. The idea of imposing legal restraints, or circumscribing by legal enactments what a man shall eat, drink or wear, is in the highest degree repugnant to our feelings and sentiments, and to an innate sense of individual rights. And such restraints seldom accomplish their end. They often develope and stimulate a desire, which otherwise would remain dormant."

Who ever saw any Law that "circumscribed what a man should eat, drink, or wear?" The idea is ridiculous. Does the Maine Law do it? No man can find such an idea in it. Every man in Maine is as free to drink Liquor as he was before the passage of the Liquor Law. The law aims its penalties against him who makes and sells Liquor, and not against him who drinks it. Now Mr. Pioneer, what is your objection to the Law? You have objected to what it does not contain—let us hear your objections to what it does contain.

But says the Editor:

"No one can question but that the eternal well-being of man is his highest concern. In importance it is one that rises infinitely beyond all others. Yet with all its high considerations, the Great Teacher of Christianity nowhere inculcates the employment of force to make men christians."

True—neither does any temperance man wish to employ force to make men temperate; but does not the Bible employ force to make men keep holy the Sabbath day?

Were not those who desecrated it stoned? Did not the law use force to make men obey its precepts and do temperance men ask any force but what is reasonable?

We force men not to sell tainted meat, and is it more unreasonable to force them not to sell bald face whisky? We force men not to kill with arsenic, and is it more unreasonable to force them not to kill with a decoction of nux vomica, coculus indicus, and sugar of lead, called liquor?

"All his arguments and appeals are addressed to the judgment and conscience."

Ah! were they? Did he appeal to the money changers in the temple? If he did it was with "a scourge of small cords," when he drove them out. Was this moral suasion or force?

He who was wisdom itself knew that [illegible] and liquor-sellers could not be influenced by moral suasion, and on such he never used it. We believe in moral suasion for the poor drunkard and nothing else, and we believe in the Maine Law for the Liquor seller, and nothing short of it.

Temperance Mass Meeting.

There will be a Temperance Mass Meeting held in Northfield, Boone County, Ind., on Saturday, the 16th day of October next. Many distinguished speakers are expected. All persons, of every party and denomination, irrespective of either Political or Religious sentiments, are earnestly, and respectfully invited to attend the meeting. If the day should be favorable, the procession, under the direction of a suitable number of Marshals, will form at 8 o'clock A. M., and march to the grove; but if the weather is inclemant, a large new Church is provided, which will shelter "in the sunshine or in the storm." A free Temperance repast will be provided, and we trust that ample provision will be made for the accommodation of all who may participate on the occasion.

In conclusion, permit us to say the committee and the cause "say come," "and whosoever will, let him come;" and participate "and partake of the waters" of Temperance freely, and push forward the glorious cause of Temperance, the cause of humanity.

Cincinnati Whisky.

The exports of whisky from Cincinnati during the year ending Aug. 31, have fallen off from 231,324 bbls; the amount exported last year—to 3,404 bbls.

A reduction in one year of nearly Two hundred and twenty-eight thousand barrels.

Is not this something to encourage the friends of Temperance. We think so.—Cincinnati is the great whisky mart of the West, and if the fountains are drying up, what will become of the streams. Let us push on and not be discouraged—darker times have often hung over us, but yet the day has always dawned brightly, and hope looks forward to a glorious consummation of our brightest hopes. Be up then and active.

There is not a richer salt region on the face of the earth than the one in Minnesota.

North Indiana Conferance and Temperance.

The following Report and Resolutions adopted by the North Indiana Conference at Fort Wayne, are to the point. When all religious bodies take as high ground on the subject we shall look for progress. We hope the Church will act fully up to the spirit of the resolutions:

The committee to whom was referred the subject of Temperance, respectfully present the following as their report, to-wit:

1. Resolved, That the use of intoxicating liquor to any extent, as a beverage, is to be deeply deplored and deprecated, as tending to the forming and maturing of pernicious habits, and leading by natural consequence to diversified crime, wide-spread misery, and the final ruin of many souls for whom Christ died.

2. Resolved, That the high moral and religious principles embraced in the cause of temperance, are far above the interest of merely party politics in importance.

3. Resolved, That we greatly rejoice in the manifestations of public sentiment on this subject, and that we will never cease to agitate it until the strong arm of the law shall save us from the ill-boding manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks.

4. Resolved, That we affectionately but earnestly advise all concerned, to lay aside all merely party alliances, and to promote to office only such as will be true to the principles of the temperance reformation.

5. Resolved, That we will heartily cooperate with the friends of temperance every where, in any prudent effort for the advancement of this good cause.

6. Resolved, That as ministers of Christ, we will not fail to preach, once at least, in all our appointments, against this great and crying sin of our land.

7. Resolved, That each minister and preacher in charge, in the bounds of this Conference, be requested to read a copy of these resolutions to those with whom they shall be sent to labor.

8. Resolved, That we forward a copy of these resolutions to the Western Christian Advocate and to the Temperance Chart, and that friendly papers throughout this State be requested to copy.

Adopted unanimously.

The following resolutions offered by W. H. Goode, and seconded by W. Wilson, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It is well known that there are established on the Steam-boats of our Western Lakes and Rivers, saloons for the retailing of intoxicating liquors; Therefore,

Resolved, That the interest and safety of the traveling public demand the immediate abandonment of the practice.

Resolved, That from our extensive acquaintance with the condition of the country, and with public sentiment on the subject, we are led to the conviction that the public good does now demand, and that public sentiment will now sustain strong legislative enactment, prohibitory of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks.

Maine Election.

This election turned wholly on the celebrated Liquor Law, and to show how popular that law is at home, we publish full returns as far as received.

No danger of Maine—she has tried the Law faithfully, and in a direct issue upon it, not more than 20,000 votes in the whole State can be found against it.

Although Gov. Hubbard has received a very large vote, there is no choice by the people. It is a point deserving of notice, that where the law has been enforced most generally, Gov. Hubbard's vote is largely increased.

The Legislature elected is strong for the Law,—of this there is no doubt. The Law is safe,—safe now, and safe forever! This may be set down as a "fixed fact."

Notwithstanding the gold of Boston distillers and rumsellers, (or of this genus in New England, perhaps we should say, for we hear of one Connecticut man's paying $300,)—notwithstanding this gold has been poured into the State as freely as water,—notwithstanding the threat of these gentry, that they (we give their language) "would smother the brat in its birth place,"—notwithstanding all the bribery and corruption of the whole unrighteous league of rum and Mammon,—The Law is Safe!

Returns from 269 towns, give Hubbard 33,080; Crosby, 24,778; Chandler, rum candidate, 18,210; and Holmes, 1,112.

Every member elected to the Senate so far as heard from, except three, are for the Law.

In the House of Representatives so far as heard from, 61 Law and 7 anti-Law members are elected.

Three Whigs and three Democrats elected to Congress.

A prominent friend, writing from Portland under date of the 15th inst., says:

"Our election was most glorious. EVERY SENATOR elected is pledged to the Maine Law, and more than three-fourths of the Representatives are Maine law men. The law stands stronger to-day than ever before."

Better and Better.

Progress of the Maine Law.

There is to us no more delightful theme upon which to think and write at the present time, than on the progressive movement of this new lever for civilizing and evangelizing the world. The Maine Law is now doing more in our estimation to aid the progress of morality and true religion, than all other human laws combined, and for this reason we hail it as a harbinger of the millenial glory, for who in his senses can think that the millenium is to dawn on the earth while Rum reigns and rules the nations. For this reason we take particular pains to keep our readers posted up on the triumphs of the Law. The following shows some of its progress:

Maine.—The two days Convention held at Bangor, the past week, is reported to have been another large and enthusiastic affair. The utmost confidence that the Law will be sustained, prevails. Another subscription was taken up in behalf of the cause, swelling the amount subscribed at the three Conventions, to about $4,000.—The result will soon be known.

Rhode Island.—The law is doing its work, very generally, to the entire satisfaction of its friends, and receiving the usual amount of censure and falsehoods of its enemies. At Newport the cases of prosecution that caused such an up-rising and down-falling of spirits, chivalric and ardent, were to be tried last Tuesday, after being laid over half a dozen or less times. The Newport rummies "die hard," but there is no escape,

The Newport Mercury, a paper not over favorable to the law, in speaking of the attempts to resist the execution of the law in that city, very truly and justly remarks:

"Do those who thus resist the law, and roughly handle its agents, (let them be who or what they may) think that such measures will free them from surveillance? if so, they have been poorly schooled. No! men who do not wholly approve of the Maine Law as a law, (and we are among the number,) are ready to sustain and uphold it, so long as it is on the statute, nor will they countenance any illegal attempts to overthrow it. Let those who are its bitterest enemies fight against it, let them appeal to the worst passions and inflame the minds of bodies already inflamed, they will find in the end that they have strengthened the arm that holds them in check, and that their miserable attempts to gag the law have ended in their own overthrow and the disgrace of a town that until now was looked upon as the pattern of propriety and respectability."

Massachusetts.—Aside from Boston, is every where experiencing the good effects of the law. We quote the results in two or three cities, which may be taken as a fair index of others throughout the State. The whole number of commitments to the watch house in Lowell, for the month ending July 22d, was for drunkenness 81, reported drunk, but not arrested, 160; total, 244. For the month ending August 22d, commitments for drunkenness, 20; reported but not arrested, 40; total, 60. Decrease, 75 per cent. The report of the Mayor of Lowell is, "that the Law is respected and generally observed," and that "the open sale of liquor has been suspended."

The Essex County Freeman, published at Salem, says of that city:

"The operations of the law in Salem, has been very satisfactory. Thus far, since the law went into operation, there has been but one arrest for drunkenness, and in that case the person arrested said he obtained his liquor in Boston. Before the law went into operation, the arrests for drunkenness and petty crimes of which drunkenness is the cause, averaged one a day, besides three or four commitments to the almshouse per week. The police themselves are surprised at the sudden and beneficial change."

In Taunton, the change is said to be still more perceptable. Taunton contains 11,000 inhabitants and has been as badly rum cursed, as any town in the State. "Rum hollow," says the Life Boat, "of State-wide notoriety, a place where four roads meet, was literally filled with grog shops, and by which ladies have feared to pass (although in the very heart of the city,) has been actually purged of the vile traffic. Not a rum shop now exists. The change in this place is so perceptable, that the remark, 'what a difference,' is in every body's mouth."

A large number of the most influential citizens of Boston, have petitioned the Mayor and Alderman to take immediate measures to enforce the law. The exit of Mayor Seaver, and rum associates, will be as inglorious as his administration is now despised. His reign is short!

We perceive by the Commonwealth, that Mr. Drew, of the Nahant Hotel, has been "outraged;" and we give the facts as clipped from that paper:

"A warrant was issued on Saturday against Mr. Drew of Nahant Hotel, and placed in the hands of Marshal Thurston, who repaired at once with a posse, consisting of constables Holt, Stone, Johnson, Dow, and Jeffreys, to execute it. Mr. Drew stated that he had no liquor on the premises, when the officers proceeded to test the truth of his statement. On arriving at the bar room, they were told by the keeper that all the liquor was under attachment, and being keeper, forbid them taking it. He was politely informed by the Marshal that "he should assume the responsibility." Thirteen demijohns and six decanters, of various kinds of liquor, were seized, all of which were deposited in a wagon and started for Lynn. The wagon had proceeded but a short distance, when the horse was 'seized' by the head, and some thirty or forty waiters and hostlers made an attempt to seize the liquor. The officers came to the rescue, when a general melee ensued. Some few hard blows were given and of course taken, but no claret was spilled except what came from the demijohns. Two of them were broken."

A hogshead of N. E. Rum was seized at Oxford, Mass., last week. It had no direction, but the authorities supposing it was intended for unlawful sale, took possession till it should be called for.

First Seizure of Liquors in Taunton.—Twelve casks containing various kinds of liquors, valued at $350 were taken yesterday from a cellar in Crandell's Block, by officers Babbitt and Carrier, and deposited to await investigation to-day. They belonged to Joshua Dean, who keeps a victualing saloon. The seizure attracted a crowd of one or two hundred persons, but no "intervention" was offered.—Taunton (Mass.) Gazette, 25th.

The Bostonians are executing the liquor law without trouble. Several seizures have been made, and the liquor poured into the old Revolutionary tea-pot,—Boston harbor. Several dodges have been resorted to in different parts of the State, but they are of no use. They cannot dodge Neal Dow's gun.

On Monday, a petition was presented to the Mayor and Alderman, signed by some of the most respectable merchants and others of that city praying that board 'to take such immediate measures as will fully carry out and enforce the provisions of the law recently enacted by the Legislature of this State.'

'We do this,' they continue, 'in the full assurance that vigorous action on your part will result in incalculable good, while the pecuniary benefit will be apparrent to every mind.' Among the signers to this petition, are Amos A. Lawrence, Samuel Appleton, Amos Lawrence, Daniel Denney, George P. Bangs, John C. Warren, Stephen Fairbanks, William R. Lovejoy, Samuel Hall, and Henry Plympton.

On Wednesday, the second trial under the new law took place in Milford, which excited great interest, from the fact that the person complained of, Mr. E. M. Hillard, a druggist, has kept a fashionable drinking place. He was found guilty, and fined by Mr. Justice Holbrook, of Upton, and appealed his case.

Woonsocket, R. I.—On Tuesday, Sept. 7th, Mr. Causiel and Mrs. Gattler, visited by the officer, on warrants drawn by L. Barnold, Esq., for selling liquors contrary to the law, were found guilty on three counts each, and in default of payment, committed to jail.

New Bedford.—Last week the police entered the store of Eleazar Philips, and seized thirteen barrels of liquors and all the apparatus for selling. The liquors were declared forfeited and Philips fined $20 and costs. He appealed and filed bonds as required by law.

South Deerfield.—The Spy of Monday says:

"No less than 12 different liquor suits have grown out of the sale of spirits at the late muster ground at South Deerfield. Nine of the cases have been tried, and the defendants—seven in number—convicted and fined. One of them, H. S. Robbins, of Greenfield, appealed, and the rest paid up, save one, who will probably have to go to jail. Three cases remain to be tried."

Lowell.—The city Marshal searched the grocery of Patrick Berrian, on Friday last. They found some thirty gallons of liquors which they seized. A like visit was paid to Thomas Riley, and 15 or 20 gallons of the same sort was taken, lest Thomas should make a bad use of it.

So wealthy is the city of New Bedford, that were its property divided between every man, woman, and child in the city, each would have upwards of $1,000. We doubt if there is another like place in the country. There are 18,000 inhabitants.

Intemperance.

Of all the passions that agitate the human breast, there is none probably more destructive to happiness than intemperance. It is as cruel as the grave and as uncompromising as death. Those who have not fortitude enough to keep from the intoxicating bowl, are characteristic of a low and groveling mind; destitute of ennobling qualities which promote their own happiness and also the happiness of those around them.

There is a great contrast between a temperate and an intemperate man. Go to the house where there is no variety of strong drink placed in the corner of the cupboard or room, and see what happiness there is in that home circle. The wife goes cheerfully about her house-hold singing some low melody; and when the loved husband and father is on his way home he hears the sweet cadence of her silvery voice, reverberating through the air as the wings of zephyr gently sweeps it onward; as he approaches still nearer he can see his laughing children playing upon the green—the moment they see his tall and erect form they leave their toys and all running "to see who will get the first kiss from Papa." * * * * *

Now dear reader, with your permission we will take a hasty leave of this happy family and draw an imperfect picture of the drunkard's home. There is the deserted wife and starving children crying for bread. What can that poor suffering wife do? Must she be punished for the misconduct of her husband? Husband, no he is not worthy of that name. He, who does not possess the feelings and susceptibilities of humanity no more than to take the small pittance, which his wife had toiled for, while he was in some gambling saloon, does not deserve that title. Is it not so reader? Is there not many a woman who toils weekly, and the moment she receives her reward, does not her drunken husband come swaggering into the room, commanding her to give him what money she had? Does not that woman on her bended knee, implore him to leave her her weekly support? Does not he, like some tyrant, roughly dash her from his path, grasps her money with a monster's delight as he rolls his red eyes over it, and leaves the room, only to renew his tyranny when he has that spent? Alas it is too true.

Her former friends respect her no more than they do her husband. Why? because she is a drunkard's wife. When I think how my sex have suffered and will suffer, it makes me feel an involuntary conviction that I have the strength of Sampson. Would that I had! I would set fire to every house that contains any kind of intoxicating drinks, and like the mighty Goliah, I would look scornfully upon the surrounding multitude who might try to oppose me.

Oh! what would we not do to keep our fellow men from so great a violation of the laws of God. Think young man. Rush not on your mad career without a second thought. Think of the destiny that awaits you. Think what you will come to, and what you might come to. Think how the clouds of adversity are lowering around your mother's once bright path, and how she has knelt by your bedside at the holy midnight hour, praying for a supernatural Power to stop you before you plunge deeper into the dark shades of oblivion, or the great abyss which is ever ready to shut the glories of God from you. While you, yes you are killing that blessed Parent inch by inch. For all the endearing epithets and caresses which she has bestowed upon you, and now in her old age, when she most deserves your help and sympathy, you madly rush on and grasp the poison cup, never returning her one kind word or one kind look, but broken hearted you will carry her to the grave.

Once again I beseech you, to stop and think, and let your name be echoed loudly by the clarion of fame, and you will receive your reward, both on earth and in heaven. Ella Gray.

For the Temperance Chart.

Mt. Sterling, Sept. 3, 1852.

Bro. Woodward:—Through the columns of your excellent periodical, I wish to say a few things in regard to the temperance cause. Although but a boy, I feel it my duty as a philanthropist, and as a person that regards the interests of his country, to say one word, and should it not edify your readers, it will relieve my own mind.

The cry of the aristocratic part of our community has been "moral suasion," and to license demons to deal out the fire-waters of hell to erring men. Now Mr. Editor, we go in heart and hand for moral suasion, so far as it can be effective of good; but it will never entirely assuage the waters of dissipation, nor dry up the tears of forlorn and stricken families, nor banish the dreadful curse of intemperance from our (might be) happy country, as long as we allow liquor aspirants to have the despotic rule.

To the candid mind we would say, how long—Oh! how long—shall we stop our ears to reason, and to the cries and shrieks of broken-hearted mothers, as they reflect that their bosom friend fills a drunkard's grave, and in all probability the little darling prattler will be allured into the same vice? How long shall our legislative body, who have the power to enact such laws as will be for the amelioration and bettering of the condition of mankind, look with sarcastic grins on the thousands of names sent up in memorial form for the enactment of laws to restrict the liquor traffic? We appeal unto you, ye many friends of temperance! Let us be up and at our posts, and don't talk to us of moral suasion for the man who will knowingly and with a stern countenance take the life of his fellow-man, by dealing out to him accursed poison. Let us have legal suasion, and that of the severest kind. This is the only way we can save our country from misery's flood—the only way we can aid the suffering petitioner—the way we can stop crime of every sort, and make the homes of miserable families homes of peace and plenty. In order that this be done, there must be a concert of action; we must come up to the polls, and elect men, regardless of party, who will advocate temperance principles—who have the interest of the people at heart, and not their pockets. Let us try it. The result will be charming, and may God smile on our efforts, that we may keep the liquor aspirants at their homes until they become temperance advocates.

And now a word from our Division—Mt. Sterling, No. 120. We are coming bravely and manfully to the work. With the friends of temperance in Ohio and Switzerland counties, we purpose holding a mass meeting at Enterprise, on the 8th inst., in order to discuss the subject, and concert measures to crush the hydra-headed monster. With our sister Divisions and friends of temperance, we will have a grand rallying and shaking of the dry bones before we leave, for we purpose staying two or three days, or anyhow until we see the slain breathe.

The ladies—may Heaven protect them!—are our advocates. We still have a few of the 'Devil's Express Offices' in our community, and we understand from correct authority that some ladies living near one of them intend to tar and feather the front side of it. We say, success to them, and if this will not do, let them copy the example of a lady living in Wayne county: that is, make a total smash of bottles and windows. Yes, "they have a right so to do. If the freemen of America will not protect the homes of families, and the interests confided to their keeping, the women themselves will rise indignantly, and strike at the enemy of their homes. The cheek should burn with shame, when woman is driven to seek that protection which Government and recreant men deny her."

Yours, in Love, Purity. and Fidelity,

James W. Harbin, R. S.

Temperance Convention.

At a recent meeting of the numerous friends of temperance, assembled at Dover Hill, Martin county, Ind., D. R. Donahue was nominated to represent them in the next Legislature; and the follawing preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The great cause of temperance in this State has an earnest demand upon all lovers of sobriety and good morals, and the cause generally has heretofore received the neglect of all classes of society, from a want of due consideration of its importance, while others, from interested motives or careless indifference to the destructive influences of the liquor traffic, have combined all their energies and exerted all their influence to extend the evils of intoxication by voting for intemperate men, (or those favorable to the traffic,) and by refusing to legislate against the same, or even respectfully to respond to the ardent wishes of over one hundred thousand petitioners sent up to our last Representative and Senatorial bodies; therefore

Resolved, That as honest men—who desire the happiness and welfare of all—we do earnestly believe it to be our duty to do all we honorably can, to suppress and dry up the gushing streams of intemperance, which are deluging and destroying our neighbors and children—by turning our influence and support against the evil in every form.

Resolved, That we believe "moral suasion" alone entirely incompetent to the task of putting down the traffic in alcoholic drinks, as past experience has proved, and that it can only be suppressed by bringing the strong arm of the law to bear stringently upon it.

Resolved, That it is as reasonable to legislate against this evil as against any other, for none equals it in magnitude.

Resolved, That we have at heart the great cause of temperance, and cherish the intention of zealously promoting its interests, by supporting temperance men and temperance measures alone—so far as in our judgment may seem practicable.

Resolved, That we disclaim all connection with any political or Free Soil party, and that we support our men upon the great principles of temperance, sobriety, and intelligence.

Resolved, That we will not encourage by our votes any man for office, who is opposed to stringent legislation upon this subject, or who will connive at or engage in the liquor traffic, by treating for votes, or otherwise striving to make our voters drunk to influence their election.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be furnished for publication in the "White River Standard."

Contribution of Chemistry to the Healing Art.—The fact that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is a chemical discovery, may explain why the distinguished Professors of that Science, (Silliman, Hitchcock, Webster, and Cleveland,) have given their certificates in its favor. HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

TO CURE A COLD, WITH HEADACHE AND SORENESS OF THE BODY, take the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, and wrap up warm, to sweat during the night.

FOR A COLD AND COUGH, take it morning, noon, and evening, according to directions on the bottle, and the difficulty will soon be removed. None will long suffer from this trouble when they find it can be so readily cured. Persons afflicted with a seated cough, which breaks them of their rest at night, will find, by taking the CHERRY PECTORAL on going to bed, they may be sure of sound, unbroken sleep, and consequently refreshing rest. Great relief from suffering, and an ultimate cure, is afforded to thousands who are thus afflicted, by this invaluable remedy.

From its agreeable effect in these cases, many find themselves unwilling to forego its use when the necessity for it has ceased.

From two eminent Physicians in

FAYETTEVILLE, Tenn., April 16th, 1851.

SIR:—We have given your Cherry Pectoral an extensive trial in our practice, and find it to surpass every other remedy we have for curing affections of the respiratory organs

DRS. DIEMER & HAMPTON.

TO SINGERS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS this remedy is invaluable, as by its action on the throat and lungs, when taken in small quantities, it removes all hoarseness in a few hours, and wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of voice.

ASTHMA is generally much relieved, and often wholly cured by Cherry Pectoral. But there are some cases so obstinate as to yield entirely to no medicine. Cherry Pectoral will cure them, if they can be cured.

BRONCHITIS, or irritation of the throat and upper portion of the lungs, may be cured by taking Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses. The uncomfortable oppression is soon relieved.

REV. DR. LANSING, of Brooklyn, New York, states: "I have seen the Cherry Pectoral cure such cases of Asthma and Bronchitis as leads me to beleive it can rarely fail to cure those diseases."

FOR CROUP. Give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

WHOOPING COUGH may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral

THE INFLUENZA is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences, while their neighbors, without the Cherry Pectoral, were suffering from the disease.

Salem, Ohio, June 11th, 1851.

Doct. J. C. Ayer:—I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your Cherry Pectoral in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough, by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best physicians freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it, than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine, he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully, J. D. SINCLAIR,
Deputy Postmaster.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the Cherry Pectoral, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and coughs, and pulmonary diseases. P. CLEVELAND, M. D.

Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

DR. VALENTINE MOTT, the widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of 'Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,' which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been affected by Cherry Pectoral in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it.

POETRY.

The Prairie on Fire.

BY GEORGE P. MORRIS.

The following ballad is founded, in part, upon a thrilling story of the West, related by Mr. Cooper, the novelist.

The shades of evening closed around
The boundless prairies of the West,
As, grouped in sadness on the ground,
A band of pilgrims leaned to rest;
Upon the tangled weeds were laid
The mother and her eldest born,
Who slept while others watched and pray'd
And thus the weary night went on.

Thick darkness shrouded earth and sky,
When, on the morning winds there came
The Teton's shrill and thrilling cry,
And heaven was pierced with shafts of flame.
The sun seemed rising through the haze,
But with an aspect dread and dire!
The very air appeared to blaze!
Oh, God! the prairie was on fire!

Around the centre of the plain
A belt of flame retreat denied,
And like a furnace glowed the train
That walled them in on every side;
And onward rolled the torrent wild—
Wreaths of dense smoke obscured the sky!
Down knelt the mother and her child,
And all, save one, shrieked out—"We die!"

"Not so!" he cried; "help, clear the sedge!
"Strip bare a circle to the land!"
That done, he hastened to its edge
And grasped a rifle in his hand;
Dried weeds he held beside the pan,
Which kindled at a flash, the mass!
Now "fire fight fire!" he said, as ran
The forked flames among the grass.

On three sides soon the torrents flew,
But on the fourth no more it raved!
Then large and broad the circle grew,
And thus the pilgrim band was saved!
The flames receded far and wide,
The mother had not prayed in vain!
God had the Teton's arts defied!
His scythe of fire had swept the plain.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Selling Chickens to the Legislature.

While the Legislature of Missouri was in session, a few years ago, a green fellow from the country came to Jefferson to sell some chickens. He had about two dozen, all of which he had tied by the legs with a string, and this being divided equally, and thrown across his horse, or his shoulder, formed his mode of conveyance, leaving the fowls with their heads hanging down, with little else of them visible except their naked legs, and a promiscuous pile of outstretched wings and ruffled feathers.

After several ineffectual efforts to dispose of his load, a wag, to whom he made an offer of sale told him that he did not want chickens himself, but that perhaps he could sell them at that large stone house over there, (the Capitol,) that there was a man over there buying, on speculation, for the St. Louis market, and no doubt he could find a ready sale.

The delighted countryman, started, when his informer stopped him.

"Look here," says he, "when you get over there, go up stairs, and then turn to the left. The man stops in that large room. You will find him sitting up at the other end of the room, and is now engaged, with a number of fellows buying chickens. If a man at the door should stop you, don't mind him but go right ahead.

Following the directions, our friend soon found himself at the door of the House of Representatives. To open it and enter was but the work of a moment. Taking from his shoulder the string of chickens, and giving them a shake to freshen them, he commenced his journey towards the Speaker's chair, the fowls in the meantime, loudly expressing from the half formed crow to the harsh quack, their bodily pain.

"I say, sir,"—— Here he advanced about half way down the aisle, when he was seized by Major Jackson, the doorkeeper, who happened to be returning from the Clerk's desk.

"What the devil are you doing with these chickens; get out, sir, get out," whispered the doorkeeper.

"No you don't, though, you can't come that game over me. You've got chickens yourself for sale; get out yourself, and let me sell mine. I say, sir (in a louder tone to the Speaker) are you buying chickens here to-day? I've got some prime ones here."

And he held up his string and shook his fowls until their music made the walls echo.

"Let me go, sir," (to the doorkeeper) "let me go, I say. Fine large chickens, (to the Speaker) only six bits a dozen."

"Where's the Sergeant-at-arms," roared the Speaker—"take that man out."

"Now don't will you, I ain't hard to trade with. You let me go (to the doorkeeper,) you've sold your chickens, now let me have a chance. I say sir, (to the Speaker in a louder tone,) are you buying chickens to"— "Go ahead! At him again. That's right!" whispered some of the opposition members, who could command gravity enough to speak—"at him again! He'll buy them! He only wants you to take less—at him again."

"I say sir, (in a louder tone to the Speaker)—cuss your pictures, let me go—fair play—two to one ain't fair (to the Doorkeeper and Sergeant-at-arms,) let me go; I say, sir, you up there (to the Speaker,) you can have 'em for six bits! won't take a cent less. Take 'em home and eat 'em myself before I'll take—— Drat your hides, don't shove so hard, will you! you'll hurt them chickens, and they have had a travel of it to day, anyhow. I say, you sir, up there."

Here the voice was lost by the closing of the door. An adjournment was moved and carried, and the members almost frantic with mirth, rushed out to find our friend in high altercation with the doorkeeper about the meanness of selling his chickens and letting nobody sell theirs, adding that "if he could jest see that man up there by himself, he'd be bound they could make a trade, and that no man could afford to raise chickens for less than six bits."

The members bought his fowls by a pony purse, and our friend left the Capitol, saying as he went down stairs.

"Well, this is the darndest, roughest place for selling chickens that I ever come across, sure."—Spirit of the Times.

Effect of Railroads on Commercial Cities.

Mr. Poor, of the American Railroad Journal, in a brief editorial, gives a most striking as well as correct illustration of the effect of railroads in enlarging the circle of business of cities, as follows:

"The city of New York is now accessible from every part of New England (with the exception of the eastern part of Maine,) and the State of New York by one day's journey on railroads. A traveler may leave Waterville, (Me.,) which is 430 miles distant from New York; Montreal, Canada, which is 400; and Dunkirk and Buffalo, which are about 470, in the morning, and reach the city the same evening by continuous lines of railroad, at an average charge of two cents per mile. Light articles of freight, newspapers, &c., are forwarded to, and received from the same points with equal dispatch—so that the six millions of people residing within the States named, are within one day's time of this city.—And in the evening, the most remote parts of it are, in the ordinary course of the mail, put into the possession of our morning news; and, on the other hand, our shops and the stands in our markets display the delicacies and dainties which the morning light shone upon some 400 miles distant. The whole country within this distance, by means of railroads, is made the market garden of the city, and every inhabitant is brought into as intimate relation to it, as was the person who lived within 30 miles a few years since. A trip of a day is now sufficient to bring nearly every inhabitant of New York and New England to this city, and who may, if they choose, return home the next.

"These facts will serve to show the influence that railroads are exerting, in the facilities they give in the movement of persons and property. To a city they increase the area of country tributary to it in a much greater ratio than the length of their lines. To give a clearer idea we will briefly illustrate this proposition. We will assume that the speed of the ordinary loaded team on common roads is two and a half miles per hour, for 12 hours, which will give 30 miles as the extent of a day's travel, and 60 miles as the diameter of the circle from which a city without railroads could draw its daily supplies of food, &c. This would give an area of country of not far from 2,700 square miles.

"The freight train on a railroad moves at an average rate of 12 miles an hour, or 288 miles in 24 hours. The circle within daily reach of a city by freight trains on railroads would be 576 miles, embracing an area of 12,476 square miles, or more than 46 times greater than the circle within reach of the same point by the ordinary wagon! By the use of railroads, therefore, a city increases its capacity for business, as well as its supplies of food, and all the articles used in the economy of life, 4,600 per cent!

"It will be found upon calculation that the difference in cost of the two modes of carriage supposed, is in about the same ratio as the above distances.

"The above statements are a most striking, as well as correct illustration, of the value of railroads, and demonstrative most clearly of their importance in increasing the business of commercial or trading points, and prove how necessary they are to farming communities, in creating a value for their products, in opening a market for them. They explain the rapid growth of cities that are the termini of a large number of railroads, and the rapid appreciation in the value of the country they traverse. With an ordinary road, a farmer living sixty miles from a city may be without a market for many of his most important articles of produce from cost of transportation, while another living upon a railroad but 400 miles from the same point, finds a ready sale for all he can raise at remunerating rates."

Cloves.

Cloves are the unopened flowers of a small ever green tree that resembles in appearance the laurel or the bay. It is a native of Molucca, or Spice Islands, but has been carried to all the warmer parts of the world, and is largely cultivated in the tropical regions of America. The flowers are small in size, and grow in large numbers in clusters at the very ends of the branches. The cloves we use, are the flowers gathered before they have opened, and are yet green. After being gathered they are smoked by a wood fire, and then dried in the sun. Each clove consists of two parts, a round head, which is the four petals or leaves of the flower rolled up, enclosing a number of small stocks or filaments; the other part of the clove is terminated with four points; and is, in fact, the flower cup, and the unripe seed vessel.—All these parts may be distinctly shown if a few leaves are soaked for a short time in hot water when the leaves of the flowers soften and readily unroll. The smell of the cloves is very strong and aromantic, but unpleasant. Their taste is pungent, acrid and lasting. Both the taste and the smell depend on the quantity of oil they contain. Sometimes the oil is separated from the cloves before they are sold and the odor and taste in consequence is much weakened by this proceeding.

"My lad," said a traveler to a little fellow, whom he met clothed in "pants" and roundabout, but without a very necessary article of apparel; "my lad, where's your shirt?"

"Mammy's washing it."

"Have you no other?"

"No other!" exclaimed the urchin, with indignant scorn; "would you want a body to have a thousand shirts?"

Demand for Machinery.

Never, we believe, was such demand for machinery known among us. This is attributed to various causes. One is the tariff, the rates of which being in favor of articles made in foreign countries, and against our own manufactures, our engineers and machinists have been obliged to exert their ingenuity to the utmost, and incessant labor, toil, and experiments, to devise new and cheaper machines, and ways for the prosecution of their various arts and trades, in order to compete in their productions with those imported into this country from abroad. Another is the growing liberality of our capitalists, and the better disposition evinced by them in bringing out and establishing new invention apparatus, and manufacture.

On these and other accounts all the machine and work shops are full of orders and industrious and skillful workmen who readily command good wages, and who, as well as the proprietors, are doing a prosperous business. So numerous and pressing are the wants of the people of New England, in respect to articles of machinery and almost every description of work; and so numerous and largely increasing do the orders upon our artizans and engineers promise to be from all sections of the country, that we should not be in the slightest degree be surprised if the various work shops and machine establishments in Boston and the several towns bordering upon it, should be more than double in number and in the amount of hands employed, materials used, and work done, within less than three years from this time.—Boston Transcript.

Poverty and Debt.

Poverty, says Douglas Jerrold, is a bitter draught, but may, even sometimes with advantage, be gulped down. Though the drinker makes wry faces, there may, after all, be wholesome goodness in the cup. But debt, however courteously it be offered, is the cup of a siren, and the wine, spiced and delicious though it be, a subtle poison. The man out of debt, though with a flaw in his jerkin, a crack in his shoe-leather, and a hole in his hat, is still the son of liberty, free as the singing lark above him; but the debtor, though clothed in the utmost bravery, what is he but a serf upon a holiday—a slave to be reclaimed at any instant by his owner, the creditor? My son, if poor, see wine in the running spring; let thy mouth water at the last week's roll; think none the less of a coat because it is threadbare; and acknowledge a white-washed garret the fittest housing place for a gentleman. Do this, and shun debt. So shall thy heart be at peace, and the sheriff be confounded.

Canine Sagacity.

An English officer, who had occasion, when in Paris, to pass one of the bridges on the Seine, had his boots, which had been previously well polished, dirtied by a poodle dog rubbing against them. The same circumstance having occurred more than once, his curiosity was excited, and he watched the dog. He saw him roll himself in the mud of the river, and then watch for a person with well polished boots, against which he contrived to rub himself. Finding that a shoe-black was the owner of the dog, he taxed him with the artifice; and, after a little hesitation, he confessed that he had taught the dog the trick, in order to procure customers for himself.—The officer being much struck with the dog's sagacity, purchased him at a high price, and took him to England. He kept him tied up some time in London, and then released him. The dog remained with him a day or two, and then made his escape. A fortnight afterwards he was found with his former master, pursuing his old trade of dirtying gentlemen's boots on the bridge.

CARELESS.—Tom bought a gallon of Otard at Brady's to take home, and by way of a label, wrote his name upon a card, which happened to be the seven of clubs. and tied it to the handle. Alderman C. coming along, observed the jug, and remarked, "That's an awful careless way to leave that liquor."

"Why so?" said Tom.

"Why? Because somebody might come along with the eight spot and take it!"—Tom froze to the handle and put out with it.—Det. Advertiser.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

A Rum Shop Closed by the Ladies.

A correspondent writing from Michigan to the Mome Missionary, says:

Certain efforts put forth by our ladies in furtherance of the temperance cause deserve mention:

In a section of the village, there has always been a strong public sentiment in favor of temperance, by the force of which, appropriately applied, an end has been speedily put to sundry enterprises in the way of liquor selling. But some time ago, a grocery was opened by a German, who persisted in retailing strong drink in spite of various attempts to dislodge him. He had complied with the provisions of the statute, which allows any one to sell on giving bonds to a certain amount, on the principle of the Wisconsin law.

A few weeks ago the ladies determined to take the matter in hand. Thirty-one or more of them organized themselves into companies of six each, and commenced a course of systematic visitation, one company going together each day. At first, though the man was somewhat disconcerted at the unexpected honor of a visit from six ladies, he was disposed to treat the matter as a very good joke, and facetiously recommended his liquors to his visitors. The next day, when another company called, he became angry and scolded and threatened. The day after, the visiting committee found the front door of the establishment closed against them, but speedily made their way in through the back door. By the middle of the week, the man became thoroughly alarmed, and about the hour he expected a visit, he locked his store and went away. The ladies called as usual, but, of course, without gaining admittance. About sundown, however, the man returned, and had hardly got the shop opened, and everything ready to supply his writing customers, when in filed the platoon of visitors, with their tongues unloosed, and their zeal raised to a higher pressure from having been so long repressed. On Friday, the man was gone, and his store closed the most of the day. He returned towards evening, and not daring quite yet to open his store, had stopped in at the blacksmith's shop, and was there condoling himself in fancied security, when his unwelcome visitors were again upon him with their faithful reproofs. On Saturday, not a single detachment, but the whole regiment of ladies waited upon him in a body, and labored with him sufficiently, as they thought, to last over Sabbath. Meanwhile they circulated a paper, to which they procured the signatures of most of the families in that part of the town, pledging themselves to purchase nothing at the store so long as liquor was sold there. The next week, one of the man's bondsmen left the place, and being unable to get new bail, in consequence of the movement of the ladies, he discontinued the open sale of liquor. More recently they have suspected him of selling illegally, and have appointed a committee to prosecute him.

A GO-AHEAD WOMAN.—The Lexington Sentinel says that there is now living in Holmes County, Miss., a woman who married her fifth husband September, 1823. She subsequently parted with him; and from time to time married three others, with all of whom she separated. On the day twenty-five years from her first marriage, she parted with her fourth husband, attended the funeral of her second, was re-married to her first, and the marriage ceremony was performed by her third husband. She is now living with her fifth, or rather her first husband, and doing well; and is some woman yet.

☞ There was great delicacy in the manner in which a foreigner, having a friend hung in this country, broke the intelligence to his relations on the other side of the water. He wrote as follows: "Your brother had been addressing a large meeting of citizens, who had manifested the deepest interest in him, when the platform upon which he stood, being, as was subsequently ascertained, very insecure, gave way, owing to which, he fell and broke his neck."

Mrs. Huntington, of Salem, Mass., rescued a youth from drowning, a few days ago. She saw him struggling in a pond, and, rushing into the water, drew him out insensible.

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 13, 1852.

☞ For the purpose of replying to the slanders of the Indiana State Sentinel before the election, we issue this number of our paper before the usual time.

Returns.

Our friends will oblige us by sending us the complexion of their Senators and Representatives elect, on the temperance question, as we wish to publish returns on that question only.

Temperance Candidates.

Sternes Fisher, Esq., is the temperance candidate for the Legislature in Wabash County, and Thomas J. Brackenridge, Esq., in Warrick County.

Death of Gov. Whitcomb.

Hon. James Whitcomb, formerly Governor of this State, and at the time of his death U. S. Senator, died in New York City, on Monday evening, October 4th.—His remains will be brought to this city for interment.

Death of G. W. P.s Mills and St. John.

Lloyd Mills, G. W. P. of the Grand Division of Western New York, died on the 12th ult., and Dr. E. St. John, G. W. P. of the Grand Division of Eastern New York, died at his residence at Ballston Spa, on the 20th.

Thus in a few short days have the Grand Divisions of our sister State, each lost an honored head.

Bro. Mills was an editor, and died of consumption at an early age, and was buried with the ceremonies of the Order he so much loved. He was an eloquent speaker and a chaste and beautiful writer. His death was that of a christian, and he rests with "the Great Patriarch above."

Bro. St. John was a physician, of whose history we know nothing, except his election one year since to the responsible office of G. W. P. of the Grand Division of Eastern New York. The N. Y. Organ promises an extended notice of each, which we may hereafter copy.

State Fair.

On the 20th inst., the State Fair commences in this city. It will be a great gathering of the masses, and a show of curiosities.

The farmer will bring his pumpkins, his corn and his potatoes—his stock and his implements of husbandry. Mechanics of various kinds will bring specimens of their manufactured articles for exhibition. Even the ladies will bring their needle-work, their quilts, and the products of their dairies, for exhibition. For all these the committee has offered large premiums. But they are evidently a partial committee.

We have looked through the whole list of premiums and find none offered for the productions of one very large class of our fellow citizens, and a class too, who of all others now need encouragement. We would therefore suggest to the committee, as perhaps it may not yet be too late, that they immediately publish a list of premiums for the best specimens of the manufactured article of the whisky-seller, that all trades may be fairly represented.

We hope the committee will bear this in mind, for this city can turn out some of the best manufacturers in this line, and as perfectly finished specimens of their work as any in the State.

Let our friends have a fair chance, and see what they can do.

Ben. Harding, a distinguished lawyer and politician of Kentucky, died, at his residence, on the 24th inst., at an advanced age.

Yeas and Nays on Temperance Bills.

Our article on this subject, published two weeks since, seems to have given great offence to a little hairy-faced cub, (not the editor,) who does up the dirty work for the Indiana State Sentinel.

He, however, managed to bottle up his wrath for a week after the paper was issued, and until he had sent an ex-member of the Indiana Legislature to ascertain the fact that the last number of the Chart to be issued before the election was on the press, so that we should have no opportunity to reply, and then he lets loose his billingsgate for the purpose of creating a false impression upon the temperance Democrats, to get them to swallow the whisky nominations of Marion county—Whig as well as Democratic, for we make no distinction when we designate them by this appellation.

To do this, he writes an article of thirty-four lines, which contains eight deliberate falsehoods, known to be such when written by the cub aforesaid.

First, he says we made a violent assault on Levi L. Todd. This is false. Here is all we said about Mr. Todd: "Passed 31 to 12, most of the temperance men voting against it—Mr. TODD, of this county, voting for it." A violent attack, surely, to tell the people how Mr. Todd voted on a temperance bill!

He says: "This article is full of gross misrepresentations and perversions, done designedly to aid the Whig candidate."—Falsehood No. 2.

Again: "The editor of the Temperance Chart is an out and out consistent Whig," (about the only truth he tells—but not consistent enough to swallow whisky Whig candidates,) "who cares more for the success of the Whig party than the triumph of the temperance cause." Falsehood No. 3.

"An auxiliary to the Indiana Journal." No. 4.

"The editor is supporting the whole Whig ticket, Charles Bonge and all."—Falsehood No. 5. No man ever heard us say that we would vote for Bonge, but on the contrary we have publicly declared that we should not support him.

"He can swallow the most violent anti-temperance liquor man without making a wry face, if he is a Whig, but never can vote for a Democrat, although he may be a 'grand patriarch.'" Falsehood No. 6. We expect to vote for seven Democrats at the next election, and not one of them that we know of is a "grand patriarch."

"It is not because Captain Todd is objectionable to any voter on account of his temperance views and habits; it is because he is a Democrat." No. 7.

"Democrats, be not deceived by the advice of this Whig, who would have you vote against Captain Todd for Mr. Taylor, the Whig candidate, whilst he swallows the whole Whig ticket, liquor and all."—This is No. 8. The writer knows that we do not swallow the whole Whig ticket.—We avowed in the Chart immediately after the nomination, that of ten names presented by the Whig party for county officers, we could under no circumstances vote for more than five, and some of them were hard to swallow. This the writer of the article in the Sentinel well knew.

Not satisfied, however, with this attack upon temperance and the temperance paper and its editor, he again comes out on the day of our last publication, and says many hard things, and tells more falsehoods than in the preceding article, calling the Chart a Whig paper, &c., &c.

The Sentinel says in this article that Mr. Owen's bill did not pass the House, because the bill was amended before it passed! We affirm that Mr. Owen's bill, although amended, did pass, and that in its main features it was the same bill still.

The Sentinel says the yeas and nays were never taken on this bill; all we say in reply to that is, we got the yeas and nays from the Sentinel itself.

The Sentinel then undertakes to prove that we gave a false face to the bill that passed the Senate. We did not pretend to publish the full bill, but stated truly what were some of its provisions, and said that Mr: Todd voted for it, and this is the violent assault, (although the Sentinel says it is true,) complained of as having been made by the Chart on Capt. Todd.

The Sentinel then concludes by saying that "this was a better bill than was ever before passed in either house of the Legislature of this State." Does any man believe that Holloway and Saffer, and all the leading temperance men in the Senate, and a majority of the House, who had shown a willingness to pass temperance bills, would have voted, time and again, against "the best temperance bill that ever passed either branch of the Legislature of this State, and that nine-tenths of the people would have been satisfied with?"

This story may do for the Sentinel, which is the most uncompromising enemy of temperance of any paper in Indiana, but it will not do to try and crowd such nonsense down the necks of honest temperance men, whether Democrats or Whigs.

This article was not written with any view to operate on Mr. Todd's election.—Before Mr. Todd was nominated—before he thought of being a candidate—we promised the people a list of the yeas and nays on the temperance bills; we gave them all our limited time and small space would allow, and neither the favor of the Whig party or its presses, or the fear of the Democratic party and its presses, shall swerve us one inch, from doing what we believe to be our duty.

Temperance, and temperance alone, shall be our standard of voting for the future, and we will vote for temperance men, whether they be Whigs or Democrats, Free Soilers or Independents.

If two candidates are presented us, both temperance men, we shall always vote for the Whig, and expect Democrats to vote for the Democrat, and we say that is right, but when one is a temperance man and the other opposes it, we vote for the temperance man if a Democrat, and ask Democrats to vote for him if a Whig.

So far we are in favor of mixing temperance with politics.

For the success of the Whig party or the defeat of the Democratic party, in the State elections, we care not a straw, only so far as that success or defeat elects true temperance men, and for this we shall vote and labor as long as Indiana needs a good temperance law.

What will the Jacksonian and other kindred papers now say about the probability of the repeal of the Maine Law at home, in a Legislature so far as heard from, standing 115 to 31 for the Law.

In the city of Portland, over which our opponents crowd so lustily last Spring because of the defeat of Neal Dow, the vote stood—

For Chase, (highest Law,) 1632
For Barnes, (highest Anti-Law,) 960

Every power on earth was used by the rummies to defeat the Law.

Dr. Luke Hill, of Biddeford, has published a certificate, stating that a Mr. Smith, of the firm of Smith & Lougee, large liquor dealers in Boston, took a thousand dollars with him to Biddeford, Me., to distribute in York County, for the purpose of influencing the elections in favor of the repeal of the liquor law. He happened to call upon Dr. Hill, supposing him to be one of the craft, and let the cat out of the bag. Dr. H., who is a thorough-going temperance man, and highly respected, exposed the whole plot by sending handbills through the county. An immense amount of money has been sent to Maine from Boston.

And yet notwithstanding all, the Law is fully sustained—yea overwhelmingly.—Three cheers for MAINE and the MAINE LAW!

Maine Law in California.

The editor of the Pacific, Rev. Mr. Douglass, who had been on a tour among the miners and Indians, says:

"Rum is a great devilizer. It is a devil to all men, but upon the poor savage, with nothing to restrain his appetite and passions, its effects are speedy and most terrible. Under its influence, an influence which his Christian brother has brought to bear upon him, he will soon melt away, and his race become extinct. How cruel is avarice! It has no compassion—not one feeling of commiseration for human suffering. It stops at no law human or divine. To get gold it will trade in tears, groans, and blood. It is doing it every day in this State. Every day it is coining into gold the heart's blood of some new victim.—Now talk about a man under the sway of passion—talk about genuine liquor sellers being brought by 'moral suasion'—being induced for dear humanity's sake to give up his traffic! Go talk to the North-west wind, and beseech it not to blow! Go to the granite rock, and try to melt it into tears! No, nothing short of the Maine Law will save the Indian race or myriads of our own race in California from destruction. Make liquor a contraband article, and the traffic in it a penitentiary offence, and it will soon disappear from the State, and drunkenness cease to be known."

The following resolution was passed by the National Division, Sons of Temperance of North America, at its recent session.

Our Order may get rid of many difficulties by following it strictly.

Resolved, That the simple fact of making, buying, selling, or using Spirituous or Malt Liquors, Wine or Cider, by a Son of Temperance, shall be prima facie evidence against such Brother upon a trial therefor of a violation of his pledge to the Order, so as to devolve upon him the necessity of proving his innocence of having made or bought or sold, or used such Spirituous or Malt Liquors, Wine or Cider as a beverage."

Burglary.

The dwelling of Gen. Carey, at College Hill, was entered by burglars week before last, and despoiled of about one hundred dollars worth of property; among other things taken, was a beautiful silver cup that had been presented to him by the citizens of Richmond, Ia. His name and the circumstances of presentation, was engraven on it.

The General closes a notice of the loss in the following emphatic terms:

"If our Temperance Goblet should be prostituted to the base purposes of the grog shop, we pray that the hand that fills it may be palsied forever."

☞ The Cayuga Universalist Association at its late meeting at Kelloggsville, passed the following Resolutions:

Resolved, That we regard Intemperance as one of the giant evils of our country and age, and that we feel imperatively called upon to give our active and hearty endeavors to check its blighting progress, and banish it from the world.

Resolved, That we approve the essential features of the so-called "Maine Law," and we recommend all friends of temperance to use their influence for the enactment of a similar law in the Empire State.

CALIFORNIA.—B. S. Hodgson, R. S., Excelsior Division, No. 6, San Francisco, writes the Organ: "The total abstinence cause is progressing in San Francisco, and in California generally. Two Divisions of the Order of the Sons are at present in successful operation in the city; and on Friday evening next a new Division, to be called the Golden Gate, No. 12, is to be instituted. During the last two months, many of our leading citizens have joined the Order, including several of the Judges of the Supreme and Superior Courts, and a number of the legal profession. We hope yet to render California as famous in the temperance world as she is now in the commercial and civil world."

Items of News.

Pearls to the value of about $100,000 per annum are obtained at Panama.

Louisiana has received under various laws, 10,210,122 acres of the public land.

The city marshal of Lowell, on Monday, seized about fifty gallons of liquor, the property of one of the Smith family.

The steamer Arctic left New York for Liverpool, on the 18th, and took out $232,500 in specie.

The number of committals for drunkenness has fallen off in Lowell about 70 per cent. since the new law went into operation.

At Reading, Pa., four young men, while walking upon the track, were run over.—Two of them were instantly killed, and the other two were severely injured.

A frightful accident occurred on the New York and Erie Railroad, near Dunkirk, by which nine persons were killed, and twenty wounded.

An Irishman named Patrick Murphy, was lately fined twenty shillings in Liverpool, for keeping four pigs in his front parlor.

The safe of the treasurer of Huntington county, was blown open last week and about $3,000, deposited by various citizens of the town for safekeeping, stolen.

Dry Times in Maine—for farmers and topers—from precisely opposite reasons.—The farmers want water and the topers want rum. Short allowance of both.

A young hen will lay the first year about 150 eggs, the second about 120, the third 100—diminishing every year as she grows older; and should "go to pot" after the fourth.

In Perry county, Miss., a few days since, an old man named Pearce, whipped his son, a young lad of fourteen. The boy went to a neighbor, borrowed a gun, and shot his father dead.

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION IN MAINE. A letter from Neal Dow, Esq., states that every one of the newly elected Senators in Maine is pledged to support the temperance law, and three-fourths of the House of Representatives.

THE LAW AT NEWPORT.—The Court of Magistrates at Newport, (R. I.,) last week, sustained the new liquor law, and inflicted the fine of $20 each and costs, upon Messrs. Copeland and Anthony, for violating the law.

LIQUOR LAW ITEMS.—Six coffins are said by the Lowell News, to have come down in one train over the Lowell and Nashau Railroad, variously directed, and appearances, smell, &c., strongly indicated that the spirits still remained within them.

LIQUOR SEIZURES.—250 gallons "white eye" were seized yesterday by officer Clark, on Brown's wharf. The bbls. which contained it were marked Pure Cider Vinegar, One half bbl. "same sort" was seized by officer Hall at Longley & Co.'s office.—Portland Argus.

VIRGINIA.—A brother writes from Fredericksburg: "It affords me pleasure to say that the friends of temperance in this section are laboring zealously for a prohibitory law, and it is the opinion of many that three years will not have elapsed before it will be accomplished. The Order is steadily on the increase on our city."

DROWNED.—A passenger on the steamer Express, named Leroy, from Columbus, Ind., fell overboard about 1 o'clock on Saturday, near Kirtley's Landing in East Bend and was drowned. Capt. David immediately stopped the boat and sent out the yawl but could not save him. He was intoxicated when he came on board. He left a bundle of clothing with Mr. A. Frazer in the saloon.

FORTY-FOUR NAMES.—In Rensselaer Co., New York, a tavern keeper had abandoned the traffic in alcohol, after having been for several years engaged in it. Whenever the subject of his selling liquor was referred to, he was observed to manifest a feeling of deep regret and sorrow. A friend once inquired the cause. "I will tell you," said he; and opening his account-book, said, "here are 44 names of men who have all been customers, most of them for years—32 of these, to my knowledge, now lie in the drunkard's grave; 10 of the 12 remaining are now confirmed sots! These are the fruits of this dreadful and degrading business."

GREAT DESTRUCTION OF LIQUOR.—Last evening, about 8 o'clock, the cry of fire resounded through our streets, and the cause of the alarm was found to proceed from a freight car upon the track of the Western Railroad, near the engine house, containing about thirty barrels of New York gin, and five or six of ale, which, by some means or other, had got on fire.—Five barrels of the gin were saved, and two or three barrels of ale, the latter in a damaged condition, but the balance of the cargo was totally consumed. It is said that the liquor came from the West, yesterday afternoon, and was on its way to Boston, but we cannot vouch for the fact. Worcester Spy, 16th.

NEW HARMONY, Sep. 24, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I was at Paris, or rather Stewartsville as it is now called, last night, and had the pleasure of attending Stewartsville Division, No. 380, which was organized on the 2d inst. with 20 members. I should think from all appearances, that they will go ahead. It was a wet and disagreeable evening, yet there was a tolerable good attendance, and they have now five propositions in for next Thursday evening.

Although some few Humites are awfully disturbed at the spread of the unholy and Government undermining scheme, yet it meets with much more favor in and about that place, than I who am well acquainted there could have possibly supposed.

As every one of the members are new hands at the bellows, (say Pump,) some one or two from Poseyville, or Posey Division, have attended with them each evening, and they are now in good spirits.—May they "PUSH ALONG KEEP MOVING."

I have the pleasure of sending you four more names, together with the proper amount of "the root of all evil," which please send from the commencement of Vol. 2d.

I must not conclude without saying that old Posey is wide awake, and determined to merit the appellation given her abroad—that is STAR Divison A. No. 1.

Yours, in Love, Purity, and Fidelity,
J. EDWARD CLARKE.

For the Temperance Chart.

RAYSVILLE, Sep. 20, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—You have undoubtedly heard, (indeed who has not,) of the abominable sink-hole of drunkenness, kept in this town by that Queen of apostates—old Catharine Stappf. Her house had been declared a public nuisance by the Court.—She had often been fined at Court, and by our Justice of the Peace for selling Liquor, as the Law prohibits the sale in this township. The Court failed to remove the nuisance, and would remit much of the fines imposed here, would suffer her to plead guilty to one-eighth of the indictments found against her, impose a light fine thereon, and suffer the remaining seven-eighths to be non-prossed, thereby virtually saying she might go on in her nefarious traffic, and make a young Hell of our town, by keeping a drunken, quarreling mob about her house, and through the streets day and night; and almost every Sabbath we must be shocked to see the bloody fights, and hear the horrid oaths and blasphemies eminating from that sink of pollution.—Notwithstanding we had from her a written pledge, that she would neither keep Liquor nor drunkards about her, but would keep a quiet and reputable house—still she persisted in her liquor traffic—and this, to her, not seeming bad enough to corrupt the morals of all, she had commenced harboring base women also, to draw still more into her net of abominations.

We, as law-abiding and peaceable citizens, had petitioned the Court for redress of our grievances, had expostulated with her and requested her to desist from her unlawful course, and keep a reputable house—and warned her of the consequences if she still persisted in her abominations—all, all in vain. She would curse like an arab, and say—"She would do as she 'tam please, she would sell visky till hell freezed over." We had borne till forbearance was actually criminal. What could we do? What must we do? Must we forever bear with her murder mill, and let her go on making drunkards, destroying the peace, and corrupting the morals of our town, and keep at defiance all Law, Justice and Morality? She ensconced herself behind the Legal advice of that pink of morality, Hon. T. D. Walpole, who she said "would see her safely through her LABOR." The day of trouble came, and a singular Cate-astrophe occurred.

Last Monday morning, about 9 o'clock, the Ladies of our town having concluded they would try what virtue there was in their kind of moral suasion, convened at her door, and sought admission, she (apprised of their intent) had congregated in her house, towards a dozen loafers and whisky guzzlers, armed with axes, pistols, clubs, &c., to defend the castle. The door being fast, and they denied admittance; when suddenly the door was thrown wide open, and the old queen, hyena-like, pounced upon the Ladies with her axe, trying to hew them down, her valiants filling up the door-way, and with horrid imprecations telling how smart they were, that they could whip ——— a whisky barrel I suppose. But they could not whip the Ladies in this case—who being prohibited egress where the carpenters left an opening, concluded in their wisdom to make one for themselves, therefore, they soon demolished windows and doors sufficient for a free passage, through which they entered, and caused the old amiable hag to empty all her liquor on the cellar floor, making a puddle some four inches deep; cut down her sign-post, and split her sign into oven-wood.

Although they were opposed by some young gallants, yet when Ladies use edge tools they cut, they do. They were not awed by threats, nor intimidated by brandishing weapons, neither did they surrender nor faint, each performed all her part, they seemed to vie with each other, who could do most in so glorious cause.

The young Gents. that stood sentinels in the whisky castle, have gained an enviable reputation, and will be awarded by all young Ladies, if opportunity offers, with a sack.

We are now in hopes of better times.—We have had trouble enough from that Hell-hole, to justly raise the holy indignation of every well-wisher of good order in society. We commenced holding Temperance meetings on Monday evenings in this town, last December, and have kept them up regularly ever since. Much good has been effected—yet with all our efforts, we could not succeed in stopping this murder mill.

There appears by the Ladies' action, a change to have come over her spirits, which we trust will render her a better citizen—improve the morals of our town—warn her and all others against violating the peace, or outraging the feelings of a law-abiding community, lest a similar Cate-astrophe befall them.

The Ladies have WILLED that the traffic shall be dried up, and what they will, you know they will.

Respectfully yours, in L. P. & F.,
W. A.

FREDRICKSBURGH, Sep. 19, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Having never heard anything from Fredricksburgh Division, No. 362, I venture to offer a few items, in order to let you know that we are not asleep in the cause of temperance, but wide awake and ever on the alert watching for a favorable opportunity, to strike an effective blow into the ranks of King Alcohol. We consider that we compose but one small Division of the great Temperance army, that is engaged in defending their country against an invading army, under the command of King Alcohol, and we now report our success. We have had several engagements and thus far we have come off victorious, the proud flag of Temperance still waves triumphant over the head of every opposition, and there it will wave till Intemperance will hide its deformed head, and its advocates will be ashamed to acknowledge him as their leader. What will then become of those worthys that cast their votes against the temperance law? They will then no doubt all be good temperance men. But mark them that you be not deceived by them again, but let them stay at home where they belong, and fill their seats with honest men that are not afraid to declare their principles publicly and independently of party favor, for such men will we cast our votes, or not cast them at all We have had some Arnold's in our camp, but thank God we have got rid of them, and what is left, is as tried gold.

I will close my remarks by wishing the temperance cause success in every undertaking, and God speed the day when our country shall be delivered from this awful curse.

Yours, in L. P. & F.,
J. S. FINLEY.

TORONTO, Sep. 10th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I have been looking in the Chart for some time, to see if I could see anything from Social Division, No. 328, and as yet have found nothing. I suppose the reason is, no one has given you an accout of our proceedings. I don't know that I am the proper person to give you the particulars of our Division, as I live somewhat remote from it, so that I am not posted up in the affairs of it. But I can say we have a strong Division, and can be safe in saying, that we are right side up with care on the Temperance question. Our Division has been very prosperous, and is at this time. We have erected a large and commodious Temperance Hall; the opposition is going down very fast within our limits, but there are some enemies yet, and those enemies are among the members of the different churches, but I intend to fight as long as there is a fight to be fought in the cause of Temperance. The worst that I can see of our enemies, they wont meet us in the field of battle; they are afraid of excitement, and well they might be—well they may be afraid, their cause wont stand the test, well they know it to, hence they avoid discussion.

Yours, in L. P. & F.,
A SON OF TEMPERANCE.

MR. EDITOR:—May I be permitted to ask, through your columns, which is really the worst man to his fellow—the GROCERY KEEPER, who is by nature and his advantages, coarse, ignorant, and wicked, whose sympathies are dried up, whose conscience is seared, and whose hardened soul can neither be wooed by tears of injured innocence, nor driven by the threatenings of future punishment, from his hellishly selfish traffic, or the refined, Christian GENTLEMAN, who, by his vote, allows, authorizes, and encourages the sale of ardent spirits to be carried on in his State, county or town?

"Take one example to our purpose quite:" The parent who condemns the practice of gambling as immoral and anti-Christian, and yet furnishes his children with the means and protection necessary to fit them for this unholy calling, provided they will pay back a small portion, say $15, of their income, toward defraying the expenses of their dear Christian father's family.

ERAD.

For the Temperance Chart.

NEW COLUMBUS, Sept. 28, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—On examination we notice a number of articles written for the Chart, setting forth in colors that never fade, the glorious prospects that await the finally faithful, and in connection with these reports, as well as our own conviction of the good influence it has, we have deemed it incumbent on us as a duty we owe to our brethren, to inform them, through the medium of your valuable paper, (if you should see fit to publish it,) of the condition of our Division.

In December, 1851, the G. D. of the S. of T. of the State of Indiana, granted us a charter, under which we have been working; and, alike in all other good causes, the Great Patriarch above has crowned our efforts with success, until the grim monster Alcohol, with its companion (the doggery keeper), has been compelled to leave the peaceable shores of modern civilization, and seek a hiding place where he may once more be permitted to open his doors to perjury, manslaughter, and bloodshed. Thus we are left to enjoy the rights of a peaceable home, a sober community, and a thankful people.

To which we would add, that for once we are able to appreciate the meaning of Temperance, Purity, Fidelity, and Love. It is now that Temperance waves its banner unfurled, and by its Purity has saved a lost and ruined world, together with Fidelity and Love, that we may true to each other prove.

Yours in Love, Purity and Fidelity,
N. BRAY,
J. R. DAILY,
F. CROMER.

For the Temperance Chart,

CRAIG, SWITZ'D CO., October 4.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Please allow me to give the readers of the Chart an account of our temperance mass meeting, held at Enterprise, in this county, not long since. We were favored with the company of some noble temperance men, among whom were Rev. Messrs. Atkinson, (president of the meeting,) Stewart, Bonham, Crawford, and John Dumont, the great apostle of temperance of Vevay—all of this county; also Mr. Kyle, P. G. W. P. of Kentucky, and Bro. Edwards, of Cincinnati; all of whom added much to the cause of temperance, by their matchless powers in displaying the beauties of temperance in all its glowing colors.

Bro. Edwards is a whole team—a full-blooded Son of Temperance, dyed in the wool—one of the first men initiated west of the Alleghany mountains; he understands handling the whisky seller to a demonstration—he gives no quarter, cries aloud, and spares not. He spends all his time in advocating the cause. He can entertain an audience for four hours at a stretch, and keep them convulsed with laughter almost incessantly, or he can reverse the matter into seriousness. He gave six temperance lectures, one of which was a Scriptural temperance lecture—the best ever heard in this county.

Notwithstanding the rain fell in torrents for two days, we had a good time; it was cheering, indeed, to see all parties and classes of the human family mingling together, and aiming at one grand object.—The citizens of Enterprise and vicinity extended their generosity to a degree almost unknown before; their hearts and houses were open, so that all met with a warm reception. There were a number of candidates for the various offices of this county present, all of whom were called upon to express their views on temperance legislation and the resolutions passed by the meeting. Some of them are good temperance men, and will be well sustained by the temperance voters; but it was amusing to hear some of them declare themselves strong temperance men, and it is well known they are identified with the whisky party, some of them whisky drinkers and sellers.

Long will this meeting be remembered, and no doubt much good has resulted from it to temperance. Although I am sorry to say we have some few vampyres and bloodsuckers, hot-headed would-be politicians, regardless of truth, and a correspondent of the Vevay Gazette signed "A True Son," (God help him! I pray,) and the editor not far behind, all hurling their poor futile darts at us, without any effect. But enough.

Forever yours,
NICHOLAS VINEYARD.

A bill has been introduced in the Canadian Legislature, by Hon. Malcolm Cameron, prohibiting the manufacturing, importation, or sale of intoxicating liquors, in the provinces of Canada.

A Last Resort.

At a late trial for liquor-selling in Providence, R. I., the principal witness was called to the door by two of the friends of the accused party, and then taken by force out of the reach of the court. When the witness was called to the stand, he was not to be found, and the facts of his disappearance being made known, the writ was continued two days, and the officer who summoned the witness was furnished with authority to recover him. He proceeded to the propeller, which was soon to start for New York, and had been there but a few moments when a hack drove up with the kidnapped witness. He was taken in charge by the officer, and conveyed to a safe retreat till the trial. This is one of the resorts of the rummies to prevent the execution of the law, and create riot and disturbance.

At the first liquor trial in Newport, R. I., the rummies got up a row about some of the witnesses, but not succeeding in their efforts to mob them, they telegraphed to some miscreants of the same stamp in Providence that the witnesses would return there by land, and advised that they be met and robbed on their arrival. The telegraph company are amendable to the laws for thus assisting an incendiary movement, and the case is to be investigated.—Their disregard of the laws show how desperate are our opposers, and now closely they are pushed by the law. It is a good evidence of its efficacy to diminish crime—for who would expect the Devil to yield without a severe struggle?

The Beacon is There!

As the storm lulls, the mariner looks for the beacon light, and rejoices as it beams come across the waters.

The star shines out, on the Eastern shore. The Maine Law stands firm as the shore beaten by the surge. The election has been held in Maine, and the Legislature is Maine Law without a doubt. Rejoice and send back a huzza for our friends in Maine.

We feared the result. The rum interest of all New England, of Boston more especially, entered the field. Money has been freely used, and corruption made the order of the day. Every defeat hastens the doom of the traffic. The law stands. The longer it stands the firmer it will stand. The people will sustain it, for all the interests of society are blessed where it has sway.

One hundred guns for Maine!—Cayuga Chief.

WISCONSIN.—A State Temperance Convention was held at Watertown on the 25th ult., and a State Temperance League formed for the purpose of securing the enactment of the Maine Law. The resolutions are right to the point. They say:

"Resolved, That we hold it to be the duty of all temperance men to attend the town and county primary meetings and caucuses, and to use their best endeavors to secure the nomination of firm and reliable temperance men as candidates of the several parties for all such offices as may bear upon the passage and enforcement of a prohibitory law.

"Resolved, That in our action in regard to the above named law, we will consider what is needed, and not stop to consider what is possible."

In Southern Wisconsin, also, an enthusiastic convention was held at Troy on the same day, and adopted similar resolutions.

TERRIBLE FACTS.—At a temperance mass meeting held in New Jersey, last week, Wm. Edmonds, Esq., keeper of the N. Y. city prison, who was one of the speakers, stated, that during the last two years forty-three thousand human beings had been confined at the tombs, and of this large number (sufficient to make a city twice the size of Hartford,) not over one hundred had been confined in the prison, in that time, without the immediate or first cause of their imprisonment could be ascribed to the intoxicating bowl—more horrible yet to relate, among this number were several ministers of the gospel, who, by sipping at King Alcohol's cup, had forgotten their Omniscient, Omnipotent, and ever merciful King, who had called them to a more lofty and honorable purpose, than by their example to instruct men to swim in beastly drunkenness to ruin.

☞ A gentleman on whom we can rely, informs us that he has now in his employ five men, who, for the year preceding the nineteenth of July, were known as drunkards, and had not in the time performed a single week of unbroken labor, but who since that time have been steadily at work, and have carried to their families, every Saturday night, the wages of their week's toil. Let the rum organs put that in their pipes, and then see if they can't hunt up a case of drunkenness somewhere, brought about by the liberality of some of the rum-selling gentry.—Providence Advocate.

On Sunday last three men, says the Boston Post, called at the "Prospect House," in Needham, and demanded Liquor, which was refused, when one of them drew a pistol and snapped it at the landlord. The piece missed fire, and the three reprobates found themselves in a "jug" without liquor in it.

STERN-WHEEL BOATS AND TEMPERANCE.—Charley Worrel was a young man who had got into the way of drinking brandy quite insensibly, and it had more than once rendered him quite insensible. His mother expostulated, his male progenitor rebuked. Almira Brown, his affianced, cut him out of her affections as she did his autograph out of her album—in fact Charley was going to the dogs with infinite vivacity.

He was a clerk in Doenutt's wholesale house, was Charley, and Doenutt sent him to St. Louis on business. Charley got a good boat down, and as he had nothing particular to engage his attention, drank brandy the whole length of the river.—Coming back he was compelled, much against his wishes, to take a stern-wheeler, and it so happened there was no Bar on the boat. The drought was horrid for the first two days. The next two it became endurable. The fifth and sixth days he yearned very little for the ardent, but became interested in Hildreth's United States. The seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth days cured him, so by the time he got to Louisville he had concluded that brandy was a luxury not adapted to his stomach. He joined the Sons of Temperance when he got home, and is now W. A. of the Division.—New Era.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick.

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

To Cure a Cold, with Headache and Soreness of the Body, take the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, and wrap up warm, to sweat during the night.

For a Cold and Cough, take it morning, noon, and evening, according to directions on the bottle, and the difficulty will soon be removed. None will long suffer from this trouble when they find it can be so readily cured. Persons afflicted with a seated cough, which breaks them of their rest at night, will find, by taking the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, they may be sure of sound, unbroken sleep, and consequently refreshing rest. Great relief from suffering, and an ultimate cure, is afforded to thousands who are thus afflicted, by this invaluable remedy.

From its agreeable effect in these cases, many find themselves unwilling to forego its use when the necessity for it has ceased.

From two eminent Physicians in

Fayetteville, Tenn., April 16th, 1851.

Sir:—We have given your Cherry Pectoral an extensive trial in our practice, and find it to surpass every other remedy we have for curing affections of the respiratory organs

DRS. DIEMER & HAMPTON.

To Singers and Public Speakers this remedy is invaluable, as by its action on the throat and lungs, when taken in small quantities, it removes all hoarseness in a few hours, and wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of voice.

Asthma is generally much relieved, and often wholly cured by Cherry Pectoral. But there are some cases so obstinate as to yield entirely to no medicine. Cherry Pectoral will cure them, if they can be cured.

Bronchitis, or irritation of the throat and upper portion of the lungs, may be cured by taking Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses. The uncomfortable oppression is soon relieved.

Rev. Dr. Lansing, of Brooklyn, New York, states: "I have seen the Cherry Pectoral cure such cases of Asthma and Bronchitis as leads me to beleive it can rarely fail to cure those diseases."

For Croup. Give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

Whooping Cough may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral

The Influenza is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences, while their neighbors, without the Cherry Pectoral, were suffering from the disease.

Salem, Ohio, June 11th, 1851.

Doct. J. C. Ayer:—I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your Cherry Pectoral in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough, by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best physicians freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it, than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine, he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully, J. D. SINCLAIR,
Deputy Postmaster.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the Cherry Pectoral, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and coughs, and pulmonary diseases. P. Cleveland, M. D.

Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

Dr. Valentine Mott, the widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of 'Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,' which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been affected by Cherry Pectoral in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it.

POETRY.

The Pledge.

BY JOHN NEAL.

Sampson was a Nazarite. He drank no wine nor strong drink; and so long as he kept the pledge and the secret of his strength, was indeed a giant.

Brothers! we have pledged ourselves,
Like the mighty man of old,
By a vow that bindeth fast,
By the future! by the past!
By their banners now unrolled!

That the secret of our strength,
Unacknowledged—unrevealed—
Setting us apart from others,
Undefiled, O, Giant Brothers!
Shall for ever, be concealed.

Never to be told on earth—
Never breathed aloud in prayer—
Never written—never spoken—
Lest our artful vow, if broken,
Brings us bondage and despair.

Brothers! let us all remember,
How that strong man, SELF betrayed;
He, that with a heart of iron,
Where he journeyed, heard the lion
Roar against him, undismayed—

He, the mightiest of the land,
By the harlotry of Sense,
Blind and fettered, came to be
A jester at a jubilee,
A proverb for his impotence!

And though his strength came back anew,
When he bowed himself in prayer,
Until he had avenged the wrong,
That called him up with shout and song,
And jeer and scoff—he perished there.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A New Way to Pop the Question.

BY JAMES H. DANA.

I was sitting, one day, dreamingly regarding the fire, when my friend, Harry Conway, came in, looking inexpressibly woe-begone.

"What's the matter Hal?" I said, cheerily, "has Lizzy jilted you?"

"You've hit it," he replied, moodily.—"To-day, when I asked her to be my partner on our sleigh-ride, she curtly told me that she was engaged with Ned Hammersley."

"Rather strange," I said. "Surely she don't mean to prefer that conceited fool to you?"

"I wish I had never seen her," said Harry, "I've been in torture for a month past, wishing to ask her to be mine, and yet withheld by the fear of a refusal. And now the suspense is over; but oh! how fatally. She despises my suit."

"Not so fast, Harry," I answered. "I am a married man, and claim to know something of the gentler sex; and there is nothing more certain than that a woman frequently means the very reverse of what she does."

"Then you don't believe," eagerly said my friend, "that Lizzy scorns me?"

"I do not. On the contrary, I fancy that she likes you—nay! more than half loves you."

"God bless you for those words," cried Harry, shaking my hand rapturously.—"You make a new man of me." But almost immediately his countenance fell, and he added, "Yet what did she mean by engaging to go with Hammersley? She knew very well I intended to ask her."

"Perhaps," I said, quietly, "there's the pinch. Young ladies now-a-days, don't like to have it thought that any time will do to ask them. When I was a bachelor, Harry, and wished a fair companion for a sleigh-ride, I took very good care that no one asked her before I did."

"A precious fool I've been," said Harry.

"That's a true word, if ever you spoke one," said I, laughing. "You know no more about courting, Harry, than a cat does of astronomy. The case is this, my dear fellow. Lizzy is piqued, and, though she had a good right to be so perhaps, you must not allow her, for all that, to get the advantage of you. If she flirts, you must counter-flirt; and so go in the parlor at once, and ask Miss Lawrence to be your partner; you'll find her and my wife at their crotchet-work; and hark—a secret in your ear. My pretty cousin is engaged, though it is not known here; so there'll be no harm done, flirt as hard as you will."

Now, Miss Lawrence was a beauty, an heiress, and a famous toast. Her home was in New York, but she had come to spend Christmas among our hills, and great had been the sensation which she had created; for, in truth, there was no one to compare with her, in the whole county, except Lizzy herself.

After much persuasion Harry consented to my plan. Fortunately my fair cousin had made no engagement for the ride.—When Harry had gone I let Miss Lawrence into the secret.

"Now," said I, "you must assist me to make this match. Lizzy loves Harry, there is no douht; but she is a little too wilful; for she has every thing her own way here."

"As all belles should," saucily interrupted my cousin.

"Agreed," said I, "except when it is going to make them unhappy for life. Harry is very sensitive, and a little flirting, let me tell you, will not frighten him off altogether. The thing is to make Lizzy jealous, and so repay her in her own coin.—After that she'll easier come to terms."

"For once, I suppose, I must turn traitor to my sex," said Miss Lawrence laughing.

The evening for the sleigh-ride came, and was a night among a thousand. There was not a cloud in the sky, and the winter moon shone clear and beautiful; the air was cold as zero, but still; the landscape looked like dream-land. It was a sight to make an old man young again, to see the sleighs dashing to and fro through the village streets, collecting their lovely freight; while the merry jingle of the bells made the blood dance joyously in the veins.

Away swept the gay cavalcade. Most of the belles and beaux were distributed through three enormous sleighs, and, to judge from the incessant mirth kept up, were crazy with fun. There were half a dozen single sleighs, however; and among these were Harry's and Hammersley's.

Lizzy looked astonished, as I suspected she would, when she saw who Harry's companion was. She knew that Miss Lawrence was quite equal to herself in beauty, and superior in fortune: and a shade of alarm stole over her face. But she disguised it cleverly, under an additional gaiety of manner; was wittier than ever; and danced, laughed, and talked as if she was the happiest of the happy.

My fair cousin played her part, meantime, to admiration. Everybody thought that Harry had made a conquest; and not a few complimented him, even in Lizzy's hearing, on his good fortune. But he himself was less elated.

"We're carrying it too far," he said to me, anxiously. "Lizzy don't mind me a bit. She's really half in love with Hammersley. See how she leans on his arm and looks up into his face."

"So did Miss Lawrence, five minutes ago, to you; and yet she's in love with another. Ah! Harry, women are born-cheats. I'll wager now that Lizzy is as uneasy as yourself."

"I wish I could think so," sighed Harry.

"Keep up your flirtation," I said, "and don't be the first to give in——"

I would have said more, but, at that moment, a cry of fire rang startingly through the ball-room; and looking up, I saw, from the huge volumes of smoke pouring into the door-way, that the hall was in flames. Simultaneously a voice cried that the staircase was on fire, and retreat in that direction cut off. It seems that, while we had been dancing, a candle had fallen, and the fire got headway undetected.

"We must escape by the windows, Harry," I cried. "Fortunately the roof of the porch is just beneath them, and the descent thence not far, while the snow will break the jump. I will look after my wife; you take Miss Lawrence."

But Harry had already disappeared. As, at that instant, I caught sight of my wife, I thought no more of him; but pushed through the affrighted crowd, in order to join her. In another moment she was safe on the ground, and with her Miss Lawrence, whom I found clinging to her.—Having rescued them, I hastened back to render what assistance I could to others.

I had scarcely, however, regained the ball-room, when I saw a wild form dashing by; but I had hardly recognized it as that of Lizzy, when it fell into the arms of a gentleman advancing quite as wildly from the opposite direction.

"Oh! save me, save me," she cried; bewildered with terror; and with that sunk senseless.

Could I believe my eyes? Yes! it was Harry, not Hammersley, into whose arms she had fallen. Nor had it been a mistake. That glance of reliance and love, which she gave my friend, ere she fainted, was eloquent of the contrary.

"You didn't seem to think of Miss Lawrence," said I, slyly, to Harry, when all having safely escaped, we went together to seek our sleighs. "Nor, in fact, did Lizzy appear to think of Hammersley. A pretty pair you are to flirt!"

Harry made no reply, but looked excessively flat, yet happy beyond description.

A month subsequently Lizzy married my friend, Miss Lawrence being bridesmaid.

"Do you and Harry intend to flirt any more? said I, in a whisper to the bride. "You're such adepts, you should keep it up. You especially finish so superbly."

Lizzy blushed scarlet, but rallying, saucily replied:

"I find it was you that put Harry up to flirting; you wished to set us quarrelling, you rogue; but he checked-mated you, sir, by my new way of popping the question."

Harry laughed, my wife laughed, and Miss Lawrence laughed, and all at myself. So Lizzy had the best of it after all, as women will.

Scooping out a Channel.

Boats engaged in navigating the Illinois river now carry mammoth shovels manufactured of iron and wood to ensure their passage over the most difficult bars. This may appear strange to some, but it is nevertheless true. We saw several on board the little steamer Movastar yesterday, and which, we learn, where used to great advantage on her recent downward trip in getting over the shoal places. The way the thing is managed is this: when the boat strikes a lump or gravelly bar or even a mud bank, all hands jump overboard, shovels in hand—how deep do you suppose they go? Why, scarcely up to their knees, and if the boat is not badly grounded, the bar is soon dug away sufficient for the steamer to pass, and all hands jump back again, roll down their breeches and attend to firing up, sweeping off decks or some other duty until the boat again strikes when there is another rush overboard, and so it continues until the steamer reaches the Mississippi. Shovelling is not, however, exclusively confined to descending boats; upward bound practice the same thing, and not unfrequently the almost entire bed of the river is torn up before a difficult spot can be passed. Small boats or yawls, at the present stage of water, are a nuisance in the river, and but a few steamers carry them. When a passenger wishes to get ashore, all he has to do is to draw his boots, roll his pantaloons to a respectable height, and step overboard, it matters but little when or where, and he is soon safe on terra firma, and what is more, with great economy of time, the boat need not stop to land her passengers. There is some disadvantage, however, attending this mode of reaching the shore, and the second clerks have to be punctual and spry, or they loose a great many grey backs, as the deck passengers are termed. We heard of a clerk a few days since, who calculated upon about fifty dollars as the amount he should collect in the steerage from the number of persons he saw about, but on going below; a short distance from a point at which several canal boatmen, and others were to get out, he found that they had already gone. Upon inquiry it was found that, availing themselves of the darkness of the night and while the boat was working over a bar, they went ashore without settling their fare.

In navigating the Illinois at its present low stage, the greatest precaution has to be taken to keep the channel; and we believe it is the custom, when a bar is approached, or the boat arrives at some extremely shallow place in the river, to send out a leadsman, who is most generally one of the crew. This individual is generally provided with a stick, from four to six feet in length, and as he takes the river some distance in advance of the boat, he probes right and left, and every now and then cries out, in true sailor style, not 'mark less twain'—but t-w-e-l-v-e, f-i-f-t-e-e-n, or e-i-g-h-t-e-e-n inches. The pilot follows him with his eye, and when the necesary depth is ascertained, and the boat out of danger, the bell taps and the leadsman returns on board.

This is a true and faithful account of the present mode of navigating one of the most productive rivers in the Union. The Illinois sends more produce to market, and perhaps there is more travel on it, than any stream of the same size in the world.—But notwithstanding all this, we see the hardy and enterprising men who are engaged in its commerce laboring to the greatest disadvantage, and surmounting natural obstacles that would deter the stoutest resolution, and appal the heart of any but a Western steamboatman.

Help Yourselves.

This says the Yankee Blade, is the true secret of success, the master-key that unlocks all difficulties, in the various paths of life. Aide-toi, et le ciel t'aidera, as the French have it—help yourself, and Heaven will help you. The greatest affliction that can befall a young man is, to be the recipient of charity—to lean, for any length of time, upon others for support.—He who begins with crutches will end with crutches. It is not in the sheltered garden, but on the rugged Alpine cliffs, where the storm beats most violently, that the hardiest plants are reared. It is not by the use of corks, bladders, and life-preservers, that you can best learn to swim, but by plunging courageously into the wave, and buffeting it, like Cæsar and Cassius, "with lusty sinews." The monied charity of individuals to individuals is one of the greatest curses that afflict society. It is the Upas tree, that paralyzes and reduces to the last gasp the moral energy of every man who inhales its poisenous atmosphere. Under the appearance of aiding, it weakens its victims, and keeps them in perpetual slavery and degradation. Cold, consequential, and patronizing, it freezes the recipient into humiliation, and there leaves him, as firmly wedged as Sir John Franklin amid the thick-ribbed ice of the Arctic Ocean.

Money bestowed this way is nine times out of ten more truely wasted than if thrown in the sea. It is labor bestowed upon a worthless soil, incapable of yielding anything but a crop of weeds, or feble plants which never reach maturity. God never intended that strong, independent human beings should be reared by clinging to others, like the ivy to the oak, for support. The difficulties, hardships, and trials of life---the obstacles that one encounters in the road to fortune–are positive blessings. They knit his muscles more firmly, and teach him self-reliance; just as by wrestling with an athlete, who is superior to us, we increase our own strength, and learn the secret of his skill. Read the history of the rich and poor in all ages and countries, and if you do not find that the "lucky dogs," as they are called, begun life at the foot of the ladder, without a "finger's lift" from anybody, while the "unfortunates," who flit along the paths of life more like scarecrows than human beings, attribute the first declension in their fortunes to having been bolstered and propped up by others—we will resign all pretensions to philosophy. All experience shows that this boasted benevolence tends to extinguish the faint sparks of energy in those who partake of it, till, having fallen into the despair and indolence inseparable from a cultivated sense of inferiority, they look upon themselves as beyond the pale of hope, and at last loose even the wish for independence.

Why is winter like a cat-fight? Because it makes the the fur fly.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Laura Bridgman.

This young lady still resides in the Blind Institution at Boston, under the care of the benevolent and ingenious Dr. Howe. A gentleman communicates to the Boston Transcript some interesting particulars respecting an interview which he lately enjoyed with her.

"She was not (he writes) with the other children, as she could not hear or take part in the music. Your readers may not at all be aware that Laura is blind, deaf, and dumb. She can neither hear, see, nor speak. I had, somehow, formed an opinion that she was a little girl, but I learned that she was twenty-two years of age, although she appeared not over sixteen or eighteen. Her features are regular, an oval face, with a very pleasing expression of countenance. Her head is what phrenologists would call finely balanced—the moral and intellectual predominating. Her demeanor was ladylike and attractive.—One would not suppose she ever entertained a thought of sadness from her appearance. The mode of communicating intelligence to her, is entirely different from that of any other human being—she being the only person living who is at once blind, deaf, and dumb. The deaf and dumb can learn by seeing, and the blind by hearing—but Laura can learn in no such way.—She can only learn by the sense of touch. Strange as it may appear, she has been taught not only to converse freely, but to write. This has been accomplished by the sense of touch alone. How did she learn her letters? How was the first idea communicated to her? As we entered the room she was in earnest conversation with her blind companion. The blind girl could hear our approach, but Laura literally "turned a deaf ear" to us. While viewing the two, we almost envied the condition of the blind girl. in contrast with the night of night in which poor Laura was encompassed. Laura could speak to others by the motion of her fingers, like the deaf and dumb, spelling out every word. But while she could speak to others in this way, no one by similar motions could speak to her, as she could not see the motion of their hands. In speaking to her, the motion of the fingers had to be made inside of her hand. She could then understand their meaning. Laura and the blind girl both conversed in this way. On the desk before Laura lay a piece of grooved tin, with a slip of paper. I asked if she would write her name for me, as I should prize it, and preserve it as a choice memento.—She complied cheerfully, after learning the request through her teacher. She placed the paper on the grooved tin, measuring the distance from the sides, and wrote in plain round letters 'LAURA BRIDGMAN to DR. C————.' She guided her pencil with the left hand in the grooves of tin."

A Mother's Whim.

A certain lady had a child which she never allowed to be contradicted, for fear it would make him sick. Relatives, friends, and even husband, told her she would spoil the child, but all was of no avail. One day she heard him scream with anger in the garden. At the moment she ran and ascertained the cause to be that the servent had refused to give him something he wanted.

'You impertinent creature, (said the mother to the servant,) not to give the child what he wants!'

'By my troth,' said the girl, 'he may cry until morning, and he'll not get it.'

Enraged beyond bounds at this reply, the lady ran for her husband to chastise the saucy servant. The husband, who was as weak as his wife, cried out to the servant, 'You insolent creature, do you have the impudence to disobey your mistress?'

'It is true, sir I did not obey her. The child has been crying for the moon, which he sees reflected in the fountain, I could not give it to him, though commanded by my mistress. Perhaps she can.

A general laugh ensued, in which the lady despite her anger, joined. It was a good lesson for her.

☞ "How do you spell Feladelfy?" asked a small city grocer of his partner one day, as he was sprinkling sand upon a letter which he was about to dispatch to the "City of Brotherly love." "Why, Fel-a, Fela, del, Feladel, fy,—Feladelfy." "Then I've got it right," said the partner (in ignorance as well as in business,) "I thought I might have made a mistake!"

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 20, 1852.

Grand Division.

The Grand Division will convene in this city, on Monday next, at 6 o'clock P. M.

As our time will be wholly occupied during the present week in preparing for the session, and the next week in attending it, our readers will understand the reason of lack of Editorial matter in these two numbers of the Chart. We will try and make it up hereafter.

We publish to-day Tract No. 2.

The Queen and the Maine Law.

Our opponents were crowing lustily not long ago at the report that Queen Victoria had withheld her assent to the Maine Law, recently passed by the Parliament of the province of New Brunswick.

We are glad to hear that this is not the case—the Queen has approved the bill, and it is now the law.

Temperance Testimony.

The following extract from a report of W. H. Hadley, Minister at large in the State of Maine, shows the effect of liquor law on the morals of the State:

"For six months past I have given much attention to the subject of temperance.—Intemperance being the great inducing cause of almost all the suffering, poverty, and vice among the poor, with which I have come in contact in exercising the duties of my office, I cannot consider this subject as foreign to my appropriate calling.

"Previous to the passage of the recent Liquor Bill, I assisted in finding out 170 places where intoxicating liquors were illegally sold and drank. We obtained a great amount of statistics of the traffic and its effects, which the peerless Liquor Bill in question is likely to render useless.—We have persuaded many to sign the pledge, which they will find little difficulty in keeping when there are no intoxicating drinks to be obtained. I deem it worthy of remark that all the lower class of drunkards of my acquaintance are in favor of the law, and anxious to have it thoroughly executed. They say, "only take away the temptation and we shall do well enough." One of these unfortunate men, who lives within a stone's cast of nine liquor shops, said to me yesterday, exultingly, "they are all closed now—not a drop is to be had at one of them—but such long faces as their owners wear, especially on Sundays, I never saw before." If the poor inebriates are praying for the execution of the law—and many of them most assuredly are—we cannot view the "putting of the bottle to such men and making them drink," but with redoubled abhorrence. Under such circumstances, nothing but the most reckless disregard of God and man could induce any one to do anything to favor this most nefarious traffic, or to violate a law the most salutary and needful to human progress ever enacted on earth. I should consider its repeal without a substitute equally salutary and stringent, a greater calamity than all the plagues of Egypt poured upon our land at once."

☞ A man named Thomas Jefferson White, a resident of Mechanicsburgh, in this county, died suddenly last evening in this city. He was about thirty-five years of age, and a tailor by trade.—Journal.

Another victim of the accursed Liquor traffic. We understand that this man had been intoxicated all day, and when found had in his possession a bottle of whisky, furnished very likely to aid some of the very many whisky candidates who were running for office on the day of his death. When are such scenes to have an end?—When Whigs and Democrats think more of the welfare and lives of their fellow men than of the triumph of their party, and not before. We saw more men intoxicated on election day than we have seen before in twelve month, whiskey was free that day.

The State Sentinel.

The little cub of the above paper, is down on us in several articles lately, trying to impeach our veracity, &c. In our last, we proved him guilty of telling eight deliberate lies, which he does not pretend to deny. When he clears up his character for truth and veracity, it will be time enough for us to answer his article in the Sentinel of the 13th inst.

Until then we shall take no notice of any thing he may say. We quoted the provision of the bill as we understood it from reading it, and as we yet believe to be correct.

As to the bill being a better temperance bill than was ever before passed in either House of the Legislature," no man of sense believes a word of it, and the assertions of the Sentinel will not be very likely to convince them. When we have more leisure we have something more to say on this subject.

American Temperance Magazine.

No. 3 of Vol. 3, of this excellent work is received. It contains a portrait of F. W. Kellogg, Esq., who has lately traveled extensively in Europe, lecturing on Temperance.

We continue to furnish this work and the Chart one year for $2 00.

Templar's Magazine.

Vol. 3, No. 1, is on our table containing its usual variety. It is a shame that this work is not better supported.

Every Templar in the land should take a copy. J. Wadsworth, M. W. R., Publisher, Cincinnati, price $1 00 per year. We will forward subscriptions at any time.

Coarse Grain.

The question is often asked what will the farmers do with their corn if the Maine Law prevails and stops the Distilleries? We will endeavor to answer that question—we set out with the assertion that it is the most miserable policy in the world if profit alone is concerned, to sell corn to the distilleries.

The great staple of the West is Pork. Now it is a fact that the slop of a distillery will fatten as much pork as the corn would have done before it was distilled.

The farmer therefore who raises hogs and sells grain to a distiller, is reducing the price of pork by creating a competition in the market. The distiller takes his corn, makes whisky from it, and feeds the slop to hogs.

Now he has made one profit, and a heavy one too, on his whisky, and he can afford to sell his pork at half the price the farmer can, and make money at it. He does it, and thereby reduces the price of the great staple of the West.

Now suppose that instead of selling corn to the distiller, the farmer fattens pork and beef with it.

Corn in this State will not average over 25 cents per bushel, and very few distilleries pay that. Ten bushels will make, if properly fed, one hundred and twenty-five pounds of pork, or one hundred and fifty pounds of beef. Suppose these great staples are worth four dollars per 100 lbs., and the farmer gets five dollars for ten bushels of corn put into pork, or fifty cents per bushel—or six dollars if put into beef, or sixty cents per bushel. If the price is three dollars per 100 lbs., he gets three fourths these prices, or thirty-seven and one-half and forty-five cents per bushel for his corn, and shuts all competition out of the market.

Let the farmer then put his corn into beef and pork instead of selling it to the distiller, and he will make from fifty to one hundred per cent. by the operation.

The following which we find in the Rochester Journal, is to the point:

"Spencer Booth, Esq., a merchant of Branchport, Yates county, gave me, the other day, a copy of his book account with twelve head of cattle fattened by him in 1851.

The cattle are charged at cost when tied up, January 1, 1851:

To cash paid for 12 cattle at $18 each,	$216,00
To cash paid for hay for same,	24,00
To cash paid for 240 bushels of grain, equal parts of barley, corn, and oats at 48 cents per bushel,	117,20
To cash paid man for taking care of cattle two months,	10,00
	$367,20
March 1, 1851—Cr. by cash received for 12 cattle at $41 each,	492,00
	367,20
	$127,80

Thus we see that Mr. Booth, by putting his coarse grain into beef, received about $1,02 per bushel, or made, clear profit, 54 cents on each bushel of barley, corn, and oats. The result in 1850 and 1852, (last winter,) was just about that above stated. And Mr. Booth adds in a letter to me: "I am satisfied that it is safe to calculate that every bushel of coarse grain, properly fed to cattle or hogs, is worth one dollar per bushel."

Let our farmers look to these things and see where their true interest lies. Let them go for a law to annihilate the manufacturing and sale of whisky—shut up the grog shops, and remove thereby our great cause of taxation, and rather raise cattle and hogs to eat up their corn, than children to drink up the whisky made with this corn at the distillery, thereby entailing upon themselves and their posterity, a most embittered curse.

CAPITAL ILLUSTRATION.—Senator Rusk, referring to the fact, that any proposition brought before Congress now is sure to produce a vast number of political speeches and a large amount of political capital, said, that the fact called to his mind an incident. He was present on one occasion at an Indian "talk," when a man drove up with a barrel of whisky; an old Indian who was sitting by, fixed his eye on the barrel, and after looking earnestly for some time, asked Mr. R., if he knew what was in that barrel. He said it was whisky, he presumed, "No," said the Indian, "there are about a thousand songs and fifty fights in that barrel!"

Prohibitory Laws.

Are not most laws, of this character, prohibitory, for which the 'Maine Law' is condemned? From the last Code Napoleon to Sinai's, a majority of the laws will be found prohibitory—and most likely a Pandect of civil law would show that majority to be as great as is found in the Decalogue.

What but prohibitory laws makes the difference between a state of civilization and barbarism? So far as any element of social constituency goes, what better is a lawless biped (though a man) than a gregarious quadruped?

Prohibitory laws began with man; they are interwoven in the texture of his social organization; they are the warp and woof of the civil fabric; a part and parcel of our inheritance here; coexistent as well as coeval with humanity.

Neither are such laws antagonistic to liberty; it cannot exist without them; they are its life; the very soul of the people; civil liberty consists in not being restrained by any laws, which are not conducive to the public welfare.

No matter what names you give such laws; while they are required by the public good, they afford no reasonable ground for complaint, as a restraint on civil liberty. Has the distiller, in years gone by, been forbidden under a penalty of $300 to use leaden pipes: Does the State of Maine, under a penalty of $1000 and imprisonment, prohibit the sale in the shambles of the ox that has died of disease: May not our Board of Health prohibit both the sale and purchase of fish, fruit, and vegetables, as long as public health may require it: and who will withhold obedience to such ordinances, because they are sumptuary, dietetic, or prohibitory?—Should an article be sold in our shops or administered, like that Eugene Sue has described as used in the 17th century in France—le poudre de succession—for securing death by a slow poison, would it not be an offense cognizable by law? And how else could it be kept out of society and shops, than by prohibitory enactments? Such laws, as we have already intimated, begin with our being; their Ægean shield is thrown around us, before mortal arms embrace us; infancy, childhood, youth, manhood, old age, are alike their care; they accompany us all along the pathway of life; nor do they cease with our breath; having protected us to the grave, they even there, after buried away from sight of friends, keep silent watch by our tomb—nor will any dare, but under severest forfeiture, to disturb the inanimate body, or mar with ruthless finger our marble slab. Such an office do "prohibitory" laws discharge. If we examine the digest of our own State, we shall there find line upon line, and precept upon precept, of a "prohibitory" character.

It would be a libel on society to suppose it too imbecile to thus have the means of self-preservation. The constitution of society is based on foundations deep and broad enough to resist the storms of human passions. Prohibitory restraints are our protection; whoever would avoid them must leave society, at least, if not the world.

Life, character, and morals, commercial credit, pecuniary interests, and bodily health, are under their protection: any discredit cast upon laws necessary for public good, any disparaging of their influence, are wounds on the body politic; for these laws are the staff of society—if we weaken this prop, we break the only support whereon we lean, and must, in turn, be pierced through with many sorrows.

Prohibitory laws regulate the style, height, and material of our tenements.—They even enter our stores and kitchens, and prescribe what cannot be allowed in the one and the other; they descend to all the minutiæ of life, the details of trade: they show us where powder shall be kept, and how pork must be packed—where hay can be sold, and the manner scythes are to be carried—how shad and salmon may be caught, and when only moose and deer may be killed; nor can a sparrow fall to the ground without their notice. So omniscient are prohibitory laws, they "Live through all life, extend through all extent, Spread undivided, and operate unspent."

The fish of the sea, fowl of the air, and the beast of the field, fall within the empire of law—and if these smaller matters are heeded by it, how much more weighty subjects for its exercise are the rational members of society.

Our very senses are protected by "prohibitory" laws; noxious exhalations, indecent prints, obscene and blasphemous language, are all prohibited. Does not intemperance produce at the corners of our streets, in the concourse of the people, much more cognizable offences in its tableaux vivants?

If prohibitory laws protect the very stone at our grave from ruthless fingers, how much more ought they to defend from that which destroys the image of God in the soul, blots out conscience, and throws down the only monument of our immortality.

If the stupid ox, which indeed knoweth its owner, is protected from inhuman treatment under a penalty of $200, how much more need of the protection of 'prohibitory' law has the fool, whom "though thou shouldst bray in a mortar, among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him."

If the cognomen prohibitory or sumptuary, when attached to laws, constitutes a valid objection to their enactment, then society has not the means of self-preservation. Of all subjects for legislation, we conceive intemperance a fair one—and the multiform evils growing out of it make it "a heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the Judge's Law."

Division Hall Burned.

It will be seen by the following letter, that the rumocracy of this State are following in the wake of their brethren in Maine—burning Temperance Halls.

Such things will always re-act for the benefit of those it is designed to injure.

PLEASANT VIEW, SHELBY CO.,
October 13, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—I write you a few lines under circumstances of a melancholy nature. I regret to inform you that our Temperance Hall, with all our books, papers, and implements of the Division, were destroyed by fire on Sabbath night, the 10th inst.; the work of an incendiary.

We had a beautiful hall, which, aside from the purposes for which it was used, was an ornament to our village, and very much enhanced the value of property around it. Though we deeply feel our loss, it has not in the least abated our zeal for the temperance cause, and though they may burn our Hall, they cannot quench the principles we advocate. We will stand to our posts till we triumph, in spite of all opposition, and on Saturday night we will have a meeting that will show the advocates of whisky that burning our Hall has not destroyed us as a Division.

On Tuesday, the day of our State election, Moral township presented a spectacle unworthy of her name—a spectacle that all respectable men abhor. Early in the morning, whisky, almost by the barrel, was rolled out and distributed, without money and without price, to all who would drink. Corruption and whisky triumphed by a small majority; but our cause is gaining rapidly, and many, very many, votes were cast for temperance men, regardless of party.

Yours, in L., P., and F., S.

Moral Desolation.

We may stride over the land with the crushing step of a giant; pestilence may steal over it like an invisible curse, reaching its victims silently and unseen, unpeopling here a village and there a city, until every dwelling is a sepulchre; famine may brood over it with a long and weary visitation, until the sky itself is brazen, and the beautiful greenness gives place to a parched desert a wide waste of unproductive desolation; but these are only physical evils. The wild flower will bloom in peace on the field of battle and above the crushed skeleton; the destroying angel of the pestilence will retire when his errand is done, and the nation again breathe freely; and the barrenness of famine will cease at last, the cloud will be prodigal of its hoarded rain, and the wilderness will blossom. But for moral desolation there is no reviving spring. Let the moral and republican principles of our country be abandoned, our representatives bow in unconditional obsequiousness and individual dictation; let impudence and intrigue and corruption triumph over honesty and intellect, and our liberties and strength will depart forever. Of these there can be no resuscitation. The "abomination of desolation" will be fixed and perpetual; and as the mighty fabric of our glory totters into ruins, the nations of the earth will mock in our overthrow, like the powers of darkness, when the throned one of Babylon became even as themselves, and "the glory of the Chaldee's excellency" had gone down forever.—New England Weekly Review.

Correspondence.

For the Temperance Chart.

BLUFFTON, Sep. 28, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—Permit me to say that I was highly gratified this week, on the reception and perusal of the "Temperance Chart," with the back numbers for the past quarter, but on looking over them I found no communication in relation to the temperance cause in Wells county, so I came to the conclusion that I would let the readers of your paper know that the temperance people here, are up and doing.

Mr. E. H. Parsley, the Grand Lecturer, fulfilled his appointments here, he waked up the "luke warm," and filled the dispirited with renewed life and animation; he also introduced the Social Order, which no good temperance man dare reject, or find any fault with, consequently all received it cordially.

The Bluffton Division of the Sons of Temperance, No. 250, is flourishing finely, their influence is beginning to shine brighter and brighter every day, and my hope and prayer is that they may never cease until their labors will be no longer needed. The Washingtonians still keeps the car moving, but not so brisk as it should do. The Bluffton society meets monthly and sometimes every two weeks; there are five local societies organized in this county; there also is a Wells County Union Temperance Society, composed of delegates sent from the different local societies, which meets every three months.

At a late meeting of the last named society the following resolutions were presented, and all were unimously adopted except the first one, which received one dissenting voice:

1st. Resolved, That we firmly believe the curse of intemperance will continue to rest upon us, and will be entailed upon our children with still more intolerable woes, while the laws of our State afford protection to the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

2d. Resolved, That the practical operation of the license system, has been evil, and only evil, and that continually, we think it is now high time that the sanction of the law should be entirely withheld from this death-dealing, peace-destroying traffic.

3d. Resolved, That we rejoice in the adoption and happy results of a law, in the State of Maine, which embodies the true principle on this subject, the principle of self-preservation, the principle of organized resistance to the merciless outrages and intolerable wrongs of this oppressing.

4th. Resolved, That as this evil can only be exterminated by legislative action, it becomes the imperative duty of all peace-loving, law-abiding citizens to seek redress in this way, and in so doing, it is their privilege, their right, and their duty, to seek out and promote such men to represent them in their legislative halls, as will solemnly regard, and earnestly advocate these great principles.

5th. Resolved, That we deeply deplore the fact that several places where intoxicating drinks are sold in our county, are open on the Sabbath, thus alluring many to scenes of dissipation, disturbing the peace of citizens, and provoking God by a most shameful desecration of that sacred day.

6th. Resolved, That the Ministers in the county, be requested to present a friendly appeal to the venders of intoxicating drinks, in relation to that traffic.

For the Temperance Chart.

ALLENSVILLE, Oct. 4th, 1852.

BRO. WOODWARD:—You would no doubt be pleased to hear how the good and glorious cause of temperance is prospering in our section of the country.

Allensville Division has, I hope, seen her worst times, we are now in a very prosperous condition. We are taking in nearly every meeting, those who are an ornament to the Order. We had a Temperance Mass Meeting at Enterprize the 8th, 9th, and 10th of September, and although the weather was unfavorable, yet we had a large turn out, and I believe it gave general satisfaction to all present. Bro. Edwards of Cincinnati, delivered us six splendid addresses on the benefits of temperance and evils of intemperance, which waked the natives up. Bro. Kile of Kentucky, also gave us some very appropriate addresses, and he being a reformed man, had great effect; we are routing the devil's agents on every hand, one of them had to pay the pretty sum of $96 for treating his friends at the Democratic Convention at Enterprize. A few days ago at a horse race that came off near Enterprize, one of the imps got very cunning in the matter, I will tell you how—he had a cloth tent say six feet square, and at one side he had a box about two feet long, and a foot of it outside of his tent, this being closed all round, so as to prevent suspicion of who was the pedler of the brain fever; the part of the box that was outside I call the receiver, in this receiver there were tumblers, the box would slide out and in, —throwing the mighty half dime in, the box would be drawn in the tent, and then it would appear with some of the beast in it. This was a cute way to keep from being found out, but this did not do, the friends of temperance got to work and soon gave Bro. P. S. Sage the facts, and he did put the law in force, brought them before him and gave them sweet home.

In conclusion let me say, the friends of temperance are working their way through the ranks of the Liquorites. We have some working men in the field, who fears not the enemy. Bro. P. S. Sage is a perfect terror to the anties, and Bro. J. K. Harris is storming them. Bro. Geo. McCullough, of Jacksonville Division, is also in the field doing all he can. Bro. Kingstery is also at work.

Yours, in L., P. and F.,

C. D. S.

Public Declaration.

We as citizens of Knox county, feel it a duty we owe to ourselves, to our country, and to our families, thus publicly to declare our opposition to any candidate, be his politics what they may, for either branch of the Legislature of Indiana, who is opposed to the passage of a law for the total prohibition of the sale of ardent spirits as a beverage, and further, that we will not support any man for the Legislature, who will not publicly declare himself in favor of such laws. ☞ We cannot offer anything more acceptable to a Son of Temperance than the following retrospective view of the rise and progress of the Order, which we select from the American Magazine, published by P. T. Sherlock, N. Y.—a work which we can recommend to every friend of temperance:

On Thursday the 29th of September, in the year 1842, at 7 o'clock in the evening, there assembled within the walls of Teetotallers' Hall, No. 71 Division street, in this city, a very small meeting. The men who composed it had come from various sections of the city. As they passed along to the place of rendezvous, they had to encounter the votaries of pleasure in pursuit of the various objects of their adoration. Bacchus, it was observed, sat highest among the idols, and by his will held all the others in subjection. The history of the world had long told that such a subjection was the lowest point to which humanity could sink, and the records of the times gave sad evidence of the number of his victims. To limit his power had long been the aim of many good men.—To stop his onward progress a number, comparatively small, had buckled on the armor of defence, and entered the arena of combat. Throughout the land a few bright examples could be seen for some years previous, but their strength was not equal to his power, and the want of perfect organization was a fact to be deplored.—It was under these circumstances the following circular was issued:

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

(NEW YORK DIVISION, No. 1.)

SIR:—You are invited to attend a select meeting at Teetotallers' Hall, No. 71 Division street, on Thursday evening, September 19th, 1842, at half past seven o'clock.

The object of the meeting is to organize a Beneficial Society, based on total abstinence, bearing the above title. It is proposed to make the initiation fee at first $1, and dues 6½ cents a week. In case of sickness, a member to be entitled to $4 a week; and in case of death, $30 to be appropriated for funeral expenses.

A constitution will be submitted on the above evening, and if the principles adopted meet your approbation, you are invited to become a member of the Division.

The enclosed ticket will procure your admission. (Here followed ten names.)

This meeting was organized by the following appointments: Daniel H. Sands, chairman; John W. Oliver, secretary.—The chairman then stated the objects of the meeting, and a constitution was submitted. On motion of Thos. Edgerly, it was "Resolved, That we now form a society, to be called New York Division, No. 1, Sons of Temperance;" and thus began the most powerful organization at present on this continent.

This meeting was composed of sixteen men, whose names will go down to posterity in grateful perpetuation of the effects of that night's proceedings. Here they are: Daniel H. Sands, John W. Oliver, James Ball, Isaac J. Oliver, Edward Brusle, John H. Elliott, John Holman, Ephraim L. Snow, Thomas Edgerley, George McKibbin, Joseph K. Barr, Wm. B. Tompkins, Thomas Sweenarton, Francis W. Wolfe, John McKeller, Henry Loyd.

The constitution which had been adopted was extensively circulated, and Divisions were speedily formed in neighboring cities. On the 28th of October, 1842, a committee was appointed to prepare a constitution for a Fountain Head of the State. Their report was received and adopted on the 7th of December, 1852. In consequence of the spread of the Order, there was not a sufficient number of brothers, legally constituted, to form a Grand Division; and as the exercise of the powers of a Grand Division became indispensably necessary, a committee of five was appointed by N. Y. Division, No. 1, as a Grand Division pro tem.

Thus constituted, that body went into operation on the 10th of December, 1842, for the purpose of granting charters only. The first meeting of the first Grand Division was held at the residence of Daniel H. Sands, No. 14 Forsyth street. On the 15th of December, 1842, the Newark Division, New Jersey, was opened by G. D. On the 9th of January, 1843, there was a constitutional number of Patriarchs and Associates to form the G. D. proper. The committee appointed by N. Y. Division, No. 1, were discharged, and the supreme tribunal of the Order in the United States, (till the creation of a National Division,) was installed.

The Grand Division of New York, acting as Fountain Head of the Order, granted the following charters for Grand Divisions: January 8th, 1844, New Jersey; February 5th, 1844, Maryland; April 22d, 1844, Pennsylvania; April 29th, 1844, Connecticut; June 19th, 1844, Massachusetts; on the same day, the District of Columbia received its charter for a Grand Division.

Where are the Croakers.

Every body has heard that the Maine Law was very unpopular even in Maine, and would be repealed by the next Legislature. The secular press of the country has given currency to this opinion. Yet madam Rumor always a common liar has proven herself to be an uncommon liar on this subject. In the late elections in that State, notwithstanding the open and secret machinations of the rummies, and the powerful influence of National politics, the friends of the law have gloriously triumphed. The odious law so obnoxious to the enemies of humanity is a "fixed fact" for two years longer. Nearly all of the members elected to both branches of the Legislature are the pledged friends of the law. The rum party have scarcely a "corporal's guard" to represent their interests in the General Assembly of Maine! That law is a wonderful Yankee invention; it possesses a vital power, and manufactures its own friend's out of very crude materials, and if it is well enforced for the next two years not a hundred men can be found in the State to oppose it. The result of this election will tell mightily upon the interests of the cause in all the other States.—Those who were confident will be confirmed and strengthened—the doubting will give their doubts to the winds—and the enemies of the measure will put forth their opposition, feeling that they are doomed to defeat. Friends in Ohio, awake, and let us go to work and introduce this wonderful moral machine into our State with such modifications and improvements as difference in "soil and climate" may require.

There is one feature that must be retained, or the friction will be so great that the machinery will be worthless—we mean the seizure and destruction of intoxicating beverages.—Organ of Temperance Reform.

RUMSELLING A FELONY.—The Expositor is shocked at the thought that the Temperance men mean to make rumselling a States Prison offence, and asks if a rumseller shall be punished like a man who steals sheep, passes counterfeit money, commits highway robbery, burns a house down, or commits murder. Well let us see, suppose we take without any invidiousness, the Expositor man himself, as an illustration: there he goes, look at him—see how he walks—see what manner of man he is. Now ask his wife whether she should choose, that his sheep, horse or cow, if he had one, should be stolen—that he should be knocked down and robbed—that he should have counterfeit money passed upon him—should be turned out of house and home, if he had one, by an incendiary, and that he should be murdered even, rather than he should be a drunkard always, and die a sot under the influence of grog-shops? We are willing to leave the question to the wife and friends of any man, and abide by the answer.—Watchman.

☞ Education will place every child above the reach of Intemperance, Insanity, Vice, and Crime, by giving him power to combat and subdue influences and circumstances that are now too strong for the weak resistence only, which so many are able to make. The mind is varied in its power, and the channels through which it can act are almost infinite. Develop all the powers, therefore, and thus multiply the resources of happiness, and the individual is not lost when one channel becomes turbid by misfortune. Insanity would thus be prevented. Ennoble the characters of all by development, and all Crime will be prevented. Direct the attention of all to the Good, the True, and the Beautiful, and Intemperance will be unknown. The expense of preventing all these would be far less than that of providing against them; and when we consider the incalculable amount of misery also prevented, the thorough Education of all our youth rises to an infinite importance.

We learn from a gentleman from Wells, Me., that the opponents of the Maine Law in that place are resorting to every dishonorable means of revenge upon the temperance people. QUICKER THAN THEY EXPECTED.—The Springfield (Ill.) Register relates the following:

"In March last, three men in this city agreed to drink themselves to death. The officers had a long search for him. He was committed on charge of larceny, and a civil process was also commenced against him.

A LARGE HAUL OF LIQUORS.—Suspicions having been long entertained that spirituous and intoxicating liquors were deposited and kept for sale in the building occupied by one Eleazer Philips, near the depot, the City Marshal, together with two assistants, pursuant to a search warrant to him directed, entered the said building this forenoon, and found therein some eighteen barrels in the whole, of liquors, part of which were in small kegs, demijohns, &c. The liquors were forthwith seized and removed from the premises to the Marshal's office. A hearing upon them will probably be had to-morrow morning before Judge Prescott.—New Bedford Standard, 9th.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—This distinguished military leader, who has so long filled a prominent place in European history, died on the 14th September, in the 84th year of his age. The Duke of Wellington was born in Ireland, in 1769, and was the son of Lord Mornington. He was a man for the time in which he lived, and well earned the harsh cognomen of "Iron Duke" by which he was so often designated. As a commanderin-chief of armies, he possessed all the sternness, all the inflexibility, all the love of order and discipline needed for one holding so responsible a position. No hardships discouraged—no difficulties disheartened, no danger appalled him. He was a man above human weaknesses and human sympathies. Such a man was required in the age in which he lived; and he was the man for his age, and is to be honored for the faithful discharge of his fearful duties. May the time speedily come when men like the Duke of Wellington are no longer needed for the breaking down of despotisms, and the protection of the outposts and bulwarks of human freedom.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

To Cure a Cold, with Headache and Soreness of the Body, take the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, and wrap up warm, to sweat during the night.

For a Cold and Cough, take it morning, noon, and evening, according to directions on the bottle, and the difficulty will soon be removed. None will long suffer from this trouble when they find it can be so readily cured. Persons afflicted with a seated cough, which breaks them of their rest at night, will find, by taking the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, they may be sure of sound, unbroken sleep, and consequently refreshing rest. Great relief from suffering, and an ultimate cure, is afforded to thousands who are thus afflicted, by this invaluable remedy.

From its agreeable effect in these cases, many find themselves unwilling to forego its use when the necessity for it has ceased.

From two eminent Physicians in

Fayetteville, Tenn., April 16th, 1851.

Sir:—We have given your Cherry Pectoral an extensive trial in our practice, and find it to surpass every other remedy we have for curing affections of the respiratory organs.

DRS. DIEMER & HAMPTON.

To Singers and Public Speakers this remedy is invaluable, as by its action on the throat and lungs, when taken in small quantities, it removes all hoarseness in a few hours, and wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of voice.

Asthma is generally much relieved, and often wholly cured by Cherry Pectoral. But there are some cases so obstinate as to yield entirely to no medicine. Cherry Pectoral will cure them, if they can be cured.

Bronchitis, or irritation of the throat and upper portion of the lungs, may be cured by taking Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses. The uncomfortable oppression is soon relieved.

Rev. Dr. Lansing, of Brooklyn, New York, states: "I have seen the Cherry Pectoral cure such cases of Asthma and Bronchitis as leads me to beleive it can rarely fail to cure those diseases."

For Croup. Give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

Whooping Cough may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral

The Influenza is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences, while their neighbors, without the Cherry Pectoral, were suffering from the disease.

Salem, Ohio, June 11th, 1851.

Doct. J. C. Ayer:—I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your Cherry Pectoral in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough, by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best physicians freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it, than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine, he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully, J. D. SINCLAIR,
Deputy Postmaster.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the Cherry Pectoral, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and coughs, and pulmonary diseases. P. Cleveland, M. D.

Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

Dr. Valentine Mott, the widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of 'Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,' which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been affected by Cherry Pectoral in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it.

The Maine Liquor Law.

AN ACT FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF DRINKING HOUSES AND TIPPLING SHOPS.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Legislature assembled, as follows:

Section 1. No person shall be allowed at any time to manufacture or sell, by himself, his clerk, servant or agent, directly or indirectly, any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquors, a part of which is spirituous or intoxicating, except as hereafter provided.

Sec. 2. The selectmen of any town, and mayor and aldermen of any city, on the first Monday of May annually, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, may appoint some suitable person as the agent of said town or city, to sell at some central or convenient place within said town or city, spirits, wines, or other intoxicating liquors, to be used for medicinal and mechanical purposes and no other; and said agent shall receive such compensation for his services as the board appointing him shall prescribe; and shall in the sale of such liquors, conform to such rules and regulations as the selectmen or mayor and aldermen as aforesaid, shall prescribe for that purpose. And such agent, appointed as aforesaid, shall hold his situation for one year, unless sooner removed by the board from which he received his appointment, as he may be at any time, at the pleasure of said board.

Sec. 3. Such agent shall receive a certificate from the mayor and aldermen or selectmen by whom he has been appointed, authorizing him as the agent of such town or city, to sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal and mechanical purposes only; but such certificate shall not be delivered to the person so appointed, until he shall have executed and delivered to said board a bond with two good and sufficient sureties, in the sum of six hundred dollars, in substance as follows:

Know all men, that we —— as principal, and —— as sureties, are holden and stand firmly bound to the inhabitants of the town of —— (or city, as the case may be), in the sum of six hundred dollars, to be paid them, to which payment we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our seals, and dated this —— day of —— A. D. ——.

The condition of this obligation is such, that whereas the above bounden —— has been duly appointed an agent for the town (or city) of —— to sell, within and for and on account of said town (or city), intoxicating liquors for medicinal and mechanical purposes and no other, until the —— of —— A. D. ——, unless sooner removed from said agency.

Now if the said —— shall in all respects conform to the provisions of the law relating to the business for which he is appointed, and to such rules and regulations as now are or shall be from time to time established by the board making the appointment, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force.

Sec. 4. If any person, by himself, clerk, servant or agent, shall at any time sell any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquors, part of which is intoxicating, in violation of the provisions of this act, he shall forfeit and pay on the first conviction, ten dollars and the costs of prosecution, and shall stand committed until the same be paid; on the second conviction he shall pay twenty dollars and the costs of prosecution, and shall stand committed until the same be paid; on the third and every subsequent conviction, he shall pay twenty dollars and the costs of prosecution, and shall be imprisoned in the common jail, not less than three months, nor more than six months, and in default of the payment of the fines and costs prescribed by this section for the first and second convictions, the convict shall not be entitled to the benefit of chapter 175 of the revised statutes, until he shall have been imprisoned two months; and in default of payment of fines and costs provided for the third and every subsequent conviction, he shall not be entitled to the benefit of said chapter 175 of the revised statutes, until he shall have been imprisoned four months. And if any clerk, servant, agent or other person in the employment or on the premises of another, shall violate the provisions of this section, he shall be held equally guilty with the principal, and on conviction shall suffer the same penalty.

Sec. 5. Any forfeiture or penalty arising under the above section, may be recovered by an action of debt, or by complaint before any justice of the peace, or judge of any municipal or police court, in the county where the offence was committed. And the forfeiture so recovered shall go to the town where the convicted party resides, for the use of the poor; and the prosecutor or complainant may be admitted as a witness in the trial. And if any of the selectmen or board of mayor and aldermen shall approve of the commencement of any such suit, by endorsing his name upon the writ, the defendant shall in no event recover any costs; and in all actions of debt arising under this section, the fines and forfeitures suffered by the defendant, shall be the same as if the action had been by complaint. And it shall be the duty of the mayor and aldermen of any city, and selectmen of any town, to commence an action in behalf of said town or city, against any person guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, on being informed of the same, and being furnished with proof of the fact.

Sec. 6. If any person shall claim an appeal from a judgment rendered against him by any judge or justice, on the trial of such action or complaint, he shall, before the appeal shall be allowed, recognize in the sum of one hundred dollars, with two good and sufficient sureties, in every case so appealed, to prosecute his appeal, and to pay all costs, fines and penalties that may be awarded against him, upon a final disposition of such suit or complaint. And before his appeal shall be allowed, he shall also, in every case, give a bond with two other good and sufficient sureties, running to the town or city where the offence was committed, in the sum of two hundred dollars, that he will not, during the pendency of such appeal, violate any of the provisions of this act. And no recognizance or bond shall be taken in cases arising under this act, except by the justice or judge before whom the trial was had; and the defendant shall be held to advance the jury fees in every case of appeal in action of debt; and in the event of a final conviction before a jury, the defendant shall pay and suffer double the amount of fines, penalties and imprisonment awarded against him by the justice or judge from whose judgment the appeal was made. The forfeiture for all bonds and recognizances given in pursuance of this act, shall go to the town or city where the offence was committed, for the use of the poor; and if the recognizances and bonds mentioned in this section shall not be given within twenty-four hours after the judgment, the appeal shall not be allowed; the defendant in the meantime to stand committed.

Sec. 7. The mayor and alderman of any city, and the selectmen of any town, whenever complaint shall be made to them that a breach of the conditions of the bond given by any person appointed under this act, has been committed, shall notify the person complained of, and if upon a hearing of the parties it shall appear that any breach has been committed, they shall revoke and make void his appointment. And whenever a breach of any bond given to the inhabitants of any city or town in pursuance of any of the provisions of this act, shall be made known to the mayor and aldermen, or selectmen, or shall in any manner come to their knowledge, they or some of them shall, at the expense and for the use of such city or town, cause the bond to be put in suit in any court proper to try the same.

Sec. 8. No person shall be allowed to be a manufacturer of any spirituous or intoxicating liquor, or common seller thereof without being duly appointed as aforesaid, on pain of forfeiting on the first conviction, the sum of one hundred dollars and costs of prosecution, and in default of the payment thereof, the person so convicted shall be imprisoned sixty days in the common jail; and on the second conviction, the person so convicted shall pay the sum of two hundred dollars and costs of prosecution, and in default of payment, shall be imprisoned four months in the common jail; and on the third and every subsequent conviction, shall pay the sum of two hundred dollars, and shall be imprisoned four months in the common jail of the county where the offence was committed; said penalties to be recovered before any court of competent jurisdiction, by indictment, or by action of debt in the name of the city or town where the offence shall be committed. And whenever a default shall be had of any recognizances arising under this act, scire facias shall be issued, returnable at the next term, and the same shall not be continued, unless for good cause, satisfactory to the court.

Sec. 9. No person engaged in the unlawful traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be competent to sit upon any jury in any case arising from this act, and when information shall be communicated to the court, that any member of any panel is engaged in such traffic, or that he is believed to be so engaged, the court shall inquire of the juryman of whom such belief is entertained; and no answer which he shall make shall be used against him in any case arising under this act; but if he shall answer falsely, he shall be incapable of serving on any jury in this state; but he may decline to answer, in which case he shall be discharged by the court from all further attendance as a juryman.

Sec. 10. All cases arising under this act, whether by action, indictment or complaint, which shall come before a superior court, either by appeal or original entry, shall take precedence in said court of all other business, except those criminal cases in which the parties are actually under arrest awaiting a trial; and the court and the prosecuting officer shall not have authority to enter a nolle prosequi, or to grant a continuance in any case arising under this act, either before or after the verdict, except where the purposes of justice shall require it.

Sec. 11. If any three persons, voters in the town or city where the complaint shall be made, shall, before any justice of the peace or judge of municipal or police court, make complaint under oath or affirmation, that they have reason to believe, and do believe that spirituous or intoxicating liquors are kept or deposited, and intended for sale, by any person not authorized to sell the same in said city or town under the provisions of this act, in any store, shop, warehouse or other building or place in said city or town, said justice or judge shall issue his warrant of search to any sheriff, city marshal or deputy, or to any constable, who shall proceed to search the premises described in said warrant, and if any spirituous or intoxicating liquors are found therein, he shall seize the same, and convey them to some proper place of security, where he shall keep them until final action is had thereon. But no dwelling-house, in which or in part of which, a shop is not kept, shall be searched, unless at least one of said complainants shall testify to some acts of sale of intoxicating liquors therein, by the occupant thereof, or by his consent or permission, within at least one month of the time of making said complaint. And the owner or keeper of said liquors, seized as aforesaid, if he shall be known to the officer seizing the same, shall be summoned forthwith before the justice or judge by whose warrant the liquors were seized, and if he fails to appear, or unless he can show by positive proof, that said liquors are of foreign production, that they have been imported under the laws of the United States, and in accordance therewith—that they are contained in the original packages in which they were imported, and in quantities not less than the laws of the United States prescribe, they shall be declared forfeited, and shall be destroyed by authority of the written order to that effect, of said justice or judge, and in his presence, or in the presence of some person appointed by him, to witness the destruction thereof, and who shall join with the officer by whom they shall have been destroyed, in attesting that fact upon the back of the order by authority of which it was done; and the owner or keeper of such liquors shall pay a fine of twenty dollars and costs, or stand committed for thirty days, in default of payment, if in the opinion of the court, said liquors shall have been kept or deposited for the purposes of sale. And if the owner or possessor of any liquors seized in pursuance of this section, shall set up the claim that they have been regularly imported under the laws of the United States, and that they are contained in the original packages, the custom-house certificates of importation and proofs of marks on the casks or packages corresponding thereto, shall not be received as evidence that the liquors contained in said packages are those actually imported therein.

Sec. 12. If the owner, keeper or possessor of liquors, seized under the provisions of this act, shall be unknown to the officer seizing the same, they shall not be condemned and destroyed until they shall have been advertised, with the number and description of the packages as near as may be, for two weeks, by posting up a written description of the same in some public place; that if such liquors are actually the property of any city or town in the state, and were so at the time of the seizure, purchased for sale by the agent of said city or town, for medicinal or mechanical purposes only, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, they may not be destroyed; but upon satisfactory proof of such ownership, within said two weeks, before the justice or judge by whose authority said liquors were se zed, said justice or judge shall deliver to the agent of said city or town, an order to the officer having said liquors in custody, whereupon said officer shall deliver them to said agent, taking his receipt therefor on the back of said order, which shall be returned to said justice or judge.

Sec. 13. If any person claiming any liquors seized as aforesaid, shall appeal from the judgment of any justice or judge, by whose authority the seizure was made, to the district court, before his appeal shall be allowed, he shall give a bond in the sum of two hundred dollars, with two good and sufficient sureties, to prosecute his appeal, and to pay all fines and costs which may be awarded against him; and in the case of any such appeal, where the quantity of liquors so seized shall exceed five gallons, if the final decision shall be against the appellant, that such liquors were intended by him for sale, he shall be adjudged by the court a common seller of intoxicating liquors, and shall be subject to the penalties provided for in section eight of this act; and said liquors shall be destroyed as provided for in section eleven. But nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent any chemist, artist or manufacturer, in whose art or trade they may be necessary, from keeping at his place of business such reasonable and proper quantity of distilled liquors as he may have occasion to use in his art or trade, but not for sale.

Sec. 14. It shall be the duty of any mayor, alderman, selectman, assessor, city marshal or deputy or constable, if he shall have information that any intoxicating liquors are kept or sold in any tent, shanty, hut or place of any kind for selling refreshments in any public place, on or near the ground of any cattle show, agricultural exhibition, military muster, or public occasion of any kind, to search such suspected place, and if such officer shall find upon the premises any intoxicating drinks, he shall seize them, and arrest the keeper or keepers of such place, and take them forthwith, or as soon as may be, before some justice or judge of a municipal or police court, with the liquors so found and seized, and upon proof that said liquors are intoxicating, that they were found in possession of the accused, in a tent, shanty or other place as aforesaid, he or they shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for thirty days, and the liquor so seized shall be destroyed by order of said justice or judge.

Sec. 15. If any person arrested under the preceding section, and sentenced as aforesaid, shall claim an appeal, before his appeal shall be allowed, he shall give a bond in the sum of one hundred dollars, with two good and sufficient sureties, that he will prosecute his appeal, and pay all fines, costs and penalties which may be awarded against him. And if on such an appeal, the verdict of the jury be against him, he shall, in addition to the penalty awarded by the lower court, pay a fine of twenty dollars. In all cases of appeal under this act, from the judgment of a justice or judge of any municipal or police court, to the district court, except where the proceeding is by action of debt, they shall be conducted in said district court by the prosecuting officer of the government—and said officer shall be entitled to receive all costs taxable to the state, in all criminal proceedings under this act, in addition to the salary allowed to such officer by law—but no costs in such cases shall be remitted or reduced by the prosecuting officer or the court. In any suit, complaint, indictment or other proceeding against any person for a violation of any of the provisions of this act, other than for the first offence, it shall not be requisite to set forth particularly the record of a former conviction, but it shall be sufficient to allege briefly that such person has been convicted of a violation of the fourth section of this act, or as a common seller, as the case may be, and such allegation in any civil or criminal process in any stage of the proceedings, before final judgment, may be amended without terms and as a matter of right.

Sec. 16. All payments or compensations for liquor sold in violation of law, whether in money, labor or other property, either real or personal, shall be held and considered to have been received in violation of law, and without consideration, and against law, equity and a good conscience, and all sales, transfers and conveyances, mortgages, liens, attachments, pledges and securities of every kind, which either in whole or in part shall have been for or on account of spirituous or intoxicating liquors, shall be utterly null and void against all persons and in all cases, and no rights of any kind shall be acquired thereby; and in any action either at law or equity, touching such real or personal estate, the purchaser of such liquors may be a witness for either party. And no action of any kind shall be maintained in any court in this state, either in whole or in part, for intoxicating or spirituous liquors sold in any other state or county whatever, nor shall any action of any kind be had or maintained in any court in this state, for the recovery or possession of intoxicating or spirituous liquors or the value thereof.

Sec. 17. All the provisions of this act relating to towns shall be applicable to cities and plantations; and those relating to selectmen shall also be applied to the mayor and aldermen of cities and assessors of plantations.

Sec. 18. The act entitled "An Act to restrict the sale of intoxicating drinks," approved August sixth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, is hereby repealed, except the thirteen sections, from section ten to section twenty-two inclusive, saving or reserving all actions or other proceedings, which are already commenced by authority of the same; and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed. This act to take effect from and after its approval by the governor.

(Approved June 2, 1851.)

Rules of Politeness.—Visits.—It is the privilege of every person, paying another the compliment of a visit, to expect reciprocity. "One good turn deserves another," is an old trite saying; and certes, nothing can be more consistent with our own respect and that for others, than to manifest a proper estimate of what is justly due. It is not necessary—nay not even possible—to live with every one on a footing intimacy, of or even sociability, nor is it at all expected that we should waste our time in unprofitable visits; but it is required that we should return one lent us for that purpose, though it may be considered the first and the last, without the intention of a renewal.

Correspondence.—Many otherwise polite individuals are guilty of a violation of the code of politeness—i. e., of not answering letters. It is an erroneous impression pretty generally labored under, that it is not necessary to acknowledge the receipt of every letter. Now, it must be generally conceded that a question couched in becoming language deserves, if not requires an answer. The principle herein involved bears a striking analogy to that of answering a letter, for generally they are either affirmative, interrogative, or narrative, and in each case meriting some sign of recognition. There is no excuse for silence, unless the subject or the writer is beneath our notice. Silence under any other circumstances may often be construed into want of friendship, want of politeness, as an evidence of hostile contempt, or at least into an indifference to our feelings.

At the late meeting of the American Board, a novel entertainment was afforded by the singing of the Doxology in eight different languages at the same time, by returned missionaries.

STATE LIBRARY INDIANAPOLIS

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 27, 1852.

Valedictory.

The Grand Division, in session in this city last week, having declined our proposals for editing the Chart for the current year, and accepted the proposals of Dr. J. W. Gordon, our connection with the editorial department of the paper ceases with the present issue.

From our numerous friends throughout the State we part with regret, but assure them, that, although no longer fighting for our glorious cause through the columns of the Chart, we are nevertheless actively engaged in the good work in other channels, and shall now, as ever, watch the progress of this little sheet, as it shall battle for the principles of the cause, and, to the extent of our feeble abilities, aid it onward to final victory. To our numerous readers, then, we have only to say farewell. C. WOODWARD.

To the Patrons and Friends of the Chart.

It will be observed from the valedictory of Bro. Woodward, that the Chart has changed Editors. This change was the result of the deliberations of the Grand Division at its late Session in this city. The reasons which prompted that body to make this decision, are not known to us, and could be of no utility to the public if it were in our power to communicate them. Certain it is, however, that it originated not in any loss of confidence in the late Editor, whose firm and zealous adherence to the principles of the Order and the great cause of Temperance in all its forms, is superior alike to praise or censure. The friends of Temperance will learn with pleasure, that although no longer engaged in the vindication of that cause and those principles in an Editorial capacity, he will still be actively employed in promoting their progress, and securing their triumph by every other laudable means.

It is but due to candor, that we should say, that we enter upon the duties assigned us, with sincere pleasure, marred only by the fear that our qualifications may not enable us to meet the just expectations of those, whose kind confidence has opened to us this door of utterance upon the subject nearest our heart. Long have we earnestly desired to merit such a position; not, if we know ourself, out of any selfish aim, but for the promotion of a great principle—the disenthrallment of our fellow-men from the vice of intemperance and its hideous consequences. In early life we gave our heart to this great purpose; and, although at times, we have been diverted from it, it has still for a number of years past claimed, in no small degree, our time, our poor abilities, and earnest exertions on all occasions. Yet we feel too sensibly the weight of responsibility attached to the editorial department of the Temperance Organ of the State of Indiana, not to distrust our competency adequately to discharge its duties. Relying, however, upon the same kindness that conferred the position to sustain us in an honest, faithful, and zealous endeavor to meet its obligations, we shall enter upon our new vocation with a determination, whatever else may follow, that we will not bring reproach upon our cause by any intentional departure from the line of our duty.

With respect to our course, we have only to say, that we will consider ourself bound to adhere to and defend the principles of the Order, whose organ we are, as those principles are set forth in the reports and decisions of the Grand Division of the State; and on all doubtful questions in the absence of specific direction from that body, the decisions of the Publishing Committee recently appointed will constitute the rule of our action. Thus it shall be our aim to give utterance to no sentiment or position which will not meet the hearty concurrence and approval of all Sons of Temperance in the State.

To the editorial fraternity we make our bow, with the warmest desire to establish and maintain between us, none but the most amicable relations. Knowing no partizan preferences for, or personal feeling of hostility to any member of the fraternity with whom we now seek to establish relations of friendship, we hope to merit their regard by avoiding all unbecoming personalities and invectives, while, at the same time, we fearlessly, and to the best of our abilities, maintain the principles for which we contend. From this line of conduct, no emergency, which we can now foresee, shall compel us to depart.

Trusting that a further acquaintance may not give rise to any but feelings of friendship and confidence between us, we commit us for the present to your kind regard. J. W. GORDON.

☞ The proceedings of the Grand Division will appear in the next number.—For the present, therefore, we shall only say, that, owing to the financial condition of the Chart, that body raised the subscription price of the paper to SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS per annum, for the future, allowing no deductions on club subscriptions. This is, perhaps, the cheapest rate at which it can be supported; and it is fondly hoped that the friends of temperance will not allow their organ to fall for want of adequate support, since upon it, properly conducted and supported, depends, more than upon any other human agency, the triumph of their principles.

☞ The present number of the Chart was mostly prepared for the press by Bro. Woodward, before the change we have already announced had taken place in its editorial department. He is consequently entitled to all the credit of making the selections which appear in its columns, and also of writing most of its editorials.

The Maine Law.

At the urgent request of our friends we re-publish on our first page the celebrated Maine Liquor Law.

There is not a plainer Law on the Statute Book, or one more easily understood, and yet there never was a law more shamefully misrepresented than this has been.

During the canvass before the recent election demagogues and political aspirants asserted that this Law was abomination itself—that its provisions were unconstitutional and oppressive—in fact every thing bad and that there was no good in it.

Now let our readers examine it carefully and be prepared to defend it whenever called upon, for it is now to be the rallying cry of temperance men—THE MAINE LAW.

"In Adam's Fall We Sinned All."

Wearing clothes has become the penalty for the transgression of our first parents. The pious pilgrim, in doing penance by walking to the shrine of Loretto with peas in his boots, that he might

"Walk at ease,
Boiled the peas!"

So we would advise those who would bear the punishment with complacency, and not make wry faces, to avail themselves of the superior artistic skill of Hays, at Jas. Hall's Manufacturing and Clothing Emporium, No. 2, Temperance Hall, Indianapolis.—The variety, quantity, and quality—the fit, fashion, and fabric—to be had at that popular establishment, almost make one believe that, though Adam fell,

"'Tis sweet to sin—'tis pleasure to atone."

The Legislature.

We are trying to get the complexion of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives on the temperance question.

As we made some errors last week, we will discontinue the list until full returns are received, and we get more light on the subject.

From the Advocate and Home Circle.

Progress of the Maine Law.

PENNSYLVANIA.—We last week gave our readers a short corresponeence from Philadelphia, descriptive of a temperance rally in that city, which is only a counterpart of the action throughout the Keystone State. There is but one thing to interfere with the success of the law there at the next session of the Legislature the coming Winter, and that is the near proximity of the State election, with that for President; the difficulty of so dividing the attention of the voters as to give each issue the required action.

At present it is hard to tell whether the Presidential canvass or the success of the temperance question bears sway. Were the State election next Spring instead of this Fall, there is little doubt as to the result; and as it is, we believe very many will be surprised at the state of the vote both politically and on prohibitory legislation. It will be borne in mind that the vote of the Legislature last year was very close, and when comparatively little had been done to draw public attention to the question, or to influence the action of the Legislature.

We annex the ballot and its political complexion, for the information of those who are curious to know how the matter was disposed of. Our opponents will learn, before many more years have rolled over their heads, that the "Puritanical, blue-law States" of New England, are not the only ones determined no longer to meekly wear the galling chains imposed by the traffic curse.

SENATE.—For the Law—Whig 10, Dem. 7; total 17. Opposition—Whig 7, Dem. 8; total 15. Majority for the Law 2.

HOUSE.—For the Law—Whig 27, Dem. 19; total 46. Opposition—Whig 15, Dem. 36; total 51. Majority against the Law 5, leaving—as will be observed—in both Houses, a majority of only 3 to the opposition.

RHODE ISLAND.—The following from a gentleman in Providence, whose position and intelligence, give him the best opportunity of speaking "from the books," thus writes in reference to the effect and popularity of the anti-liquor law of that State:

* * * * We venture to say that the operation of the law, has rendered its repeal impossible. It has astonished both friends and foes, and is enforced throughout the State, with the exception of Newport. In Providence with 30,000 inhabitants, there has not been a show of opposition. Numerous seizures of liquor have been made and the liquor has been emptied into the river, amid the rejoicing and sometimes the cheers of the crowd. We have not the statistics at hand for the two months' operation of the Law, but should say that more than one thousand gallons have been thus destroyed.

The police records show a dimunition of more than fifty per cent. in the arrests for drunkenness, though the laws against drunkenness, are enforced much more strictly than before the Law went into operation. The same reduction exists in the commitments to the County Jail, and we have no hesitation in saying that there is a dimunition of more than 50 per cent. in the amount of liquor drank, and in the consequent evils arising therefrom. And all this, be it remembered, in two months, after the taking effect of the Law. No liquor is sold openly in the city of Providence. E. M. S.

MAINE.—We cannot better give the present position of the Law in Maine, than to let the figures of the recent election there, speak for themselves. For Hubbard, 41,611; Crosby, 28,597; Chandler, (Rum, or anti-Law candidate) 21,822; Holmes, (Free Soil) 1,347. Total 93,277.

It is to be presumed that Chandler took all, or to bring it within indisputable limits, three quarters of the anti-Law votes of the State, as he was put up as its special opponent and by its opponents, not so much on political grounds as with reference to the question of Law and anti-Law. And what is the strength of Rum's combined forces?—21,722, leaving 71,555 votes against him, and in support of the Law; or to change the figures and give all that can possibly be claimed, add a quarter of Crosby's vote (7,149) to Chandler's and we have 28,871, leaving a majority for the Law of 35,534, and 64,406, all told. If this result does not prove RUM most conclusively doomed, and the attachment of the people to the Law, in Maine, then we would like to know by what system of mathematics or ethics, the reverse can be demonstrated.

NEW JERSEY.—The most strenuous efforts are making in New Jersey, to secure the passage of the Maine Law at the next session of the Legislatnre. Neal Dow is to enter the State in its service, accompanied by a Mr. Vinton of Maine. Five thousand copies of the doings of the recent State Convention have been ordered printed, and with other temperance documents, distributed in the State. We have strong faith in the no distant success of the law in New Jersey.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Several popular speakers are canvassing Massachusetts, in support of the Liquor Law, in preparation for the State election, which comes off on the 8th of next month. A State Convention is called at Boston, which commences its session in Faneuil Hall to-morrow, 15th inst. The utmost confidence in the support of the Law prevails. The opposition are also at work. They have decided not to run a separate ticket, but to give their votes to candidates, wherever found, who will go against the law. Mathew H. Smith, of the rum Chronicle, as also others of his kidney, are in the field. The several candidates for Governor, have been questioned as to their position on the Law. The Whig remains silent. The Lieutenant Governor, same ticket, present Mayor of Lowell, comes out full and firm for the Law. Democratic Candidate also keeps silent. Lieutenant Governor non-committal. Free Soil candidate commits himself for the law. Lieutenant Governor no answer. Those who fear RUM, and dare not show their colors, we hope will be most essentially whipped out.

NEW INVENTION.—An ingenious mechanic of Nashua, has invented a new method of driving circular saws without an arbor. With a saw arranged as he has it, a four foot saw will cut a board three and one-half feet wide, while as now arranged, a four foot saw will hardly cut one and one-half feet. It is also arranged so that it will cut when the carriage is going either way, and will, at the same time, saw nearly twice as fast.

Still another of the sufferers by the Reindeer explosion, Hugh Lowry, has died, which makes the total number of deaths, thus far, by this terrible catastrophe, thirty-five.

Haloway, the famous pill vender, expends yearly $100,000 in advertising, and has cleared about half a million within six years.

A census of Iowa, taken by the State, is now nearly complete. It shows a population of over 500,000, an increase of 50,000 since 1850.

Platforms.

It is fashionable for the various political organizations to construct platforms, and then draw their candidates on them. The best platform we have seen lately is the one constructed by the "Sons" at Pittsburgh, at their great Convention. It is broad and strong and will hold not only candidates, but the whole populace. We like it. and intend to place ourselves upon it, and stay there as long as a plank remains.

Examine it, and if you like it, get on.

"We have assembled ourselves together to-day, to give thanks to the Giver of all Good, for his benefits and mercies to mankind, to give to the world an example of what may be done toward the amelioration of the masses, in the great work of Temperance Reform; to protest against the traffic in intoxicating beverages; to give our aid towards the enactment of a prohibitory law; to sympathize with all those who are in thraldom and bound in the chains and service of King Alcohol, and endeavor to redeem them and burst asunder the iron band of despotism which holds them in his despotic service; to warn the moderate drinker of the danger that attend the course, and do all the good that lays in our power to stay the tendency to ruin, which is apparent to all who will stop to inquire, arising out of the great and growing evil, Intemperance.

"We disclaim all intention of mingling in the strife of the great political parties of the country, our aim being a higher and a holier one, that of reforming the inebriate and allaying the threatening storm, which seems ready to burst upon this happy land, through the use of intoxicating beverages. We desire, however, to put upon record our firm determination to so exercise the rights of suffrage, that through us none shall be elected to offices of trust or profit, who are not heart and hand with us, in the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law. Total prohibition to the sale of intoxicating drinks, we declare to be one of our cardinal principles. We do not make war upon individuals, but upon the traffic. Therefore,

Resolved, That we will vote for no person at the coming election for Senator or Representative in our State Legislature who does not pledge himself and his influence towards the enactment of a law prohibiting totally the sale and manufacture of all intoxicating liquors."

☞ THE man that chases the Cars and Steamboat, is actively engaged. Stopped at Portage the other day. Found a hungry crowd ferociously attempting to eat fifty cents worth apiece, keeping an eye and ear in the mean time carward. "Come less go and see the Bridge," says a man with memorandum book, picking his teeth. "Plenty of time, gentlemen—thirty minutes yet to spare," spoke up the honest Landlord. We were sceptical and mounted the platform. Just as an old man had got about one third of the way down the descent, the train started. The old fellow turned a moment in amazement, and then such a retreat! He might as well have struggled up the steep embankment to head lightning. Poor old fellow—we looked down upon him with compassion, but laughed notwithstanding. The dirt gave away under his feet and he tried all fours. Away went the loosened stones rolling behind him, but before he was half way up, the train was under full headway over the bridge. He looked after the cars and as the bank shut him from view we saw the old fellow with ticket "in sight" shaking his fist in his rage. Chasing the cars is mighty "onsartin."—Cayuga Chief.

YOUNG man! keep your eye peeled when you are after the women. If you bite at the naked hook, you are green. Is a pretty dress or form so attractive? Or a pretty face even? Flounces, boy, are of no sort of consequence. A pretty face will grow old. Paint will wash off. The sweet smile of the flirt will give way to the scowl of the termagant. The neat form will be pitched into dirty calico. Another and far different being will take the place of the lovely goddess who smiled sweet smiles and eat your sugar candy.

Keep your eye peeled, boy, when you are after the women. If the little dear is cross and scolds at her mother in the back room, you may be sure that you will get particular fits all round the house. If she apologizes for wiping dishes, you will need a girl to fan her. If she blushes when found at the wash tub with sleeves rolled up, be sure sir, that she is of the codfish aristocracy, little breeding and less sense. If you marry a gal who knows nothing but to commit woman slaughter upon the piano, you have got the poorest piece of music ever got up. Find the one whose mind is right, and then pitch in. Don't be hanging round like a sheep thief as though ashamed to be seen in the day time, but walk up like a chicken to the dough and ask for the article like a man.

NEW HARMONY, Aug. 6th, 1852.

Bro. Woodward: The Anniversary of Posey Division, No. 90, was celebrated in this town on the 20th July, in New Harmony style, by speeches, procession, dinner, &c. The procession was the largest seen in N. H., for a long while. Members of the different Orders and citizens together, making a pile of over twelve hundred. The neighboring Divisions, Temples, Social Degrees, Unions and Cadets of Temperance were in attendance, and right well they looked you may be sure. 1st, Procession was formed and marched to the shaded lot adjoining the HALL, where Hon. R. D. OWEN gave the people an expose of the doings of the last legislature, including its action in full on the TEMPERANCE BILL.

The Procession formed again and marched over town and then to the GROVE, about a quarter of a mile; where a pic-nic, such as the New Harmony ladies—God bless them—know how to get up, was prepared, with seats for the whole crowd at once.

The Committee somehow had neglected to provide any wine for the toasts, but a beautiful refreshing drink called Lemonade, (made also by the ladies) was in abundance, and the music of knives and forks with the above pleasant accompaniment, was for a time persevered in to the evident delight and gratification of those engaged. The Mount Vernon Band the while took care to fill the grove with brazen sounds, lively and cheering.

After dinner, Bros. JOHN PITCHER and Rev. N. SHUMATE gave us Temperance addresses from a stand erected in the Grove, after which the procession returned to town and were dismissed.

There were in town over four thousand persons, and yet the day passed off beautifully, and from information received since, I am sure that a good impression has been made.

I must not conclude without saying that New Harmony Section, No. 60, Cadets of Temperance, contributed not a little to enhanee the beauty of the scene. About fifty-four Cadets were in the procession, dressed in caps, black coats and white pants, making a truly imposing appearance—their neat and appropriate regalia, giving a small hint to the grocery keepers as the procession passed that they had better be making arrangements to go into some other business, against the rising generation came on the stage of action.

For the Temperance Chart.

BROTHER EDITORS: Saint Louis is a little village in the North Eastern part of Bartholomew county, and has heretofore been celebrated for well patronized Doggeries. About 18 months ago, "Golden Rule" Division was planted here under very unpropitious circumstances. Its best friends thought it could not flourish in our whiskey atmosphere. But we were not alarmed by opposition. And now there is not a Doggery within two miles of us, and our Division is one of the largest and most effective in the county.

On Saturday the 7th inst., we held a Temperance Jubilee to dedicate our new Hall. In response to our invitation some seven or eight Divisions of the Sons, and a number of ladies were on the ground at an early hour of the day, and headed by the Edinburg Brass Band, marched to the Methodist camp ground. The crowd of people here in attendance was beyond all expectation. Persons acquainted with the matter say it was the largest Temperance assemblage ever held in the county.

A Mr. Manning from Edinburg delivered the first address. Mr. M. appeared to be a young man of good abilities, and did himself much credit on the occasion. He was followed by Dr. Jones, of Columbus, whose speech was sound and well tempered with pith and eloquence. The Dr's time expired, however, before he had got under full head way, and he immediately gave way to Brother Mack of Columbus, who followed in a speech of near an hour in length. Mr. M. was clear and pointed in his arguments, and seemed to be master of the 'mystic art' that sways the souls of men. His thrilling and eloquent appeals to the friends of Temperance to labor on in the good cause, and to those who were not members to enlist under the Temperance banner, will long be remembered by all who heard them.

After dinner, Brother Abbett, one of the State lecturers, presented the Bible doctrine of Temperance. Brother A. is well known as a zealous Temperance man, and a first rate Temperance orator. His speech upon this occasion was a 'scorcher.'

The meeting then adjourned and dedicated the Hall with the usual ceremonies and solemnities. After which, the multitude dispersed, each one going on his way rejoicing in the bright prospects of a Temperance victory.

The Brethren from all parts of the county bring up the most cheering news from their Divisions; and although in years past our county was properly set down as one of the 'hardest cases' in the State, still the day is not far distant when it will stand as the 'Maine' of Indiana.

Yours in L. P. & F.,

From the New Era.

An Appeal to Lawyers against the Temperance Society.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Looking over my fee book the other day, and recalling the cases that had brought me the fees, I was wonder struck to find that fully three-fourths of my earnings had sprung from—what think you?—why from those pleasant beverages, which the Temperance folks would banish from use!

Nearly all my fattest fees have been in cases that grew out of liquor. Every suit for divorce, or for separate maintainance, that I have ever been concerned in—half the actions of slander—nine-tenths of the assaults-and-battery cases—and four-fifths of those best paid and most interesting cases, criminal prosecutions—have come from that source.

When those delicate jars arise, which the vulgar deem discords, between man and wife—growing at length to such a pitch, that it takes two pair of lawyers and a chancery judge to regulate them: and, when out of these discords, each lawyer, with wizard skill, has evoked harmony the most delightful to his ear—a tune of one or two hundred dollars in fees—to what is it all owing? Ungrateful dog, if he doubts, or forgets it: he owes it all to drink! The husband would have plodded on through life, insipidly loving his wife, and doing his duties, (of no use to lawyer, clerk, or sheriff), but for the intervention of our friend, The Bottle. The Bottle made him generous to those who had no claims on him, at the expense of those who had claims. The Bottle made him negligent, and dashing, in a gentlemanly way: delightful to his tavern companions: though now and then rough to his wife: made him contract debts he hardly knew how: made his house and farm get out of order, his family to be ill-supplied, the woman's heart to throb strangely, and her cheek to grow thin and pale.

Executions would come. The scenes, on his midnightly return, would wax richer and richer in incident—more and more striking—till she could bear them no longer: and—WE were called in. Then the fees!

I know an attorney for the Commonwealth, who says, that he has been concerned in a dozen cases or more, of wives taking surety of the peace against their husbands; in all of which save one, the wives declared on oath, that the violence they suffered was only when their lords were in liquor. Now all these cases are grist for our mill.

Even the plain collecting business—actions of debt, and upon accounts—we owe mostly to our ally, Mr. Barley-corn. He makes debtors get behind hand, neglect their payments, and require to be sued.—Gaming, usury, bad bargains, ill-thrift, misunderstandings about contracts, and many other causes of law suits, arise out of "the cup of kindness." When the farmer lets his store account run on so long, that the merchant has to sue—ten to one (if that account is not chiefly for liquor) the farmer has a liquor account some where else.

The liquor sellers themselves—what inestimable customers they are to lawyers! How vast a proportion of the bonds, notes and accounts, annually put in suit, come from the desks of those noble patrons!—Patrons, indeed they are, of Law and its kindred* sciences; of distillation, and its affilliated arts—physic, pauper-making, prison-building, gallows-making, the coffin manufacturer, and all kinds of penitentiary work. What lawyer would dare to offend them, or would wish to spoil their business? Are we silly children, to quarrel with our bread and butter? Their direct custom brings me hundreds a year; and their indirect agency has made more than half my fortune.

Nay, as man milks the cow and works the ox while they live, and eats them when dead, so the good that these noble patrons do us in their fall, is well nigh equal to the good they do us while they stand. For a great New York Judge says, "that of the tavern keepers and retailers of ardent spirits in that State, during the last forty years, more than two thirds have become drunkards, and reduced their families to poverty." The proportion of those who break in Virginia is probably greater: and in the transit of a large liquor dealer from wealth to poverty, is it not exhilirating to think how many good jobs for lawyers occur? He takes deeds of trust, and he makes deeds of trust, and a multitude is brought against him; a throng of creditors scramble with each other for his effects, and almost every creditor must have one or more lawyers. The whole scene, as I think over it, sounds like the chink of money in my purse!

The Temperance men quote another Judge, whose testimony mark how I will turn against them! I thank the gentleman, (as we say at the bar) for citing such authorities. Judge Hale, (Sir Mathew Hale), said, that if all the murders, robberies, thefts, and other crimes, which he had seen prosecuted in forty years, were divided into five parts, four of those parts would be traceable to Strong Drink. And this, no doubt, is true here in Virginia.

Now, my answer to this is, that as nearly every criminal employs one or more lawyers, the more criminals there are, the better for us. So much for Sir Mathew.

If we wish to rank high in society, we must shun the vulgarity of "total abstinence." Nearly all of the upper classes drink, temperately. The wealthiest and most fashionable gentlemen, in town and country, drink. So do most of our Judges, Members of Congress, and of the Legislature. Of the great lawyers, I believe not one is a cold water man. Some of the greatest have been very much otherwise: and there is no telling how many owe success in their profession, and their being made judges to their loving liquor. It is the same with most of our militia Generals. At least one of them, on his election lately, made, I know not how many of the Legislature drunk, for having elected him. Some liberal minded clergymen, even Bishops, will not refuse a cheerful glass.

Against so many high examples, I should blush to be caught saying, when I am asked to drink—"No I thank you sir, I am a cold water man.' How can we expect Judges, Members of Congress, Generals and Bishops to visit us, if we give them nothing stronger than water? And if they do not visit us, how can we hope for invitations to their houses? We shall be excluded from general society!

It is clear, then, that we are bound to give no countenance to this "Temperance Reformation." The total abstinence principle threatens our staunchest ally with extirpation. Let us not aid or abet the cold water fanatics in their crusade against the feast of reason and the flow of soul.—Temperate drinking is the thing for us. If we drink temperately (being men "of mark and likelihood") and many others trying to imitate us, will insensibly glide into excess; to the great increase of our harvests. We shall also conciliate the liquor venders: by haunting bar-rooms too, and other merry-making places, we shall captivate the jolly lads that use there.—They will call us fine fellows; and give us many a case, which the cold water prigs might else have gotten.

If some of us chance to be caught in our own snare, and get occasionally mellow, 'twill only be following a good usage of the olden time. Many a great lawyer has drawn his inspiration from the bottle: and why not we?

The doctors (if they did but know it) are jointly interested with us, in maintaining the dominion of Strong Drink. It puts money into their purse. I once heard a right eminent physician say (and a firm opposer of total abstinence too), that if alcoholic drinks were done away, it would greatly curtail the profits of the doctors."—These were his very words. Yet, somehow—through ignorance or weakness, I suppose—many more of them, than of the lawyers join in the movement against alcohol. But lawyers always were, and always will be, a more enlightened class than Doctors. Some Lawyers, who abet what they call "The Great Reformation," weakly argue that the solid and permanent welfare of our profession is inseparable from that of the community: and that, as the community would undoubtedly be bettered by the total disuse of intoxicating drinks, so would we. But this is a mere abstraction. In fact, it is little better than metaphysical; as I could prove, if I had time.

Your loving Brother,

A LAWYER.

They Have Fallen with their Armor on.

Bro. LLOYD MILLS, G. W. P. of Western New York, and Bro. ELIPHALET ST. JOHN, G. W. P. of Eastern New York, are no more. The former died on the 12th, and the latter on the 20th of September.—When we attended the session of the G. D. of Western New York, in July, at Albion, we found Bro. Mills there, but too ill to preside. He was suffering from pulmonary disease, with every indication that he would very soon be no more among the living. Then, as in former years, his whole soul seemed to be absorbed in the temperance reform. He entertained serious apprehensions that his earthly career was nearly closed, and when we bid him farewell, he urged us to prosecute with earnestness the great work, and expressed a hope that he might be so far restored to health as to do battle with us against the liquor traffic. A good, and brave, and beloved soldier, has fallen. Bro. Mills was, by profession, a printer, and years ago lived in Cincinnati. He was connected with the office where our paper was printed, and was engaged specially in putting our editorials in type. Here he first became an ardent friend of temperance. Several years since he removed to Western New York, and started a temperance paper, which he not only published but edited with ability. His brethren in New York, and all who knew him here or elsewhere, will mourn his early demise. The Rochester Journal thus speaks of him:

"Bro. Mills died among his friends in Pennsylvania, on the 12th instant, of consumption. Of his "last of earth" we have no information, except that "he died as a Christian dieth, and was buried with the ceremonies of the Order he loved so much whilst living, and of which he was so bright an ornament." He was a young man, but had already acquired the influence in community and among his brethren, which is looked for only in persons more advanced in life. Pure in heart, earnest in purpose, and possessing uncommon soundness of judgment, he was ever engaged in some good work, and ever enjoyed, in a high degree, the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He has been cut down in the midst of his years and his usefulness, and 'gone home' to receive his reward."

Bro. St. John was a physician, and for many years has been eminent in his profession, and ever ready to engage in every good word and work. He lived and died at Ballston Spa, Saratoga county. We have known him as an earnest temperance man for ten years, and have had frequent correspondence with him. We last met him at the great Saratoga Convention, in August of last year. His physical frame, always delicate, has been long shattered by painful disease, yet his mind was always active, and his whole energies were consecrated to the cause of religion and temperance. On account of an impediment in his speech, he was to some extent disqualified for the public advocacy of his principles. What he did say was always marked by strong sense, and evinced an intimate and thorough acquaintance with the subject. He has written powerful articles in favor of the temperance cause.—He was engaged in the cause among the first; when the Washingtonian reform swept over the country, he threw his whole soul into the movement; when the Order of the Sons of Temperance was instituted, he put on their armor, determined always to be among the foremost in the struggle for the right. The savor of his good name will long remain, though his shattered frame sleeps in the tomb.

It is a melancholy and singular co-incidence that both of the Grand Divisions of New York should be called to mourn the loss of their chosen leaders at the same time. What a lesson to them and to all our brotherhood, to be also ready for the summons that shall call us from our respective fields of labor! What an admonition to work earnestly, diligently, and faithfully, and work now, as no other hour is promised us. The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.—Organ of Temperance Reform.

American Autumn Scenery.

The following truthful description of the beautiful variegated appearance of our forests in autumn is from the pen of N. P. Willis:

"The first severe frost had come, and the miraculous change had passed upon the leaves which is known only in America.—The blood-red sugar maple, with a leaf brighter and more delicate than a Circassian lip, stood here and there in the forest like the Sultan's standard in a host—the solitary and far seen aristocrat of the wilderness—the birch, with its spirit-like and amber leaves, ghosts of the departed summer, turned out along the edges of the woods like a lining of the palest gold; the broad sycamore and the fan-like catalpa flaunted their saffron foliage in the sun, spotted with gold like the wings of a lady-bird; the kingly oak, with its summit shaken bare, still hid its majestic trunk in a drapery of sumptuous dyes, like a stricken monarch gathering his robes of state about him to die royally in his purple; the tall poplar, with its minaret of silver leaves, stood blanched like a coward in the dying forest, burdening every breeze with its complainings; the hickory paled through its enduring green; the bright berries of the mountain ash flushed with a more sanguine glory in the unobstructed sun; the gaudy tulip-tree, the sybarite of vegetation, stripped of its golden cups, still drank the intoxicating light of noon-day in leaves than which the leaves of an Indian shell were never more delicately tinted; the still deeper-dyed vines of the lavish wilderness, perishing with the noble things whose summer they had shared, outshone them in their decline, as woman in her death is heavenlier than the being on whom in life she leaned; and alone and unsympathizing in this universal decay, outlaws from nature, stood the fir and the hemlock, their frowning and sombre heads darker and less lovely than ever, in contrast with the death-stricken glory of their companions."

The ship West Wind, which sailed last week from New York for Australia, took out about 150 passengers.

The highest tax assessed in Salem, Mass., the present year, is $1681 50, and George Peabody is the lucky man who has to pay it.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

To Cure a Cold, with Headache and Soreness of the Body, take the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, and wrap up warm, to sweat during the night.

For a Cold and Cough, take it morning, noon, and evening, according to directions on the bottle, and the difficulty will soon be removed. None will long suffer from this trouble when they find it can be so readily cured. Persons afflicted with a seated cough, which breaks them of their rest at night, will find, by taking the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, they may be sure of sound, unbroken sleep, and consequently refreshing rest. Great relief from suffering, and an ultimate cure, is afforded to thousands who are thus afflicted, by this invaluable remedy.

From its agreeable effect in these cases, many find themselves unwilling to forego its use when the necessity for it has ceased.

From two eminent Physicians in

Fayetteville, Tenn., April 16th, 1851.

Sir:—We have given your Cherry Pectoral an extensive trial in our practice, and find it to surpass every other remedy we have for curing affections of the respiratory organs

DRS. DIEMER & HAMPTON.

To Singers and Public Speakers this remedy is invaluable, as by its action on the throat and lungs, when taken in small quantities, it removes all hoarseness in a few hours, and wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of voice.

Asthma is generally much relieved, and often wholly cured by Cherry Pectoral. But there are some cases so obstinate as to yield entirely to no medicine. Cherry Pectoral will cure them, if they can be cured.

Bronchitis, or irritation of the throat and upper portion of the lungs, may be cured by taking Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses. The uncomfortable oppression is soon relieved.

Rev. Dr. Lansing, of Brooklyn, New York, states: "I have seen the Cherry Pectoral cure such cases of Asthma and Bronchitis as leads me to beleive it can rarely fail to cure those diseases."

For Croup. Give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

Whooping Cough may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral

The Influenza is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences, while their neighbors, without the Cherry Pectoral, were suffering from the disease.

Salem, Ohio, June 11th, 1851.

Doct. J. C. Ayer:—I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your Cherry Pectoral in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough, by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best physicians freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it, than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine, he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully, J. D. SINCLAIR,
Deputy Postmaster.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the Cherry Pectoral, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and coughs, and pulmonary diseases. P. Cleveland, M D.

Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

Dr. Valentine Mott, the widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of 'Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,' which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been affected by Cherry Pectoral in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it.

Water.

BY ELSIE ELLISTER.

Pour out the water,
Sparkling and bright!
Drink the draught gladly,
'Twill give thee delight!
Healthsome and limped,
The translucent draught—
Drink, for none nobler,
The Gods ever quaffed!

Fresh from the fountain,
Cold from the spring,
Dancing in sunlight,
'Tis fit for a King!
Wine but bewilders
The mind and the brain—
Cold water braces
Their powers—drink again!

Touch not the liquid
That glows in the cup—
'Twill blast thy best pleasures,
And burn thy hopes up.
Furies and demons
Its cup-bearers are,
Repel its enticings,
And thrust it afar.

Nothing but water,
If you would be free!
Nothing but water,
If peace you would see!
Water pure water—
How grateful the draught?
Be thankful—for better,
The Gods never quaffed!

The Seasons.

BY LAURA LINWOOD.

The change of seasons presents delightful yet mournful ideas to the contemplative mind. The old year has just passed away and a new one is about to be whirled in; there in solemn conclave sit the seasons discoursing on the joys and sorrows they have caused. Old Winter with his stern countenance sits at the feet of his sister, his snowy mantle drawn around him; by his side lovely Spring warbling her merry songs; gay wood-nymphs dance around her; then, Summer, with her careless ease and bright flowers, ls gazing on the orb above as if He were all her own; pale, sad Autumn stands contemplating the others, as if she seemed to say these must all die, these bright flowers, this lovely foilage, must be destroyed by me. Behold! lovely Spring, o'er the hills she bounds and bursts on our enraptured vision, like a dream, o'er her shoulders hang a loose garment, her head is crowned with a chaplet of flowers, garlands are suspended o'er her, and in her hand she holds a basket dispensing to all, their share of her bounties as she passes along. All seasons brings joy and sorrows, but it seems as if the sun shone brighter and the skies were less clouded in Spring, nature seems to wake from a dormant state, the birds fly from their dull retreats and warble their blithe songs as they hop from tree to tree; the flowers, the beautiful flowers, emblems of frail mortality, come forth to deck the earth with new beauties, and their perfumed exhalations come floating on the balmy breeze. All creation hails with joy this delightful season and from the heart of man ascends the spontaneous song of thankfulness. Why is it that we all love the spring more than other seasons? Are not all regulated by the wise Creator for our good? It is because the human heart loves sunshine, the spring comes in smiles and gladness, and we love her.—But it depends on us alone whether spring should be a happy season; if properly spent, life would be a perpetual spring each day unfolding new glories and beauties.

A spring fades and passes away, the sunny smiling summer comes to us, vegetation is green and bright, the waving corn delights the eye, the farmer is happy as he gazes on his prospect of a plenteous harvest, the children rush from their studies, and as they tumble in the hay, have no thought of the morrow; but Summer with her joys is rapidly hastening to the tomb, the reaper is seen in the distance, the sun is losing some of his mighty power, the lowing cattle are expecting a refreshing season. Autumn comes to us in sadness, in mournful tones she tells us of the fleetness of all earthly things. Onward come the pale sisters with their slow and solemn tread, we must bid farewell to summer. Melancholy sits on nature, the last rose of Summer is fading, the bright birds that so lately delighted us with their merry carols are hastening to a southern home. The falling leaf reminds us that we are passing away, how solemn, but yet how true, a few short years with their changing seasons will roll round and we will be gathered to the silent tomb. Of all seasons, Autumn is most calculated to impress us with the necessity of a virtuous life; on the formation and development of our characters here depends the happiness or misery of our future state. As we stand by the tomb of some loved friend and think of the life and beauty that once decked that frail form, we remember that our Autumn is soon to come. The dark face of Winter is seen in the distance from the north, he comes with stealthy steps clothed in his icy mantle, the earth, so lately decked in beauty and verdure looks cheerless as he comes along. The joys of Winter are numberless, the gathering at the domestic fire-side, where we live over again in memory, those pleasant scenes that have passed away, is indeed happiness. Winter brings to us the happiest season ever given to mortals, one that procures for us an everlasting inheritance in the mansions of bliss; it brings us Christmas, the season in which our blessed Lord came to dwell with us on earth, to bear for us innumerable sufferings and sorrows.—This should make us love Winter although it brings many sombre days. Thus are the seasons changing, each brings its benefits and pleasures, and we know they are sent by a wise God, who dispenses time and all things for our good. Tnen while youth and health are ours we should improve each passing moment, for time once spent never returns; if spent acceptably to our Great Father, when the Son of Righteousness dawns upon us, we shall enjoy those pleasures that have been promised as the reward of a life well spent.

☞ Says Dr. Jewett--"Over nine-tenths of the territory of Massachusetts, embracing at least four-fifths of its inhabitants, our new law for the suppression of the liquor traffic is exerting a most happy influence. It has not, even where it has been most vigorously enforced, entirely annihilated the evil it was intended to crush and all its attendant mischiefs, nor has it introduced the millenium, as some seem to suppose it must, to authorize its continuance on the statute book. It has, however, if we are to credit the testimony which daily reaches us from different parts of the state, accomplished enough already to call forth the plaudits of thousands, who before its passage and enforcement doubted the expediency of the measure, while it has stopped the traffic in more than four-fifths of the bar-room shops, stores, and cellars of the State, (not including Boston, and its immediate vicinity,) in the short space of about one month.

Mr. Goodwin, of the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad, has just completed the admeasurement of Mt. Washington, and makes it 6284 feet above the level of the sea. This accords very nearly with the altitude as given by other scientific men.

Faciola, editor of the revolutionary paper at Havana, was garrotted. The shock was so great to his mother, that she fell dead at once.

An Odd Mistake; Or a Glass too Much.

Not many nights since, a policeman—no; we will not say a policeman, for they are extremely sensitive on that point—but an individual who had been a policeman, sauntered home after having been "scandalously served with liquor." The lamp-lights shone double to his vision, the awning-posts staggered and would not stand still, and the pavement seemed to him to possess a strange proclivity for striking him in the face. He got to his domicil, into which he had but lately moved, and hence he hadn't got the hang of things. Being about to retire for the night, he thought he heard a noise in an adjoining room, as if of some daring burglar making free with his furniture. Striking a light, he advanced towards the scene of the disturbance, and lo! the figure of a man stood before him in all the nakedness of a bedroom dishabille. Much wondering why a house-breaker should come there in such strange disarray, and feeling certain that he could not make his escape, he, the policeman, being near the only door to the room, he concluded to have a parley with the daring visitant.

Being somewhat of a bully in his disposition, he resolved, before arresting the robber, to harrass him as much as possible. To that end, he took a leisure survey of the shape, and in so far as the dim light would allow, carefully scanned his features. Never before had our ex-policeman seen such a forbidding countenance! Scoundrel, robber, murderer, were written in unmistakeable lines in his 'horrent front. In all his life he had never looked upon such a forbidding aspect.

"Ah! you everlasting scamp," said he; "I've got you, have I? Blast your pictur! I've seen you afore, and the p'lice have spotted you a long time ago!—You've been in the P'lice Office for stealin', and was tuck up because your count'nance told on you! Sent to the Rookery, too; not because anything was proved on you, but for your sneaking, suck-egg-dog-wisage, dog my cat! I'll fix you; and if your face don't send you to the Penitentiary, I'm a liar!" So saying, our ex-policeman made a plunge to arrest the intruder, and lo! there was a sound of shivered glass that alarmed the neighborhood!

He had seen his own image in a large mirror, placed there without his knowledge, and the above complimentary epithets had been applied to his own sweet countenance!—Exchange.

The Madness of Intemperance.

Judge Johnson, of Georgia, in recently sentencing a culprit to death, said: "Nor shall the place be forgotten in which occurred this shedding of blood. It was in one of those thousand ante-chambers of hell which mar, like plague spots, the fair face of our State. You need not be told that I mean a tippling shop, the meeting place of Satan's minions, and the foul cess-pool which, by spontaneous generation, breeds, and disgusting in profanity and babbling, and vulgarity, and Sabbath breaking. I would not be the owner of a groggery for the price of this globe converted into precious ore. For the pitiful sum of a dime he furnished the poison which made the victim of the deed a fool, and converted this trembling culprit into a demon. How paltry the price of two human lives. This traffic is tolerated by law, and therefore the vender has committed an offence not cognizable by earthly tribunals; but, in the sight of Him who is unerring in wisdom, he who deliberately furnishes the intoxicating draught which inflames men to anger and violence and bloodshed, is PARTICEPS CRIMINIS in the moral turpitude of the deed. Is it not high time that these sinks of vice and crime should be held rigidly to the law of the land, and placed under the ban of an enlightened and virtuous public opinion?

The Woman-whipper.—The now world wide infamous Marshal Haynau cannot go anywhere, it seems, without exciting the popular indignation. On the 25th of August he arrived in Paris, after several narrow escapes in Belgium. Being discovered by the audience, at the Vauxhall of Brussels, shouts of "Put him out"—a la porte—were raised, and several persons who shook hands with him were hooted at. At night, an immense crowd collected in front of his hotel, in the Place Royal.—Groans, yells, hootings, and cries of "Tiger," "Hyena," and "Executioner of Women," filled the air. He was also grossly insulted at Bruges.—Exchange.

Beautiful Extract.

"By a beautiful law of Providence, the means most conducive to the happiness of our race are precisely those which best confer happiness on the individual: each one most effectually promotes the well-being of the species when he discharges his duty to himself, when he acts in accordance with the lofty tendencies of his nature. It is to satisfy the immortal essence within, that all great men write and act in the world. All high genius is impelled outwards; it demands to take form, to go forth into the world, irrespective of consequences, irrespective of whether it be smiled or frowned on, whether it be hailed as a prophet or derided as a dreamer. To take form and go forth is ever its imperious desire: the inner voice is only hushed by the exit of the crier. Let no Utilitarian, proud of a false system, let no Materialist, glorying in his deadening creed, preach to the Poet that he is deluded, and that he would do better to spin calico and win gold, than weave, amid solitude and neglect, the rainbow fancies that flit in mingled storm and sunshine through his soul. Genius cares not for the offerings of Earth or the meed of Mammon: the siren voice of the world cannot reach him amid the music of the spheres; the paltry Present shrinks away before a deathless Eternity. There is a heavenly idol shrined in his heart; and at the sight of its beauty, at the call of its spirit voice, all other fascination is forgotten. It is as real and far less perishable, as enthralling and far more noble an entity for him, than the golden calf that wins the worship of the worldling. It is no fiction, that cry of the spirit to be born into the world. Sit down by yonder couch, where early Genius is dying, and behold the melancholy that clouds that young brow. Whence comes it? He is leaving no dear ones behind; his existence has been made happy rather by the mind and soul that gave him, than by the sweet links of human life or the world's smile. Yet a shadow is resting on the warm springs of life, and it is another hand than Death's is chilling them; the fountains of youth are troubled, but not at the coming Spectre of the Grave. He tells you that he sees within a world of bright forms that no eye but his has ever beheld; that he deemed it the mission of his life to paint that lovely spirit-land in fadeless colors; but that now he is passing vainly away, that the sights and sounds of that fair world are vanishing even from him, and that, when his eye is quenched, they will fall back into the void, and pass irrevocably away, like a forgotten dream."

Died of the High School.

A strange caption say you, and little sense in it; but we—as of right—think otherwise. It was suggested to us by a little article in the Saturday Evening Post. The Editor says:

"We recently noticed in the daily papers some resolutions in honor of three boys who died during the vacation. One of those boys we frequently met last winter in the Germantown cars, carrying a heavy load of school books. His face interested us much—fine and intellectual but sadly pale. We feared then that he was studying beyond his strength; and we should not be at all surprised if a proper verdict in his case, as in that of various others, would be:—Died of the High School."

There was a beautiful child in one of our villages. A more brilliant scholar was never known. "Give me books, give me books," was his constant and eager cry, and his parents paraded him before admiring company as parents too often do. They sent him early to the best school in the State, and attributed his thin face and delicate figure, to "growing;" he grew it was true too fast. At sixteen he was laid in the family vault, at Cambridge; "he was never well," said his sorrowing parents. He never had the chance to be; he died of the High School.

How many sweet young creatures have we known, growing up into the fairest promise, who have died of the High School. And the victims increase; studies that should never be attempted, till the age of thirty, are thrust upon poor pale girls of twelve and fourteen—and ambition is the god that urges them to their death.

Parents be careful that your beloved ones do not die of the High School.—Olive Branch.

You will never repent of being patient and sober.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

☞ We commend the following which we clip from the Metropolitan, to the consideration of our female readers, not that they are wanting in their duty in reference to the evils of intemperance, but with the desire to stimulate them to continued efforts in behalf of the right:

Every mother, wife and sister should exert her influence, to have the wine which sparkles so brightly in the cup, banished from the sideboard. As the little rill which flows brightly over its pebly bod, may become a dark and rapid river, ere its waters mingle with the ocean, so may the life of those who sip of the wine which is pleasant to the taste, and which produces an exhilerating feeling, become dark and troubled, by that most insatiable of all appetites, intemperance. Woman should use every effort to banish the wine cup.—Let her never by her example give a license to moderate drinking. There is where the evil begins, but who can say where it will end. Let society say it is ungentlemanly, debasing to drink, even moderately, and this would prevent the danger of contracting a habit, which when once contracted cannot be resisted. Now, it is considered an indication of refinement and high breeding to partake with a relish a glass of wine, a julep or a cobbler, and some gentlemen when they wish to pay a lady a compliment will present her a glass of champaigne. No lady should receive it as such, but decline it firmly yet politely. We would like much to see such a state of society. Let every woman engage in bringing it about earnestly, with all her energies, and it may be effected.—She who has not herself felt the sorrow which intemperance brings, should have sympathy for her suffering sister, whose household is made desolate by this demon.

A Wife's Devotion.

Scenes are often witnessed in our municipal court, which melt the heart, and bring tears from the eye. There was one a few days since, which was not only affecting—indeed, but displayed the devotion with which woman, too often, clings to a ruined husband. In the criminal box sat a prisoner, whose bloated countenance & haggard appearance denoted that he was a drunkard: A Drunkard! what a world of meaning is there in that word. A drunkard! One whose only pleasure in life is to drink a burning, poisonous fluid—one lost to society, despised by his relatives, and degraded almost beyond endurance. A drunkard! There is no appellation which can convey a deeper degradation than that. There sat the drunkard, grum, bloated, despised.

"Who appears against this man? enquired his Honor.

"I do," responded a faint voice, and at that moment a plain, but neatly dressed, middle aged lady, stepped upon the witness stand. Her countenance bore the marks of trouble, and in a melancholy tone, with tears streaming down her cheeks, she told her story.

"The prisoner is my husband, sir. For fifteen years we have lived happy and comfortable, but for several years past, he has made himself and his children unhappy, and almost broken his wife's heart.—He drinks, sir, and is scarcely ever sober. I have borne with him—received his abuse without murmuring, and returned his curses with kind words. I have even left the home of my nativity, my relatives and friends, and accompanied him out west, with the hope that a change in his conduct and habits would be the result. But, sir, he appears to grow worse. We have been in your city ten days, and he has been intoxicated all the time. I should like to bear with him, sir, and it pierces my heart to appear against him, and have him punished as a criminal. But I can stand it no longer. I mind not his abuse of me, but for our dear childrens' sake, I am forced to take this means to try and reform him. Oh! sir, it is dreadful to appear against my husband, but what else can I do? Do not punish him severely, sir—it may be he will reform, and again make his family happy."

While the tears and words of this devoted wife touched the hearts of every bystander who heard her, the husband sat cold and unaffected. In default of bail to keep the peace, he was committed to jail where liquor will be without his reach.—Oh! that the wish of his devoted wife may be realized—that he may "reform, and again make his family happy."

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 10, 1852.

☞ We have received from the hands of Bro. Woodward, a number of letters from different parts of the state tending to show the complexion of the next Legislature on the subject of temperance. Taken as indications of the character of that body on that subject, we confess they create any other than pleasant reflections on our immediate prospects of having an effective law for the suppression of the whiskey traffic and the countless enormities to which it gives rise. At the same time, however, these letters assure us of the regular advance of our cause in all quarters; and we hope it will be remembered that the right of petition is still within our power, although our voice was drowned in the recent State election, by the din of parties. It may be that our petitions will again be disregarded—that the voice of humanity will call in vain, for an act of simple justice, that shall put an end to a system whereby murder is legalized, and the state becomes a party to four-fifths of all the crimes, which she has enacted laws to punish: but we will not believe it, till it transpires. Be active, then, in circulating your petitions, and let the Legislature have the responsibility of overruling your wishes, or the glory of enacting them and redeeming the state from the reign of the Liquor-fiend.

☞ It is with no common degree of gratification that we lay before our readers, the Report of the Committee of the Grand Division on the State of the Order. It is an able document, and defines our position in reference to the Liquor traffic in language so simple, plain and direct that all may understand. There is no equivocation, no dodging, no special pleading to be found in it; and all our opponents can do, is to assume their position.—Our ultimatum—the extermination, utter and complete—of the whole business of liquor selling and drinking in all its Protean forms—is now before the world; and, determined not to cease to agitate until that be achieved, we run up as our watchword, "he that is not for us, is against us." Thus, we are determined to have no neutral ground, where lazy selfishness may loll in the enjoyment of plenty and peace, while desolation and ruin lie scattered all around. We will have no bats, too cowardly to engage in the great battle of principle going on in the land, but ever ready, by easy transformations, to ally themselves with the successful party. All we ask, is that our foes may unite; and, though their name be legion, we feel assured their own evil genius will drive them from their high places into a sea beneath whose waves they will be "choked."

This tendency of the Report to effect a more perfect union of the entire temperance forces of the State, in whatever form they may now exist, we regard as one of its many excellent features. But as already intimated, the same policy which unites the friends of the temperance reform, will also unite its enemies. Well, be it so; and what follows? Certainly no disaster to our cause, no danger to our principles, no stay to their advancement and ultimate triumph. Is not our creed truth, inspired by benevolence, and under the pledged protection of the Most High? How then is it to be harmed by the union of its friends, or its enemies? By a beautiful law of the Creator, this separation of its friends from its foes adds strength to the former, while it brings only confusion, weakness and certain defeat to the latter; for while men united for the promotion of a good cause never fail, be they many or few, to carry the world forward toward a brighter day than it has known, confusion, overthrow and ruin ever track the steps of associated wrong-doers, and haunt them to the grave. Crime is always comparatively safe when solitary, while bands of criminals associated for a common evil purpose, sooner or later work out their own detection and punishment.—There is in every man's nature, no matter how deeply steeped in iniquity he may be, a principle of repulsion that continually carries him off from his depraved associates, producing disunion, discovery, disgrace and destruction. But it is not so with the union of the good and the virtuous. They are drawn to each other by the attraction of virtue, which, like the force of gravitation, increases in power as they more and still more closely approximate. The Report, then, takes the true ground, both in relation to the object for which we contend, and means necessary to its attainment. Its principles shall on all occasions have our cordial support; for upon them only can we hope for complete success.

Grand Division.

The Grand Division of this State closed its Annual Session on last Thursday week. It was a session of unusual interest and labor, which we hope and believe will eventuate in much good to the Temperance cause. A spirit of unity never before witnessed, seems to pervade the whole Temperance army; and that spirit inspired in no degree the labors of the Grand Division. The voluminous size of the proceedings preclude our publishing them entire. We shall, therefore, give from time to time such parts as may tend to throw light upon the state of the Order and prospects of the cause in the State.

The following are the Grand Officers elect:

P. S. Sage, of Allensville, G. W. P.
R. T. Brown, Crawfordsville, G. W. A.
Chas. Woodward, Indianapolis, G. S.
James Hall, Indianapolis, G. T.
John B. Abbot, Columbus, G. C.
Jno. T. Wallace, Bowling Green, G. Sen.
Clement E. Babb, Indianapolis, G. Chap.

☞ We learn from a recent number of the "Express," published at St. Anthony Falls, Minesota, that our esteemed friend and fellow-laborer in the cause of Temperance, the Rev. T. R. Cressy, formerly Pastor of the Baptist Church in this city, is still, as was his wont while here, laboring for the entire destruction of the liquor business. We shall never forget the energy with which, on one occasion, he spoke against any system of legislation that stopped short of utterly abolishing not merely the traffic in, but the manufacture of alcohol. "Why" said he, collecting all his energies for the effort, "you might as well attempt to plug up Vesuvius with a corn cob, as to put an end to intemperance by enacting laws against the traffic in Alcohol while you allow it to be manufactured at pleasure." Well, success to friend Cressy in all his benevolent enterprizes at his far-off home, in the West.

☞ Well, the election is over—the agony at an end. It is now determined that some one of the three candidates for the Presidency is successful. Who he is we know not. But one thing we do know, and are right glad of it too. Some of the agencies through which the cause of Temperance has for a time been lost sight of by the great mass of the people, will now in a measure cease to operate; and the friends of reform may go forward again with the good work. Up, then, friends of the Right, and let the cause of humanity be lifted from the dust where it has been thrown by wicked laws and false men.

☞ The Maine Law has passed the Legislature of New Brunswick, received the sanction of the Lieutenant Governor, and the Queen, and is now in force in that colony. Our colonial neighbors have thus adopted a declaration of independence from a more cruel and exacting tyrant, than ever King George proved to us. May their course be onward.

The Secretary of the Fayette County Bible Society, in Ohio, reporting the annual meeting of that society, says:

"Thirty-five years ago, we had thirty distilleries in our county, and no church; we have now thirty churches and no distillery!"

Revolting Incident.

At the recent Circus in this city, many who had convened to witness the exhibition, were greatly annoyed by a drunken Irish woman, who cursed and swore at the top of her voice. She had two small children along with her, who were almost frantic, and greatly added to the confusion created by their unnatural mother, by their own piteous screams. Marshall McNeely came upon the ground, and took immediate steps for her removal to a place of security.—Having called one or more of the city constables to his aid, he proceeded to take her children from her, and ordered his assistants to conduct her from the place. Then commenced a scene utterly indescribable. She sprung at the officers who attempted to seize her, like a fury, and managed for some time by striking, scratching, screaming and swearing to keep them at bay. At length they succeeded in leading her off toward her home, if it is not a desecration to call a miserable lodge desolated by the demon Alcohol, by that holy name. We followed at a distance, and must be allowed to say, that we envy no man, no matter what station he may fill in the world, who could have witnessed that scene without emotions the most intensely painful. Her children, although one of them could not have been more than a year old, shrunk from her as if she had been a fiend and not their mother. At one of the corners of the street, they were met by his Excellency, the Governor; and, we confess, we could not but think of the pleasure it will afford him to recommend to the Legislature at its approaching session, the passage of a law that will forever remove the cause of such disgraceful spectacles from the State. He has already won a proud distinction by his persevering efforts in the promotion of Agriculture and other great interests; but higher honors and a far more enduring renown will be awarded him, for the removal, through his efforts, of the curse of intemperance from among us. That he will call the attention of the Legislature to this deeply interesting and vitally important subject we have not the slightest doubt; and by pointing out the remedy for the evils under which we groan, secure to himself the gratitude of all future generations.—This is due, not only to his own benevolent and generous heart, but to the hundred thousand petitioners who in vain asked the Legislature at its last session to remove the source of intemperance, and crime, and poverty, and ruin and death from among us. We await the result with interest and hope.

Election.

There were, so far as we observed, but few drunken men at the polls in this city on the occasion of the Presidential election. There were, nevertheless, too many, when we remember that one of them, wholly divested of his reason and manhood, may turn the scale in which hangs poised the destiny of our country, with all the hopes which, at home or abroad, make it their centre. Other things, however, which are not drunkeness, but in our opinion almost if not altogether as reprehensible, we did observe in sickening abundance. Among them we may notice one. It is the practice of dogging (it deserves no better name) men as they approach the polls. Of course, the men who pursue this practice, have no confidence in the people's capacity for self-government, no matter how loudly they may profess the contrary. They wish to rule on the assumption, that their superior knowledge entitles them to do so. If any man's vote is changed in this way, we have too much reason to believe him unworthy of the right of suffrage; for such a change implies, that with all the opportunities enjoyed by the citizens of our country to form an opinion in reference to the principles involved in the election, he up till then failed, either out of indolence or incapacity to form one, or is of so unsettled a purpose, as to be moved from his resolve by the most light and chaffy of all appliances. In either case such a man is not capable of self-government. If elections then are carried by election-day influences it is effected by the votes of such men. Who governs, then, the people, or those gassy and interested politicians who annoy the people at the polls?

Grand Division of Kentucky.

The Kentucky New Era of the 30th ult., contains the proceedings of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of the State of Kentucky; from the reports of the officers, and facts otherwise disclosed therein, we learn that the Order is in a flourishing condition in that State. The Report of G. W. P. is full of highly important matter, well set forth. He concludes, as all who give the subject sufficient attention to understand it must, that "the Maine law, and nothing short of the Maine law will answer the purpose and fully meet the exigency." By this, of course, we are to understand, not that each State must literally adopt that law, but that no law will prove effective unless it entirely suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors. This is the end, to accomplish which we labor. We heartily wish our Kentucky Brethren success in the benevolent enterprise of redeeming their noble Commonwealth from the evils of drunkeness.

The following are the names of the Grand Officers elected for that State for the ensuing year:

Rev. James Young, of Louisville, G. W. P.,
G. W. Williams, of Paris, G. W. A.,
J. F. Huber, of Louisville, G. Scribe,
Wm. Kendrick, of Louisville, G. T.,
D. S. Hays, of Hopkinsville, G. Con.,
Rev. J. H. Heywood, of Louisville, G. Chap.
C. F. Brown, of Lexington, G. Sentinel.

Bro. Robert Heston, of Leitchfield, was elected G. E. B., for the ensuing year.

Read the following rallying cry from that spirited ally of ours, the Kentucky New Era.

To Arms! To Arms!

Freemen of Kentucky, the present is an auspicious hour. If you really desire to elevate your great Commonwealth in the scale of moral freedom, and give to the world an enduring evidence of your invincible determination to be free from the thraldom of drunkenness, now is the time to secure that great distinction. The public mind is becoming thoroughly aroused, the clarion cry of destruction to the rum-seller's murderous occupation, is ringing in clear piercing tones all over the State, and every successive day only serves to strengthen and prolong the sound thereof. At first that cry was uttered in a feeble voice, but now it is full of volume, clear and loud, and terrible as an army with banners. With one accord then, join in that anthem of deliverance, and give to it the torrent's force to carry the foul pestilence from the fair face of earth to the mighty deep.

The sons and daughters, the religious, moral, political, and pecuniary interests of this bright fair land, should be freed from the further powers of the fell destroyer, whose touch is pollution, and whose sting is death.

Come forth then to the rescue. Mild, persuasive means are only child's play; the enemy laughs at such puny weapons, entrenched behind the bar, supported with well filled bottles and decanters, his ears are deaf to the voice of reason, and eyes blind to the distress which his destructive shots every where produce.

The only certain way to overcome and destroy his power, is to draw the fang—take from him the means of attraction and destruction. Then, and not until then, will he be harmless.

The Liquor Law in Lynn.—The Mayor of Lynn, Mass., in a letter referring to the operation of the liquor law in that city, says:

"The records of the Police Court show that the whole number of complaints entered during the two months prior to Sept. 22d, 1851, was 79. Same time in 1852, 34. In justice to the facts I must say that the two months of 1851 had far more than the average of that year, and on the other hand, the practical benefit of the law is far greater than the records of the court show. The inveterate toper will still persist in getting his liquor from Boston, and getting drunk, while the beginners in intemperance are in most cases checked in their career from the great inconvenience they find in procuring the intoxicating liquor.

"The uniform testimony of the City Marshall and the police, is, that they find the streets far more quiet and orderly than before the law went into operation. This is particularly the case in those parts of the city from which we have received the most trouble in former years."

The committee of arrangements appointed at the New Hampshire festival in 1849, who were directed to take measures for a similar meeting in 1852, have decided that the festival shall be holden on the 18th of November.

The last moments and Sayings of Daniel Webster.

Marshfield, October 25.

During Sunday, Mr. Webster conversed freely, and with great clearness, and much detail, in regard to his private affairs, stating his plans fully in relation to his farm.

At five o'clock in the afternoon, he was seized with a violent vomiting, and threw off considerable black matter, tinged with blood; subsequently great exhaustion ensued, and his physicians announced to him that his last moments were approaching, which he received with great calmness and composure. He called in all his family and his personal friends, and addressed each individually, and in a few words, bidding them farewell. In speaking to his personal friends, he referred to their past relations, and, after asking the richest blessings of Heaven upon Peter Harvey, he bid them all a final farewell. He then said, as if speaking to himself, "On the 24th of October, all that is mortal of Daniel Webster will be no more," and then added, "Heavenly Father, forgive my sins, and receive my soul to thyself, through Christ Jesus." He then addressed Dr. Jeffries, who, in answer to Mr. Webster's remark, said he could do nothing more for him. Mr. Webster then said, "My part is to wait patiently until the end, and may it come soon."

Between ten and eleven o'clock, Mr. Webster repeated, rather indistinctly, some sentences from Gray and Fletcher, repeating so as to be understood, the first line of Gray's elegy, and then said, "that's it." The book was then brought, and the stanzas he referred to read, which seemed to give him much pleasure.

"The curfew tolls the knell of parting day."

He then spoke of the difficulty of dying, when Doctor Jeffries repeated the portion of Scripture—"though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, and thy rod and thy staff shall comfort me;" to which Mr. Webster replied, "the fact—the fact"—that's what I meant"—"Thy rod—thy rod"—Thy staff." The close of the great man's life was perfectly tranquil and easy.

Mrs. Webster was unable to witness the last moments, and waited the announcements in her own apartment.

Mrs. Webster gave special directions, that his body should be buried, with unostentation, in the tomb at South Marshfield. No day is yet fixed for the funeral.

The Hearer of Prayer.

God blesses those who are actively engaged in the discharge of their duties. As an evidence of the fact, read the following extract of the doings of the General Association of New Hampshire:

Afternoon—The Association in committee of the whole, with the audience, discussed the following resolutions on temperance:

1. Resolved, That the cause of temperance is intimately connected with the advancement of Christ's kingdom on the earth.

2. That the success of this cause imperatively demands the enactment of a law similar to that now in force in Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, designed to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

3. That with the blessing of God we will never cease to labor and pray, until such a law is placed on the statute books of our own State.

The vote was taken, and the resolutions passed by the rising of the large audience as one. Or if there were any dissentients they were overshadowed and unseen.—Boston Traveller.

During the proceedings of Tuesday, on account of the prevailing drought, the Association suspended their business, and called on Father Hobart, an octogenerian of eighty-six, to pray for rain; which he did with much fervency. In the afternoon the clouds gathered blackness, the rain began, and continued till parched nature revived.

The Drunkard's Cognomen.—Dr. Franklin in speaking of the intemperate drinker, says, he will never or seldom, allow that he is drunk; he may "be boozy, cozy, fox'd, merry, mellow, fuddled, groatable; confoundedly cut; may see two moons; have been in the sun; is a little feverish, pretty well entered, &c., but never drunk."

An old Paris paper has the following significant remark: "The Americans and English educate their children in the fear of God and the love of money."

Report on the State of the Order.

The Committee on the State of the Order of the Sons of Temperance in Indiana, knowing that those who are not permitted to enter our Halls, seek to know what we are doing inside of our doors; and while we cannot reveal to them all our private ceremonies, we frankly admit that they should know for what we are laboring, and the great aim of ourorganization. Indeed, they have a right to demand a declaration of our principles when we aim to effect their interests as well as our own, through the agency of law. In this matter we have nothing to conceal.

After struggling for several years, aided by the dim twi-light of the dawn of temperance, we now congratulate our Order and our race, that we have at last arrived at a position that can be defined and defended. Heretofore we have spent our time and disturbed our councils in determining what is drunkenness and what is temperance. Many of us have contended that intemperance was too trifling a matter—too feeble an agent, to employ the arm of the law to suppress. Good temperance men have hitherto been willing to acknowledge that the polite and fashionable christian who drinks his glass of choice wine or brandy once or twice a month, is not a drunkard. But we rejoice that the truth is bursting upon us with a force no longer to be resisted, that he that drinks intoxicating liquors, no matter in how small a quantity is A DRUNKARD, in the proportion to the amount he drinks.

In larceny, there are degrees, but that which is denominated petit, is the more contemptible of the two. And so is the petit drunkard, or moderate drinker, the most censurable. When clothed in his right mind he deliberately violates the laws of God, and the laws of his physical system. But the abandoned drunkard only yields to his craving appetite, unchecked by the restraints of reason or moral feeling. The true position, then is, that the moderate drinker who sips his fashionable glass once a day or once a month, is the most reprehensible. He that drinks intoxicating liquors is the drunkard, and he that wholly abstains is the sober man. This is a position that can and will be maintained, and one upon which there is no advance or no retrocession. This position must be maintained as the only one calculated to rid our world of the blighting curse of intemperance.

We revert with pleasure to the MEANS by which the friends of Temperance propose to stay this desolating vice. They are no less than all the power and agents God and our country have put into our hands. In the days of our weakness and feebleness we only asked for moral suasion. When we recollect that the vice against which we war is entrenched not only behind man's depraved appetite, but sustained by laws and Legislatures, and defended by the officers of the Government, we feel almost ashamed that we have been so modest in our demands in asking for elements to fight a foe so formidably entrenched; or to eradicate a vice so desolating in its effects.

The friends of temperance by the aid of light and experience now take a position on a platform wide enough for all to stand thereon, and which is worthy of the efforts and prayers of either the christian or the philanthropist. It will not need all our time to define our position. We are in favor of using all the moral suasion that time and talents can command, backed by a deep sense of the duty God imposes upon us in occupying what he has committed to our keping.

We are in favor of bringing to our aid the arm of the law in declaring the TRAFFIC ILLEGAL—THE AGENTS CRIMINALS—AND THE ACCURSED ARTICLE CONTRABAND.

We care not by what name you call the law, so that it suppresses the traffic, confiscates the destroyer, and punishes the venders. This is our platform, and he who is not prepared for this position would do well not to profess to be a friend of Temperance; and he would do less injury to join in the ranks of our common enemy. Nor do we wish them when there to take up the hypocritical cant, that they are as good temperance men as the best, and then cry out against our ultraism. We have been frightened from our purpose long enough by such croaking owls—by such stool-pigeons of the vile doggeries. There is a fight before us, and he who is not prepared to face the enemy now in calm, will turn traitor in the day of trial.

Were all our enemies to present themselves in the habitations of tippling shops, still-houses, or other accredited agents, then indeed would our triumph be soon and certain. But so long as our churches are filled with petit drunkards—so long as our country is polluted with christian distilleries—moral tippling houses, or Evangelical defenders of alcohol in all its faces and forms, we feel that we have need of being "a peculiar people, zealous of good works," and ready to battle for the rights of fallen humanity. The wail of the widow is borne to our ears on every breeze.—The rags of the orphan are shaken at us at every street corner, and their piteous moans go up to the Throne of our Heavenly Father for redress, bedewed with bitter tears.

Shall we, under such circumstances, compromise our rights, or barter away flesh and blood for the advancement of any corrupt party—or hold our peace to secure a whited sepulchre?

Then we wish the world to know what we want, and what we will have. We acknowledge no law as ours short of the entire suppression of the sale of alcohol—nor do we acknowledge any man or woman as sober persons who use it in any quantity as a beverage. We hold no communion with those who advocate the use of it. Nor will we favor any law, no matter how stringent, that recognises licensed sales, or traffic in it in any shape as a beverage.

We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions.

C. F. CLARKSON,
A. HUDSON,
H. B. PERSHING,
P. S. SAGE,
D. ORR MANN.

Resolved, That we are in favor of a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for a beverage.

Resolved, That it is our opinion that he who drinks alcoholic liquors is a drunkard.

Resolved, That pretended friends of temperance who will not lend their efforts for the suppression of this vice, do more to injure the cause than open enemies.

Resolved, That we respectfully ask all men and women who drink intoxicating liquors occasionally, to be candid and not profess to be temperate, or the friends of the cause, while they associate with and advocate the cause of those in whose footsteps they are following.

Resolved, That we heartily approve of the independence and truly christian zeal with which a largely increased number of ministers of the gospel, and ministerial organizations, within the last year, have presented, exposed, and defended the cause of temperance in their various Congregations and fields of labor. We respectfully ask a continuance of their valuable aid.

Bro. Barry offered the following resolutions which were adopted:

Resolved, That it be recommended to all Subordinates under this jurisdiction, even if it be necessary for the accomplishment of the object, to suspend all benefits and appropriate their funds to the purchase of Tracts and Temperance publications and to district the territory under their jurisdiction, and to appoint efficient committees whose duty it shall be to see that such Tract or Temperance publication shall be placed in every family.

Resolved, That each Division be requested to solicit every minister within their bounds to bring before their respective congregations the moral obligation of all christians, philanthropists and patriots to aid in the suppression of intemperance.

Resolved, That in view of the course pursued by the members of the last Legislature, in refusing the prayer of more petitioners than was ever before presented for the prohibition of any evil; that it be recommended by the friends of Temperance generally throughout the state to hold a Convention in their respective counties and present, for the suffrages of the voters, the name of good and true Temperance men who will avow their intention to advocate and vote for a stringent law for the suppression of all laws licensing the sale of intoxicating beverages and the evils of intemperance.

The Literary Echo says: "We had the pleasure, yesterday, of witnessing the first destruction of liquor in our town under the Maine Law. We chronicled a week or two since, the seizure of fourteen bottles of "Schiedam Schnapps," at the store of Charles Vars, near Dorrville. The trial came off yesterday, and the defendant failing to appear, the Court adjudged the "schnapps" to be nothing more or less than Holland gin, and ordered it destroyed, which was done by officer Coy, in the presence of George D. Cross, Esq., and a number of others, who had assembled to see the sport, by pouring it into the river The bottles were saved and returned to the owner, they being recognized as property.

A NOBLE WOMAN.—Years ago, when most all grocers sold Liquid Fire, a firm in New York who had been doing a very large business, especially in the rum line, became bankrupt. One of the firm went home and told his wife that he was a bankrupt. "Well," says the lady, "there is one consolatfon about it—and that is, the profits of the rum business will not disgrace our children."

A GENTLEMAN.—Show me the man who can quit the brilliant society of the young to listen to the kindly voice of age—who can hold cheerful converse with one whom age has deprived of charms—show me the man who is willing to help, as if the blush of Helen mantled on her cheek—show me the man who treats unprotected maidenhood as he would the heiress, surrounded by the powerful protection of rank, riches and family—show me the man that abhors the libertine's gibe, who shuns as a blasphemer the traducer of his mother's sex—who scorns as he would a coward, the ridicular of woman's foibles, or the exposer of woman's reputation—show me the man who never forgets for an instant the delicacy, the respect that is due to woman as woman in any condition or class—and you show me a gentleman, nay, you show me more, you show me a true christian.

At the September term of the Westchester Co. Circuit Court, the Grand Jury found a true bill of indictment against Thomas Colyer, owner, and the officers of the Henry Clay, for manslaughter in the first degree.

HORRIBLE EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.—One of the most shocking and painful illustrations of the use of ardent spirits occurred in this city on Wednesday morning. Esquire Rowekamp, who is the overseer of the poor of the Ninth ward was called upon to visit an Irish family residing in an alley between Abigail and Woodward and Main and Sycamore streets. On entering the house he found the father and husband—James Jackson—on the floor apparently dead. When first discovered, he was reclining upon a trunk with his throat resting upon the sharp edge of the back of a chair. Near him. upon the floor, lay his wife insensibly drunk, and between them, the cause of this horrible scene, a whisky jug. entirely emptied of its contents. In one corner of the room lay their oldest child, a girl about five years of age, dead! and upon the bed lay an infant crying in vain for its mother. It was the cries of the infant which first attracted the attention of the neighbors to the spot. The parents had undoubtedly permitted the little girl to drink to such an excess as to cause her death. A physician was called in, who thought that life was not quite extinct in the man. Remedies were applied, but they failed to restore him. His position, it is supposed, caused his death, he being strangled by the pressure of his throat upon the chair. An emetic administered to the wretched wife and mother soon restored her to consciousness.

[Cin. Atlas, Oct. 22.

FEMALE EDTCATION.—The rapid multiplication of female schools, shows an increasing interest in the subject of female educatiod. There is still, however, room for improvement in the character as well as in the amount of instruction imparted. The influence of woman differs in kind from that of man; her tastes and habits differ also; there should be, therefore, some accommodation of her education in this respect.

The great theatre of man's influence is the arena of public life; the thunder of eloquence, the cadence of the human voice, the key to the human passions, are fitting subjects for his study. The scene of woman's power is the domestic circle; the graces of soc'al life are her peculiar weapons. Man's power is compared to the rushing, mighty storm; woman's influence softens like the distilling dew; one descends like the thunder of heaven—the other is the still small voice.

While there is much in education that is common to both sexes, there are influences more especially befitting her, who by nature is constituted the guide of youth; the heart, the means and the theatre of woman's earliest efforts, must receive a due portion of attention. The moral affections must be cultivated and the moral constitution must be strengthened. Every consideration urges the importance of such a training. Woman's feet have entered every threshold of misery; her heart has sympathized with every degree of suffering; her mind has explored every field of science, every path of literature. Education imparted to her, will not, cannot be labor misspent; her position in life is such that she must exert an influence—that influence will be good or bad, according to the training in early life.—Ex. Paper.

THE MAINE LAW.—The petitions that are still out, and that have not been sent in to Parliament, should be completed without delay, and forwarded to the member of Parliament for such town or county, as the case may be, so that the people's voice may be heard. Friends of order, and of the real prosperity of Canada, be up and doing. Now is the favorable time to make a right impression on the men who wield the political, the commercial, and in some respects the social interests of this our country. Canada must be free from the baneful influence of Rum and its concomitants, and she will be free indeed. THE ONLY TRUE PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.

JUST PUBLISHED,

T. B. Welch's Magnificent
PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.

Engraved (by permission) from Stuart's only original portrait, in the Atheneum, Boston.

THIS superb picture, Engraved under the superintendence of THOMAS SULLY, Esq., the eminent and highly gifted artist, is the only correct likeness of Washington ever published. It has been characterised as the greatest work of art ever produced in this country. As to its fidelity, we refer to the letters of the adopted son of Washington, GEORGE WASHINGTON PARK CUSTIS, who says, "it is a faithful representation of the celebrated original," and to CHIEF JUSTICE TANEY of the Supreme Court of the United States, who says, "As a work of art its excellence and beauty must strike every one who sees it: and it is no less happy in its likeness to the Father of his country. It was my good fortune to have seen him in the days of my boyhood, and his whole apearance is yet strongly impressed on my memory. The portrait you have issued appears to me to be an exact likeness, representing perfectly the expression as well as the form and features of the face." And says SENATOR CASS, it is a life-like representation of the great original. PRESIDENT FILLMORE says, "the work appears to me to have been admirably executed and eminently worthy of the patronage of the public." Says MARCHANT the eminent portrait painter, and the pupil of Stuart, "your print to my mind is more remarkable than any other I have seen, for presenting the whole individuality of the original portrait, together with the noble and dignified repose of air and manner, which all who ever saw him considered a marked characteristic of the illustrious man it commemmorates."

For the great merits of this picture we would refer every lover of Washington to the portrait itself, to be seen at the office of this paper, and to the letters of the following Artists, Statesmen, Jurists and Scholars accompanying it.

ARTISTS.—Marchant and Elliott of New York; Neagle, Rothermel, and Lambdin of Philadelphia; Chester Harding of Boston; Charles Fraser, of Charleston, S. C; and to the adopted son of Washington, Hon Geo. W. P. Custis, himself an artist. STATESMEN.—His Excellency Millard Fillmore, Major Gen. Winfield Scott, Hon. George M. Dallas, Hon. William R. King, Hon. Daniel Webster, Hon. Lynn Boyd, Hon. Lewis Cass, Hon. Wm. A. Graham, Hon. John P. Kennedy, Hon. R. C. Winthrop, LL. D. JURISTS.—Hon. Roger B. Taney, Hon. John Duer, Hon John McLean, Hon. Rufus Choate. SCHOLARS.—Charles Folsom, Esq. the well known Librarian of the Boston Atheneum, who says, "I would rather own it than any painted copy I have ever seen;" E. P. Whipple, Richard Hildreth, Hon. Edward Everett, LL. D., Jared Sparks, LL. D., Wm. H. Prescott, LL. D., Washington Irving, Ralph W. Emerson, Esq, Prof. T. C. Upham, J. T. Headley, Fitz Green Halleck, H. W. Longfellow, Wm. Gilmore Simms; and FROM EUROPE, Lord Talfourd, T. B. Macauley, Sir Archibald Alison, Lord Mayor of London, &c., &c. THE PRESS, throughout the entire Union, have with one voice proclaimed the merits of this suberb engraving.

To enable all to possess this valuable treasure, it is sold at the low price of $5 per copy.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. LIFE Insurance benefits our successors, while HEALTH Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

TO CURE A COLD, WITH HEADACHE AND SORENESS OF THE BODY, take the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, and wrap up warm, to sweat during the night.

FOR A COLD AND COUGH, take it morning, noon, and evening, according to directions on the bottle, and the difficulty will soon be removed. None will long suffer from this trouble when they find it can be so readily cured. Persons afflicted with a seated cough, which breaks them of their rest at night, will find, by taking the CHERRY PECTORAL on going to bed, they may be sure of sound, unbroken sleep, and consequently refreshing rest. Great relief from suffering, and an ultimate cure, is afforded to thousands who are thus afflicted, by this invaluable remedy.

From its agreeable effect in these cases, many find themselves unwilling to forego its use when the necessity for it has ceased.

From two eminent Physicians in

FAYETTEVILLE, Tenn., April 16th, 1851.

SIR:—We have given your Cherry Pectoral an extensive trial in our practice, and find it to surpass every other remedy we have for curing affections of the respiratory organs

DRS. DIEMER & HAMPTON.

TO SINGERS AND PUBLIC SPEAKERS this remedy is invaluable, as by its action on the throat and lungs, when taken in small quantities, it removes all hoarseness in a few hours, and wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of voice.

ASTHMA is generally much relieved, and often wholly cured by Cherry Pectoral. But there are some cases so obstinate as to yield entirely to no medicine. Cherry Pectoral will cure them, if they can be cured.

BRONCHITIS, or irritation of the throat and upper portion of the lungs, may be cured by taking Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses. The uncomfortable oppression is soon relieved.

Rev. Dr. LANSING, of Brooklyn, New York, states: "I have seen the Cherry Pectoral cure such cases of Asthma and Bronchitis as leads me to beleive it can rarely fail to cure those diseases."

FOR CROUP. Give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

WHOOPING COUGH may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral

THE INFLUENZA is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences, while their neighbors, without the Cherry Pectoral, were suffering from the disease.

Salem, Ohio, June 11th, 1851.

Doct. J. C. Ayer:—I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your Cherry Pectoral in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough, by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best physicians freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it, than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine, he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully, J. D. SINCLAIR,
Deputy Postmaster.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the Cherry Pectoral, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and coughs, and pulmonary diseases. P. CLEVELAND, M. D.

Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

DR. VALENTINE MOTT, the widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of 'Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,' which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been affected by Cherry Pectoral in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it.

POETRY.

From the Keowee Courier.

Night amid the Mountains.

Air—"Morn amid the Mountains."

Night amid the Mountains,
Comes with gentle grace;
Clasping rills and fountains,
In a soft embrace—
Soft and sweet.

From the crag-top winding
Slowly to its base,
In each crevice finding
Still a resting place,
Rest for Night.

Guard, the Moon is keeping,
With her silver bow,
While sweet Night is sleeping,
In the vale below,
Earth's sad vale.

Stars in golden armor,
Follow their lov'd queen,
Striving each to charm her,
With his glittering sheen,
Win with gold.

Night from 'mid the mountains,
Glideth like a dream,
And the gushing fountains
Catch the morn's first beam,
Passed away.

Mary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Methodist Protestant.

The Maine Liquor Law.

This law has a very appropriate name. The time is coming, or we are greatly deceived, when it will indeed be the main law—for the promotion of national and domestic good.

If ever there was a time when the advocates of sobriety should arouse themselves to action it is now. The Maine law is beginning to be talked about all over these states. In London Rev. Albert Barnes, of Philadelphia, recently repreached his celebrated sermon on this subject, and report tells us that that great city is all on fire on the importance of legal prohibition of the ruinous traffic in alcoholic drinks.

The friends of the cause may expect great opposition. This should not discourage them, but prepare them for a vigorous maintainance of their principles. The secular press will not be easily brought over to its advocacy. The revenue derived from the advertisements of those engaged in the traffic is too large to be easily surrendered. Moderate drinkers will oppose its enactment for its advocacy is a strong reproof to their own cherished habits, and an admission that they are pursuing a dangerous course. Dealers of all sorts will oppose it, and make large appropriations to carry on a war against it. Politicians will resist it, for it will take from many of them one of the strongest implements heretofore wielded for their personal elevation to office. Others, true friends of the cause of Reform, will oppose it, because they have not carefully examined its provisions or the specious and flimsy character of the objections brought against it.

"It is a very good thing to persuade men to be temperate and quit drinking," one will say, "but in this matter you are really going too far!" This is a very old objection. It has been urged at every advance of the temperance cause from the first. But has not intemperance gone too far? Has not State sanction to the license system gone too far? Has not the tide of degradation, misery, beggary, crime—gone too far? And must we not go far enough to interrupt this onward advance of terrible evil, and turn back this flow of sorrow and death? Must we not place ourselves in advance and confront the enemy, and say, "thus far thou shalt go and no farther?"

"But you should make moral suasion your strong defence?" So we expect to do. But there are thousands of men in community whose standard of morals is the civil law, and who, so long as they pursue what the law regards as a legitimate business, care for nothing farther. What power can you exert over such men by moral suasion? Have they not paid into the state treasury the price of blood? And, if moral suasion will not induce a man to do right, shall he be permitted to poison the whole atmosphere, and spread abroad desolation and moral ruin without molestation Are we to be told we go too far when we demand of our legislators a prohibition against an evil which involves the dearest interests, national, social and religious—public and private—of the whole community?

"But why legislate at all on the subject?" Sure enough. Perhaps if legislation had never touched the subject, counter legislation had never been needed. The force of public opinion, it may be, would have made moral suasion all that was necessary. But there has been legislation on the subject. The State has become a partner to the trade. She gives the sanction of her seal to every groggery in the city and in all the counties. She screens the miserable trafficer from the odium that properly attaches to his calling, and does all in her power to make the business a respectable calling. Let her undo her wrong doing. This cannot be done simply by a rescinding of the license laws. She has gone too far, and nothing short of her express condemnation and prohibition will restore to society a moiety of the good of which the public have been deprived by her indiscreet legislation.

"But the license laws are intended to restrain the vice." Restrain it!—have they restrained it? No matter what they were intended for, wise legislation, with the experience of years before it, asks what do these laws effect? In Cecil county, last year, of 53 arrests for vagrancy 48 were intemperate persons. In Dorchester county, of 56 cases 37 were inebriates; in Montgomery, of 60 cases 59 were drunkards. This is a fair specimen of what is transpiring all over the state under the present system of restraint. A miserable restraint, this truly. It multiplies offences, and never did lessen them.

"But men will sell any how!" Yes, and men will gamble, any how—and lie, any how, and commit adultery, any how.—But because men will violate wholesome laws shall we enact no more wholesome laws? Wholesome laws restrain by punishment and protection. This protection is what we want. Protection to our persons—to the persons of our families and to our property. The present system endangers all these, and annually converts good citizens into miserable outlaws. Stop the liquor traffic, and you place beyond the reach of men who will sell any how, the ability to supply themselves with the fuel to keep alive the fires of destruction within them.

"But you restrain civil liberty." What kind of civil liberty? Rather, a most uncivil liberty of a money loving trafficer to poison the youth of his neighborhood—to turn kind husbands into cruel tyrants—affectionate fathers into madmen and murderers—to take bread from the orphan's mouth—to paralyze the arm of honest industry, or so fire the brain that wields it that it becomes the instrument of cruelty and death to those it is bound to protect and defend! Is not this the rumseller's liberty? Does he not do all this? Are our charges false—our picture over drawn? And must we be told that in claiming the protection of law against such an evil we restrain the civil liberty of the rum seller. Pity it had not been restrained years ago.

The social compact demands the surrender of private right for the public good.—Every man gives up something for others. Does the public good demand that this traffic should go on. But no man will affirm that the public good is benefitted here in Baltimore by the existence of a dram shop for every ten families in our midst. If, then, it does no public good, but immense public injury, in the name of all civilization and good government why not have it suppressed by prohibitory law, to the extent that prohibitory law will suppress it. Our state and municipal authorities suppress nuisances on all hands, and never think of asking about a man's private right to perpetuate an annoyance to the community in which he lives; but this greatest of all nuisances—this monster evil—this promoter of riots and murders in our midst, must not be prohibited, lest we infringe the rumseller's private right to inflict this unspeakable wrong upon society in all its interests. Obscene books are seized and their retailers punished. Model artists are put down by law. Unwholesome meat must not appear on the shambles for public sale. Why, then, allow unwholesome drink? If we invade no legitimate right of the butcher, how can it be shown that we would in the case of the rumseller? Which is most unwholesome in its effects upon man?—putrid meat, or this "liquid fire?" To state such a question is to answer it beyond denial.

"But you injure trade." What kind of trade? A trade in tears and blood! A traffic in human woes. A trade that looks not to the glory of God or the happiness of man, but is at war with both. A trade that injures all other trades—that paralyzes the arm of the mechanic—that dims the clearness of professional intellect—that produces idleness among thousands of otherwise industrious laborers in the great human hive. A trade that adds nothing to the common stock of usefulness, but costs more to society and the nation than all others combined. And we must not touch this trade, or reflect in the least upon the usefulness of its honest tradesmen?

"But the license system is a source of revenue." It is just no such thing. It is the cancer that is eating out the revenue from legitimate taxation. The revenue from licenses to sell liquor in a single county of this state, as shown by the records, last year was about $700. In the same county the cost for the support of pauperism, and the prosecution of criminal cases, occasioned by intemperance, was $9,552: 61. Now, if a business pay to the state $700, and abstract from the public treasury 9,000, how much is the state profited by the revenue? And who is to pay this enormous deficiency? Honest men, poor men,—men who are already suffering from over taxation? Let no man in his senses advocate the state sanction to this business on the ground that it is a source of revenue to the state.

The Two Dozen Chickens.

A MISSISSIPPI ANECDOTE.

When the Temperance organization, known as the "Sons," was first introduced into the State of Mississippi, considerable astonishment and curiosity was every where felt, and in some parts of the State no small degree of alarm was manifested.

One of the first Divisions in the State was organized at B——, in one of the Backwoods counties, known generally as the "Free State," a name applied to it, not because its citizens disregarded all law, but because there were some legislative enactments which they considered not only onerous, but anti-republican. They obstinately refused to do military duty; "musters" they declared were only gotten up for officers to show large; and as to road working, that they could not stand—it was "too digging"—it was just paving the way for rich folks to get through the world easy, and, therefore, viewing the whole matter as incompatible with the genius of our free institutions, they chose to follow the illustrious example laid before them by the State and repudiate; hence the name "Free State." But to the story. Speculation was rife among the country people as to the ends aimed at by this "new fangled denomination," as it was usually termed. Some of the sovereigns who happened in town, had seen them out in full uniform, attending the funeral of one of the members. Diligent enquiries were made by all the country folks who came in to dispose of their "truck," about their movements, and dark insinuations were made by the waggish clerks and tradesmen about the new "Order."

The prevailing opinion seemed to be that the association was made up of Free Masons and Odd Fellows, who had been expelled from their respective societies for treasonable designs upon the "short haired Nation," or, in plain English, they had been expelled for wishing to free niggers, and had re-united to carry out their dark designs under a new name.

To disabuse the public mind of these erroneous impressions, and set the unenlightened all right in relation to the objects contemplated by the Sons, your correspondent was solicited to make a special appointment for the dark east corner of the county to defend the Order from the slanderous insinuations uttered in jest—but which had been received and fully accredited by many. Accordingly, notice was given and widely circulated, that on the fourth Saturday in the month, at Granberry's Meeting House, a speech would be made on the subject of Temperance, and a full history given of the rise and progress and designs of the Sons.

The fourth Saturday in the month at length came as was expected. Long before the hour of speaking arrived, the meeting house was crowded to suffocation, and the grove around the house thronged with an anxious multitude of men and women. Mixing with the crowd before the hour for speaking came, I could not fail to learn that the prevailing feeling was that of bitter hostility to the "Denomination," and many hard things was said of those who had "jined" at the Court House.—Prejudice, however, gave way rapidly, as the mystery of the Order was explained, and the objects contemplated by it stated. Many who had most bitterly denounced the whole affair as a "Yankee trick to catch dimes," or something worse, allowed their antipathies to give way before the light of truth, and at the close of the speech quite a number came forward and gave their names for membership. As I descended from the stand, I saw a little peaked faced woman, with a nose almost sharp enough to split a brier, approach a short-legged, punchy, red-faced, radish-nose man, and lay her hand upon his shoulder, and looking him full in the face, said with a marked emphasis on every word, "Allen you've got to jine them things!"—Allen drew back, shrugged his shoulders, and shook his head. "I tell you, Allen, you've got to jine them things!" she repeated, in a firmer, louder tone. "I aint got no money," said Allen. "I don't care for that," said she, "I've got the chickens! and the stranger says it costs jist two dollars to jine, and then five cents a week afterwards: and I'll give you two dozen chickens to git you in, and a chicken a week to keep you thar." Allen gave in, and I thought him decidedly the most chicken-hearted, hen-pecked looking mortal I had ever beheld. "Mister," said he, "my name's Allen Baker; jist put my name down on your paper, and I'll come to town next Sat'day week and jine." He did "come to town next Sat'day week and jine." He is still a faithful member of the "New Denomination," and has since become a good member of our Old Denomination, called the Methodist. Certainly the best sale his wife ever made of two dozen chickens.—Advocate.

Democracy of Science.

BY JOSIAH HOLBROOK.

A mistake is made in schools—a great mistake, very great—in all schools. It occasions the loss of time, money, mind, morals, and leads directly and indirectly to the destruction of millions of property, to lawlessness, violence, rowdyism, house-burning, "Michigan conspiracies," and crimes in character and form numberless and nameless.

The mistake is in setting aside the "GREAT BOOK OF GOD"—rather "TWO BOOKS"—for an innumerable multitude of little books of men. Without referring to the impiety, practical infidelity, involved in this mistake, every one must recognise in it violence done to common sense and to the laws of mind, the highest, noblest principles of the human soul. From the very constitution of mind it hungers after knowledge with as much eagerness, and receives it with as much avidity, as the stomach craves and receives food. An attempt to feed it with the "arbitrary signs" of knowledge in place of knowledge itself is like giving husks instead of corn; the flourish of plates instead of roast beef, or anything eatable. The outrage on common sense and the laws of mind is the more remarkable from the fact that words, the signs of ideas, after all, are acquired through their connection with the ideas themselves. Give the ideas, and words to express them will come of course. They will be created for the occasion, if not furnished otherwise. Hence, the time spent in the mere learning of words, in memorizing, is worse than wasted, as the object aimed at is defeated by forcing the attention of the pupils from the legitimate channels leading to that object.

The waste of time, however, and of money on an innumerable multitude of school-books, constantly changed for the accommodation of publishers, is not the worst evil of this mistake—shutting out from schools and from instruction the Book of Creation. Stinting and demoralizing the mind, crushing the noblest operations of the soul, are the sad evils of this mistake. Proofs of the wide-spread devastation of mind, of appalling havoc of the noblest work of God, are furnished, not merely by "Michigan conspiracies," house-burning, rowdyism, and lawless outbreaks of daily occurrence in almost every direction, now giving our country such an unenviable notoriety, but in the dearth of true moral grandeur, and the prevalence of low, short-sighted, exclusive selfishness—of mere money-making, followed by money-squandering on passing into the hands of heirs.

Some will doubtless think that too much evil is attributed to this one mistake. Before becoming settled in this opinion, those entertaining it are invited to examine the subject carefully, and especially to test it by experiment. Parents may try the experiment at "Winter Evening Firesides" during the coming six months. If it should be found that works of Nature and Art, spread upon the domestic board for the younger members of families to examine, label, classify, arrange in boxes and portfolios, should be more attractive than any street sports, many boys now instructed and led into the avenues of vice would be iniated into the wonders of science; young minds now demoralized, corrupted, and prepared for thefts, house-burning, and a large circle of crime, thoroughly, because practically taught at "Street Schools," would be refined, enobled, and directed in the paths of respectability and usefulness. Once let families be recognised as schools, the "Older Volume of God" as the book of instruction, and parents as teachers of Divine appointment, and no one can doubt important results in the prevention of vice by the promotion of virtue.

Laws of Health

Children should be tuught to use the left hand as well as the right.

Coarse bread is much better for children than fine.

Children should sleep in separate beds, and should not wear night-caps.

Children under seven years should not be confined over six or seven hours in the house, and that time should be broken by frequent recesses.

Children and young people must be made to hold their heads up and their shoulders back while sitting, standing, or walking. The best beds for children are of hair, or, in winter, of hair and cotton.

Young persons should walk at least two hours a day in the open air.

Young ladies should be prevented from bandaging the chest. We have known three cases of insanity terminating in death, which began in this practice.

Every person, great and small, should wash all over in cold water every morning.

The more clothing we wear, other things being equal, the less food we need.

From one to one pound and a half of solid food is sufficient for a person in the ordinary vocations of business. Persons in sedentary employments should drop one-third of their food, and they will escape dyspepsia.

Young people and others cannot study much by lamplight with impunity.

The best remedy for eyes weakened by night use, is a fine stream of cold water frequently applied to them.

What the Law will do.

The Maine law, when fully enforced, will reduce pauperism to such an extent, that private charity will be sufficient for the wants of the virtuous poor. It will empty, or nearly so, our jails and state prisons. It will feed the hungry, clothe the naked, furnish poor children with books and keep them in school. It will fill our churches, and make effectual the Gospel in the salvation of multitudes now out of its reach. It will prepare multitudes for the reception of Bibles and Tracts, and Missionary effort; and do more for the salvation of seamen than all we have ever yet been able to do. In short, we can hardly estimate its happy results. Now, we ask what good results from the liquor traffic?

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 17, 1852.

Pre-Pay your Letters.

We hope our friends will remember, that all communications to the Chart must be pre-paid in order to entitle them to any consideration whatever. We have not the means, if we had the inclination, to foot such charges as would follow the adoption of a different rule. It is not to be expected that we should be more inclined to favor other men's productions, than they are themselves; and if they do not think enough of them to pay the postage, we feel entitled to conclude that they are not worth the postage and treat them accordingly. But we would not have it understood, on the other hand, that we shall feel under obligations to publish whatever may be sent to us post-paid. We make no such promise. All well written short communications, however, sent to us post paid, will at least be entitled to our respectful consideration—and shall receive it.

☞ We are credibly informed that one of the Hotels of our city, has in close relationship with it, an establishment for the retail of intoxicating liquors, where in violation of all law, human and divine, men are transformed into brutes. But you will ask why we mention one in connection with a Hotel. Well, we will inform you. It is because the keeper of this Hotel has declared, that he "did not care what the people of the city thought of it, or how much it annoyed them, he would still continue it; for he got his money from the travelling public and not from the citizens of Indianapolis." Now, the spirit of this remark entitles his Grocery to our special attention, and may serve as an apology for our neglecting others. It may be that the travelling public when informed of the character of this under-ground rail-road to ruin, will let him know that a man who cares nothing for the feelings and well being of his neighbors, is unworthy of their patronage, especially when his roof covers from the light of day scenes of blood worthy only of the dark ages. Look out for breakers!

☞ We often hear good men complain of the slow progress of the Temperance Reform, and speak despondingly of its ultimate success. But a glance at the history of the movement must, we think, be sufficient to satisfy any reasonable person, that such complaints are entirely unwarranted by the facts. It is not true that our movement has been a tardy one, giving but small ground to hope for its accomplishing the great object for which it was begun. Indeed, we are acquainted with no popular reform that has been carried forward so rapidly and steadily towards its accomplishment as this; and never have its enemies had so much cause to fear, or its friends so much cause to hope its complete triumph as at this moment.

But a little more than a quarter of a century has elapsed since the first move in behalf of the unfortunate victims of intemperance in this country was made. At that time the vice had completely overcome all opposition and was enthroned in the heart of society, over which, on all occasions, it exercised its unhallowed sway. But its right to rule was questioned, and it shrunk from enquiry as Satan from the spear of Ithuriel, and like Satan stood exposed to view in its native hideousness. Since then, it has been gradually receding before the advancing spirit of the age, and it now requires no prophetic ken to foretell its utter annihilation. Already it skulks in cellars and behind screens, erecting its altars in the dark places of the earth which "are full of the habitations of cruelty." There, with a front bold towards God, but quailing and trembling at the approach of man, some one whose feelings have long been locked up in the ice of selfishness may still minister for filthy lucre at its unholy shrine. But the spirit of reform will follow it even there, and drag its ruinous consequences to the light.—There is no place on the green earth where the infernal inflictions of intemperance will be tolerated much longer. Its friends may erect screens, hang curtains, and dig cellars, but all their pains are of no avail to hide it. The torch of Reform will shine through screens and curtains and peer into cellars; investigation will be had, and its fountains of impurity and death will be dried up. There are more temperance men to-day, whose hearts are set upon this great work, than there were yesterday, or on any previous day; they are more thoroughly united than ever before; and, inspired by a generous confidence in the goodness of their cause, and the necessity of their success to the permanency of our free institutions, they are more fully determined to succeed than ever.

To such, then, as may be disposed to murmur, or feel like despairing of our ultimate victory over the wrongs inflicted by selfishness upon the world, through the instrumentality of intoxicating liquors, we say, "cheer up!" Look back and behold what has already been accomplished; around you, and see the mighty host which marches under the temperance banner; and forward at the receding forces of the foe, and then press onward to victory—victory more glorious than ever crowned the arms of Alexander or Napoleon.

Masonic Celebration at Danville.

The Masonic Fraternity of Danville, in Hendricks county, celebrated the Centennial Anniversary of the initiation of General Washington into their Order, on the 4th inst. The weather was exceedingly unpleasant—so much so, indeed, as to prevent great numbers from attending the Celebration. Still, however, a goodly number turned out to do honor to the memory of the Father of his Country, who though dead yet liveth in his great example and in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen.

The celebration was held in the Presbyterian meeting-house, which was kindly thrown open to the Order for that purpose. The exercises were opened with singing by the Choir, of a piece adapted to the occasion. The worthy Pastor of the Church then offered a prayer in which he invoked the Divine blessing upon the assembly, the Order and the object for which they were convened. An Oration was then delivered, and after receiving the benediction a procession was formed and marched to the Masonic Hall, where an excellent supper was prepared for all by the ladies. Indeed, we have seldom if ever seen a table more bountifully laden with the good things of the land, and never have we witnessed more exquisite skill and taste than was manifested in the manner in which it was served up. Never has it been our good fortune to assemble round the festive board where more unmistakable indications of abundance, and of that method which alone gives to abundance its value in culinary affairs, was displayed. Every thing was there that a reasonable man could desire, prepared in the best style, and in the right place too. But there was no wine nor strong drink there. The good brethren have eschewed the use of these useless and ruinous articles, once so common; and on this occasion you would have thought you were among a people pledged to abstain, for no evidence was there to indicate the partiality of a single one of the congregation for those beverages. Free-Masonry was honored that day, in the deportment of her votaries. We hope to see the day when that Order will unite with the Sons of Temperance and others for the total suppression of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, in every form.

After supper, a large part of the crowd adjourned to the Lodge Room, and spent the evening in singing some choice songs, and in social conversation. We have seldom witnessed a more hearty mingling of kindred spirits. The old and the young—down even to childhood—were all joyous together; and, come what may hereafter, for them that was an hour to be remembered only with pleasure. Taken in connection with the celebration, there was, however, much in it all to awaken reflections of a solemn and sombre character. A hundred years before, WASHINGTON, like the young, was young, hopeful and joyous. Now, he with all his then associates were in the grave. A hundred years more and not one of all that gay throng will live to speak of it as a thing of memory. Such is life.

The Division of the Sons of Temperance at Danville, is not so prosperous now, as it has been heretofore; but the Brethren intend to revive its latent energies again, now that the election is over, and take the field for the eternal principles of their Order in earnest. The Daughters are doing well and prospering finely.—They meet in the Masonic Hall, which is creditable to the liberality of that Fraternity; and shows that they are disposed to promote the cause of Temperance.

At Plainfield the Division, as we understood, is in a most flourishing condition, and steadily going forward with the good work of Reform. Let all unite to urge the good cause forward, and we must succeed soon in ridding our state of the evils incident to the use of intoxicating liquors.

THE TEMPLAR'S MAGAZINE.—This excellent Magazine for the month of November has just been received; and brings as usual much "good reading" upon its pages. The articles—"The lost and found;" "The good angels;" "Enough to live for," and others are well written, and can not fail to do good. Its selected articles are in good taste, especially one from the pen of Mrs. Stowe, the world-renowned authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." In this number there is also a continuation of the "Archives of the Order." The Magazine will doubtless receive, as it deserves, the patronage of Templars, and all other friends of temperance that desire a periodical of the kind.

THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE MAGAZINE: This beautiful Magazine is published by P. L. Sherlock, New York, at $2 per annum, with deductions to clubs, increasing with the number of the club. The November No. contains an engravəd portrait of the Hon. E. L. Snow, accompanied by a short sketch of his life. Also the continuation of "The Adopted Daughter" by Miss Alice Carey, whose name is favorably known wherever the English language is spoken, as the author of "Clovernook," "Lyra," &c., and a number of other well written articles both in prose and verse.—We commend the Magazine to the kind patronage of the friends of Temperance literature, and the cause of Reform.

☞ It will be seen from the following, which we clip from the Journal, that our old friend, Dr. B. T. KAVANAUGH, is still engaged in his favorite pursuits. We take pleasure in giving this notice to the readers of the Chart, many of whom know, admire and love him as the former Editor of the Family Visitor, and Grand Lecturer of this State:

The Centennial Anniversary of the initiation of George Washington, into the order of Masonary, was celebrated at St. Louis, on the 4th inst. The address was delivered by Dr. B. T. Kavanaugh, P. G. M. of the G. L. of Wisconsin, a resident of this city several years ago, and well known over this State, a copy of which is before us. It contains many facts in relation to Washington's connection with Masonry, not much known to the general reader.

THE LIQUOR BUSINESS.—The traffic in ardent spirits is said to be almost universally attended with such fraud as would disgrace and destroy the followers of any other calling. Gin is improved by the use of sweet oil and vitriol, which give it a 'bead.' Irish and Scotch whiskey are made of American by the introduction of a little creosote, to give it the smoky twang. Pale and dark brandies are made of whiskey by the introduction of a little more or a little less of the coloring matter, &c. &c. We read lately in the papers that one of the delegates of the Cold Water Alliance, recently assembled in Utica, New York, in the course of a narrative of his experience, informed the delegates that he was once engaged in the distilling business, and had frequently made and placed on sale, good brandy, rum, gin and wine, from whiskey, in the short space of four hours, and could at any time make sparkling brandy from whiskey, which would deceive the palate of the upper ten.

[Phil. Telegraph.

☞ We clip the following from the Organ, edited by Gen. S. F. Carey. It speaks out just right on the subject of allowing elections to be controlled by the bottle and its friends. We hope our people will read it, and think well of the remedy indicated.

Drunkenness at Elections.

Never since we have been a voter have we witnessed as much beastly intoxication as at the late Presidential elestion. Every sober-minded, reflecting friend of his country, must have been impressed with the necessity of doing something to save his country from the blighting curse of intemperance. At the precinct at which we voted, there were about 350 votes cast, and the drunkenness, profanity, obscenity and fighting would have disgraced a kennel of dogs. The election was held at a grog-shop, and while there were many respectable men of both parties, who conducted themselves like men and citizens of a Christian country, the mass were a seething, boiling mass of corruption, entirely incapable of conducting themselves as gentlemen. Yet these drunken vagabonds are sovreigns, and hold the destiny of this great republic in their hands. We heard men of all parties say, as they witnessed the disgraceful spectacle, that henceforward and forever they would know no party in elections until the liquor shops were closed up. "We must have the Maine Law, or we are ruined," was the involuntary exclamation of several, and many sighed and exhibited feelings that their lips did not utter. Why must decent men be compelled to enter one of these vile dens of iniquity to deposit his ballot? Could not the men who designate the place of election, select a more respectable and suitable spot for freemen to assemble, than a filthy grog-shop? We regard it as an unpardonable outrage, to subject decent men to the necessity of snuffing the fumes and listening to the profane babblings of a bar-room.

Asylum for Inebriates.

HORACE MANN, in writing an article in favor of the Maine Law, thus speaks of the philanthropic plan of erecting an Asylum for the treatment of Inebriates:

"Some philanthropists,—among whom was that excellent man, Doctor Woodward, late superintendent of the Worcester Hospital, who wrote a series of essays on the subject, for the press,—have proposed the erection of a Hospital for Inebriates, like a hospital for the insane, where the victims of intemperance may be sequestered from the walks of men, until the fire which alcohol has kindled in their bodies can be quenched. While honoring the benevolence of this suggestion, I have never seen reason to adopt it. Why incur vast expenditure for machinery to inject disease into the body politic, and then repeat the expenditure to apply a remedy? Instead of the unnatural process of turning sober men into drunkards, at an immense outlay of human happiness and wealth, and then attempting to turn the drunkards back again into sober men, by another outlay, why not keep the sober men sober in the first instance, and thus save all cost of machinery, partial losses in all cases, and total loss in many? I would not contract a consumption, even if an experimenter could prescribe a certain, instead of his uncertain nostrums for my cure. I would not melt a purse of gold and mingle it with dross, even on the mint-master's assurance that he would refine it and coin it for circulation again. And for better reasons than these, I would not consent to forfeit years of happiness, and incur loathsome degradation and consuming pain, even though God himself would assure me by one miracle that he would restore me by another.

"My friends, the only true and proper Asylum for Inebriates has been constructed. It was constructed in the year 1850, in the State of Maine. Neal Dow was the builder,—a nobler architect than Sir Christopher Wren, or those who poised the dome of St. Peter's in the upper air. It is the grandest asylum ever erected or conceived; for its base embraces the whole territorial arena of the State; its walls are co-extensive with the boundaries of the State, and it has a dome no less lofty and resplendent than the arch of heaven above. Wherever the means of inebriation are excluded, there is the true Asylum for Inebriates. Massachusetts and Rhode Island have spread the protecting arches of this roof over their soil. The youthful territory of Minnesota has already done the same,—like a young man resolved to be strong and great, and therefore taking the early vow that promises wisdom and length of days. I trust that the 'Excelsior' state of New York is about to follow their example, and to become an empire state in morals as well as in power; and then, from the ocean to the great lakes, water and not fire shall be the nourisher of man, and joy and not wo the companion of his household."

Hon. Edward Everett has been appointed Secretary of State. The post occupied by the lamented Webster.

Items of News.

ENGLAND.—The Steamer AFRICA, from Liverpool, on the afternoon of the 23rd October, brings no important political intelligence from England. Great preparations were being made for the celebration of the funeral of the Duke of Wellington, which is to take place at St. Paul's. All the windows fronting the street along which the pageant is to pass had already been hired at enormous rates.

The Search for Sir JOHN FRANKLIN is still prosecuted, but without any further indications of ultimate success.

Admiral Moseby reports Pitcairn's Island to be rapidly advancing in civilization and prosperity. The Islanders have reason to be grateful for the uplifting and beneficent influences of Christianity.

IRELAND.—The news from Ireland is unimportant. An occasional murder of some agent, by the oppressed populace takesplace, and will be apt to continue as long as oppression continues. The last murder reported is that of W. R. Manifold, land agent. He was shot through the head with thirty-four slugs from a blunderbuss.

FRANCE.—It is now certain that Louis Napoleon is to be crowned Emperor; but whether the ceremony of his coronation will come off in December or May next, is not yet determined. His title is to be "Emperor of the French, King of Algeria, and Protector of the Holy Place."—The last is supposed to be assumed to give him a pretext for meddling in the affairs of the East. A large number of arrests have been made, in connection with "the Gass pipe plot" of Marsailles.

SPAIN.—There is little news of importance from Spain, except that which relates to Cuba. The Spanish Government is making every arrangement to strengthen the defences of that Island. Gen. Olliquip has been ordered to Puerto Principe, and large reinforcements from all parts of Spain are on their way to Cuba.

ROME.—A number of the first citizens of Velletri have been arrested at the instance of the Pope, on the charge of propagating anti-papal doctrines among the soldiers.

It is said that the mission of Sir H. Bulwer to Rome, which was for the purpose of obtaining a disclaimer from the Pope, of the pretensions of the Irish Clergy in political matters, has proved an entire failure.

The New York Express assures us that the election in that city presented a most disgraceful scene of drunkenness, vulgarity and rowdyism. Every precinct was so infested with the infatuated victims of intemperance, that it was hardly safe to attend the polls. Another argument for "te-totalism."

The Presidential election has resulted in the success of the Democratic party by an overwhelming majority. So, Gen. PIERCE becomes our President for the next four years, from March 4th, 1853.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—We learn from the Plymouth Banner that a Mrs. Fall, of Marshall county, was accidentally shot through the body by her son, on the 3rd inst., and died in about an hour afterwards. It resulted from the son's pressing a cap, which was too small, upon the tube of the gun. What makes the accident more melancholy than otherwise it would be, is the fact that her husband has been for sometime past, and still is, an inmate of our Lunatic Asylum, with but little prospect of his recovery. The children are, therefore, left without either father or mother to care for them. May He who tempereth the wind to the shorn lamb, have them in his keeping.

The Boston Chronicle, rum organ, says the increase of crime in a large city is indispensable to its growth. It may be in Boston, where the liquor interest is looked on as paramount to all others. There is but one Boston and rum is its profit.

IN BAD ODOR.—A gentleman in Boston published extensively a lecture in opposition to the "liquor law" in that city. After every effort, only ten were present to hear him, and the lecture was postponed until a more convenient season.—Organ of Reform.

Stray Thoughts.

BY REP. PHILLIPS.

"All that's bright must fade,
The brightest still the fleetest;
All that's bright was made,
But to be lost when sweetest."—MOORE.

The heart is a curious sepulcre of emotions; all that's bright or gloomy in our nature have their birth place there. Like the face of the Heavens, the inmost chambers of the heart, have their hours of sunshine and of gloom. Who is it that has not, when the tide of our heart's overflow with joyous emotions, cherished some hope; that, in the dim future, we expected would be fraught with all the rarity, that the most fruitful imagination could possibly devise, or fancy create? It is, but too often, that we risk the future happiness of our being, upon some hope, which even if gained, will perhaps, have two thorns to every rose. There is one, great and almost universal propensity of human nature; that is, we take no note of time, unless the heart is interested, and then, o'er the passing pleasure of a day, we cast the mantle of eternity.

Alas we forget, whilst reclining amongst such sunny scenes as those our heart depicts, that such a thing as stern reality stalks around ready to blight with its icy finger all of fancies mad creations.

Oh, when I look around me and see how unfitted many are for the stern realities of life; those who from infancy to man and womanhood have lived within the bounds of fancy's empire; whose every wish has been gratified, whose every dream of this world's beauty and sweetness, has been all their hearts could wish, whose every hope has bloomed and blossomed like the rose, it chills the current of my heart; for but too well do I know that the empire of beauty must be invaded, by stern reality, and its fickle fabric scattered to the four winds of Heaven. Is it not enough to chill the current of any one's heart, to see the fondly cherished dreams, of their fellow-brothers crushed; to see them start back, from the world; (that world, which in their moments of revelry they had clothed with beauty's never fading robes,) as though some visitor from the land of spirits stood before them? Alas they forget; they never knew, that,

"All that's bright must fade,
The brightest still the fleetest;"

Oh, if in my earlier hours I had had some friend to ask me what he could do to render me most happy, I would have said—with my present experience—teach me so to live that I may meet with unflinching firmness the stern realities of life, teach me not to trust myself with too much confidence upon the bosom of life's troubled ocean, for even when not a ripple glides o'er its glass-like surface to disturb its serenity, or mar its beauty, in the distance, the storm is coming on; before which my frail life bark would be driven, with mad resistless fury, and to destruction, if I had no harbor in which to ride with safety.

Look around you, brother traveler upon our uncertain sea; look upon nature, look upon the art of man, look upon the wreck of your own fondly cherished hopes, turn yet again and look; eternity is before you, that dread, dark unknown, from which the mind of man ever starts with a feeling of terror, look again, and you will see within upon the front of each and all, that

"All that's bright was made,
But to be lost when sweetest."

Parricide caused by Rum.

Mrs. Eliza Blonk, lately residing at No. 147 Varick street, died at an early hour on Wednesday morning of last week at the Bellevue Hospital, in consequence of violence inflicted upon her on the 13th ult., by her son Samuel Blonk. Coroner Ives held an inquest upon the body, and a verdict was given against the son, who, however, has escaped. Rum is again concerned in this affair.—N. Y. Organ.

And still stalks intemperance through the land, untrammeled, and scarcely unheeded. Rumsellers still continue to deal out mad'ning liquid which causes such crimes; and professed friends of Temperance sanction the cursed traffic by their want of interest in behalf of the good cause, or their attachment to party. Yes, Rum, the great curse of mankind, roams over the land, carrying ruin and misery in its train, committing hourly the most hellish deeds, but still we stand, while the work of destruction goes on. Friends of humanity, shall this state of things longer continue? Shall we not arouse from the torpid state which has so long enveloped us, and put an end to such scenes as are every day enacted in the rum-holes that swarm our country?

Shall we not strive to stay this stream of pollution in its mad career, and turn in its course the pure, healthful stream of temperance, that carries with it peace and joy to all? then shall we no longer be called upon to record scenes so revolting as the above.—Michigan Organ.

Should any among our community have the ill luck to contract a cold, or the prevalent influenza, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is recommended to such as an efficient agreeable medicine—sure to relieve them.

Work to be Done.

Too much care and sacrifice cannot be made to secure the election of law men to the legislature. Go with, and use party organizations just as far as you can. Bolt only when you must for conscience' sake. The great work, however, to be done, is to educate the masses. Just tell them what the law is, and what it has done, and will do, and you make them converts at once. This must be done by agitation—just such agitation as is now going on all over the state. Ministers are preaching and praying on the subject. Laymen and women are using personal influence and effort for it. Lectures on the principles of the law are being delivered extensively. The state committee are making a systematic effort to put a copy of the law and other important matter, illustrating its principles and open operations in to every family in the state. We purpose also, as soon as the election is over, to go into one of the most thorough and systematic operations for canvassing the state with petitions for signatures for a prohibitory law. Not a man or person in the state must be neglected.—Ask every one. And this work, and work it will be, must be done heartily; and why not? We have every thing to stimulate us. Our cause is based on right. God and his ministers and children are interested in the success of the cause. And succeed it must and shall. Be of good cheer. Press on in the conflict, and soon the sower and reaper will rejoice together.—Reformer.

☞ The Editor of the Morristown Jerseyman has received a letter from his son, in San Francisco, of which the following is an extract:

The "Celestials," although quiet toward their Yankee neighbors, are continually in difficulty among themselves, and to set our swarthy friends right, gives our Justice much trouble. There are about 20,000 of these forlorn specimens of humanity on our borders, of whom not more than 50 are females! There has been for a few years past a Chinaman of distinction living here, who seems to look after his countromen, and rules them pretty much after the Oriental style; lately he had opposition, and our new Mandarin drew off many of Ahi's flock. This excited the ire of Mr. Ahi, who immediately issued a proclamation offering $300 for the body of Sin Chu, dead or alive. Sin Chu believing his "tail" to be in danger, with all speed made known his grievance to the Recorder, who ordered Ahi to appear before him. Swearing (judicially) is a matter of some moment with the Chinese, and is conducted in a different manner from what it is with us. The deponent stands up before the Court, and lighting a piece of yellow paper, holds it in his fingers until it is consumed, mentally ejaculating a prayer in the meanwhile. The Recorder warned Ahi of his being in America, and somewhat beyond the influence of the "brother of the sun," and inflicted a fine upon him. It appeared the good counsel of the Recorder was of no effect, for shortly after Ahi again proclaimed that the natives of the flowery empire are to pay to him an annual tax—that the ladies are to slive over the sum of $30 quarterly, are to be more circumspect in their behavior, not to receive the embraces of any "outside barbarians," and especially the Yankees. The penalty was the loss of the "tails" of the men, and heads of the women. "Little China" was in an uproar, but the edict was never enforced, and Ahi finds his glory has indeed departed, for the men snap their fingers under his nose, and the "ladies" smile on their barbarian gallants as in days gone by.

A SHORT LECTURE.—Keep good company or none. Never be idle. If your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Always speak the truth. Make few promises. Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets, if you have any. When you speak to a person, look him in the face. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue. Good character is above all things else. Your character cannot be essentially injured, except by your own acts. If one speaks evil of you let your life be so that none will believe him. Drink no intoxicating liquors. Ever live, misfortune excepted, within your income. When you retire to bed, think over what you have done during the day. Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper; small and steady gains give competency, with tranquility of mind. Never play at any kind of game or chance. Avoid temptation, through fear you may not withstand it. Never run in debt, unless you see a way to get out again. Never borrow if you can possibly avoid it. Never speak evil of any one. Be just, before you are generous. Keep yourself innocent, if you would be happy. Save when you are young, to spend when you are old.

Synod of Ohio on the Maine Law.

We extract the following from the "Narrative of the state of religion" adopted by this Synod, at its recent sessions at Chillicothe, as published in the Central Christian Herald. It was passed unanimously and expresses the sentiments of that large and influential body, embracing fifty-two ministers and representing seventy-seven churches, touching the Maine Law.

"Temperance is another reform in which our Churches have ever manifested a deep interest. At one time, progress has been reported, and such progress as to beget the hope that a complete triumph was fast at hand, and then again, the very next year, the reported movement has been backward rather than forward; and the result darkness, doubt, and almost despair. But a new star of hope has lately risen in the East. The friends of temperance have hailed it with joy, and our Church members—though it may have been in some cases doubtfully at first—have already come to regard it as the rare harbinger of a brighter temperance day than has ever dawned before. In plain language, our Churches, so far as your committe have ascertained, are singularly unanimous in the opinion that what is commonly called the Maine Law, for the destruction of the liquor traffic, is the great measure for the legal enactment of which they must now vigorously strive, and for the execution of which, when once obtained, they must pledge their influence, and stand ready with their best personal endeavors. From this unanimity and determination, your committee hope much for the temporal and spiritual welfare of our fellow-men, and for all the vital interests of religion within our bounds."

KOSSUTH AND HUNGARY.—The Boston Commonwealth, in noticing the charge that Kossuth is living at his ease, in London, on the money given for the Hungarian cause in America, makes the following statement, which is we presume, correct:

"We take this opportunity of stating, from positive knowledge, that of the 90,000 or $100,000 which Kossuth collected in this country, hardly a dollar crossed the Atlantic with him. He expended it in this country in purchasing and making munitions of war, by the manufacture of which he gave employment to a large number of his destitute countrymen. He had for months nearly a hundred of them employed in making cartriges alone. He expended it also in carrying on a most extensive and costly correspondence with his agents in Europe, transmitting, of course, his letters by private messengers, who went at the risk of their lives, and had to be paid proportionably, and who, of course, had to be amply furnished with money for emergencies. Every letter which Kossuth sent to Hungary cost him on an average $500. The money that he raised here was of course easily absorbed by these expenditures, and with it, as we know, was spent a considerable sum belonging to his wife, which her relatives in Hungary sent to her for her own use, but which she gave her husband for his cause.

Kossuth left America penniless and in debt, as in 1849 he left Hungary, after two year's administration of the treasury of that rich kingdom.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.—The extraordinary popularity of this book in England, it is said, quite exceeds anything of the kind known in that country, and throws the most succesful efforts of Dickens into the shade. There cannot be less than twelve distinct editions of the work now being published in London, to say nothing of the penny serials in which it appears in weekly portions. In one house fifteen perfecting steam printing machines are kept at work night and day, supplying it to publishers. Another establishment declined a contract for fifty thousand copies, to be furnished in a week, being afraid to undertake it in so short a time. The prices of the volume vary from sixpence to three shillings sixpence, and a splendidly illustrated edition is advertised to come out at seven shillings sixpence. The only profit that Mrs. Stowe derives from this princely success is out of the three and six penny 'author's edition,' published by Bosworth, for which she is allowed two pence on each volume sold. It is somewhat remarkable that the book was published in London full three months before it attracted any attention; and it was through the medium of an edition in penny numbers that it first became popular. So much for cheap literature.

"Does the court understand you to say, Mr. Jones, that you saw the editor of the 'Auger of Freedom' intoxicated?"

"Not at all, sir; I merely said that I have seen him frequently so flurried in his mind that he would undertake to cut out copy with the snuffers—that's all."

How shall we learn to know ourselves? By reflection? never—but only through action. Strive to do thy duty; then shalt thou know what is in thee. But what is my duty? That which is before thee—the task of the day.—Goethe.

The Wit of Sarcasm.

To be sarcastic is thought by some people a proof of ability. Such individuals are like a pack of Chinese crackers thrown into a crowd, continually exploding in every direction, but with greater noise than injury. There is more ill-breeding than wit in a sarcasm; and more ill nature than either. True wit does not consist in abuse, but in profound wisdom tersely expressed. Nothing, therefore, can be further from wit than sarcasm, and where they go together, one is pressed into the service, and is not a legitimate ally.

Nevertheless, we know many, mostly young persons, who set up for wits on the score of sarcasm. They are usually very conceited, or very foolish, or very unamiable individuals, and by no means the terror to others they imagine. Persons of sense are no more affected by their sarcasms than mastiffs are by the yelp of a lap-dog. A real wit never condescends to reply to them. We have known many of such sarcastic persons in our experience, and always found they cured themselves of this childish habit as soon as they grew up; or, if they did not, that they remained children in their tempers to the end of their career. It is a mean sort of revenge that seeks to gall another's feelings by sarcasm; for where it chances to be successful, it is like the copper shot of the Mexicans, which gangrenes the wound.—Exchange.

SILENT INFLUENCE.—It is the bubbling spring which flows gently, the little rivulet which runs along, day and night, by the farm house, that is useful, rather than the swollen flood, or the waving cataract. Niagara excites our wonder, and we stand amazed at the power and greatness of God there, as he "pours it from his hollow hand." But one Niagara is enough for the continent, or the world—while the same world requires thousands and tens of thousands of silver fountains and gentle flowing rivulets, that water every farm and meadow, and every garden, and that shall flow every day and every night, with their gentle, quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds, like those of the martyrs, that good is to be done; it is by the daily and quiet virtues of life—the Christian temper, the meek forbearance, the spirit of forgiveness, in the husband, the wife, the father, the mother, the brother, the sister, the friend, the neighbor, that good is to be done.—Exchange.

A GENTLEWOMAN.—"I cannot forbear pointing out to you, my dearest child," said Lord Collingwood to his daughter, "the great advantages that will result from a temperate conduct and sweetness of manner to all people on all occasions.—Never forget that you are a gentlewoman, and all your words and actions should make you gentle. I never heard your mother—your dear good mother—say a harsh or hasty thing to any person in my life. Endeavor to imitate her. I am quick and hasty in my temper, but, my darling, it is a misfortune which, not having been sufficiently restrained in my youth, has caused me inexpressible pain. It has given me more trouble to subdue this impetuosity than anything I ever undertook."

HONESTY IN BUYING AND SELLING.—Some are not honest in buying or selling. Their rule is, to buy at all times as cheap as they can, and sell as dear as they can.—This is a wicked rule. We often trade with those who do not know the worth of the thing bought or sold. It is cheating them, to make the best bargain we can.—Sometimes we trade with those who are in great want, and we fix our own prices, and make them much too high if we sell, or too low if we buy. There is a fair price for every thing. Let that be paid or taken for every thing. He who is just and true, and loves his neighbor as himself, will soon find out what a fair price is. Almost all men use too many words in buying and selling; and when too many words are used, there is almost always a lie somewhere.—Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

THE ONLY TRUE PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.

JUST PUBLISHED,

T. B. Welch's Magnificent

PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.

Engraved (by permission) from Stuart's only original portrait, in the Atheneum. Boston.

THIS superb picture, Engraved under the superintendence of THOMAS SULLY, Esq, the eminent and highly gifted artist, is the only correct likeness of Washington ever published. It has been characterised as the greatest work of art ever produced in this country. As to its fidelity, we refer to the letters of the adopted son of Washington, GEORGE WASHINGTON PARK CUSTIS, who says, "it is a faithful representation of the celebrated original," and to CHIEF JUSTICE TANEY of the Supreme Court of the United States, who says, "As a work of art its excellence and beauty must strike every one who sees it: and it is no less happy in its likeness to the Father of his country. It was my good fortune to have seen him in the days of my boyhood, and his whole apearance is yet strongly impressed on my memory The portrait you have issued appears to me to be an exact likeness, representing perfectly the expression as well as the form and features of the face." And says SENATOR CASS, it is a life-like representation of the great original. PRESIDENT FILLMORE says, "the work appears to me to have been admirably executed and eminently worthy of the patronage of the public." Says MARCHANT the eminent portrait painter, and the pupil of Stuart, "your print to my mind is more remarkable than any other I have seen, for presenting the whole individuality of the original portrait, together with the noble and dignified repose of air and manner, which all who ever saw him considered a marked characteristic of the illustrious man it commemmorates."

For the great merits of this picture we would refer every lover of Washington to the portrait itself, to be seen at the office of this paper, and to the letters of the following Artists, Statesmen, Jurists and Scholars accompanying it.

ARTISTS.—Marchant and Elliott of New York; Neagle, Rothermel, and Lambdin of Philadelphia; Chester Harding of Boston; Charles Fraser, of Charleston, S. C; and to the adopted son of Washington, Hon. Geo. W P. Custis, himself an artist. STATESMEN.—His Excellency Millard Fillmore, Major Gen. Winfield Scott, Hon. George M. Dallas, Hon. William R. King, Hon. Daniel Webster, Hon. Lynn Boyd, Hon. Lewis Cass, Hon. Wm. A. Graham, Hon. John P. Kennedy, Hon. R. C. Winthrop, LL. D. JURISTS.—Hon. Roger B. Taney, Hon. John Duer, Hon John McLean, Hon. Rufus Choate. SCHOLARS.—Charles Folsom, Esq. the well known Librarian of the Boston Atheneum, who says, "I would rather own it than any painted copy I have ever seen;" E. P. Whipple, Richard Hildreth, Hon. Edward Everett, LL. D., Jared Sparks, LL. D., Wm. H. Prescott, LL. D., Washington Irving, Ralph W. Emerson, Esq, Prof. T. C. Upham, J. T. Headley, Fitz Green Halleck, H. W. Longfellow, Wm. Gilmore Simms; and FROM EUROPE, Lord Talfourd, T. B. Macauley, Sir Archibald Alison, Lord Mayor of London, &c., &c. THE PRESS, throughout the entire Union, have with one voice proclaimed the merits of this suberb engraving.

To enable all to possess this valuable treasure, it is sold at the low price of $5 per copy.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

All Moneys received from the Insured, for Annual Premiums, after deducting expenses, will be divided among the Sick

The Public have for some time been familiar with the subject of Life and Health Insurance, but it is obvious that too little thoughts has been given to the latter. Life Insurance benefits our successors, while Health Insurance directly benefits ourselves. It makes provision for a time of sickness, when the products of a man's industry are cut off, and want unites with Disease to aggravate his distress. It is at this gloomy period, when he is prostrated and helpless, and when despondency would otherwise overwhelm him, that the holder of a Health Insurance Policy will realize its benefits.

CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

To Cure a Cold, with Headache and Soreness of the Body, take the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, and wrap up warm, to sweat during the night.

For a Cold and Cough, take it morning, noon, and evening, according to directions on the bottle, and the difficulty will soon be removed. None will long suffer from this trouble when they find it can be so readily cured. Persons afflicted with a seated cough, which breaks them of their rest at night, will find, by taking the Cherry Pectoral on going to bed, they may be sure of sound, unbroken sleep, and consequently refreshing rest. Great relief from suffering, and an ultimate cure, is afforded to thousands who are thus afflicted, by this invaluable remedy.

From its agreeable effect in these cases, many find themselves unwilling to forego its use when the necessity for it has ceased.

From two eminent Physicians in

Fayetteville, Tenn., April 16th, 1851.

Sir:—We have given your Cherry Pectoral an extensive trial in our practice, and find it to surpass every other remedy we have for curing affections of the respiratory organs

DRS. DIEMER & HAMPTON.

To Singers and Public Speakers this remedy is invaluable, as by its action on the throat and lungs, when taken in small quantities, it removes all hoarseness in a few hours, and wonderfully increases the power and flexibility of voice.

Asthma is generally much relieved, and often wholly cured by Cherry Pectoral. But there are some cases so obstinate as to yield entirely to no medicine. Cherry Pectoral will cure them, if they can be cured.

Bronchitis, or irritation of the throat and upper portion of the lungs, may be cured by taking Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses. The uncomfortable oppression is soon relieved.

Rev. Dr. Lansing, of Brooklyn, New York, states: "I have seen the Cherry Pectoral cure such cases of Asthma and Bronchitis as leads me to beleive it can rarely fail to cure those diseases."

For Croup. Give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

Whooping Cough may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral

The Influenza is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences, while their neighbors, without the Cherry Pectoral, were suffering from the disease.

Salem, Ohio, June 11th, 1851.

Doct. J. C. Ayer:—I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your Cherry Pectoral in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough, by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best physicians freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it, than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine, he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully, J. D. SINCLAIR,
Deputy Postmaster.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the Cherry Pectoral, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and coughs, and pulmonary diseases. P. Cleveland, M. D.

Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

Dr. Valentine Mott, the widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of 'Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,' which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been effected by Cherry Pectoral in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it

POETRY.

From the Louisville Journal.

The Wine Cup.

Oh pass the glowing wine-cup by,
  Nor let thy lips its poison drink,
Though it be mantling warm and high,
  Yet pause and on its ruin think.
It meets thee at the festive board
  Crowned with its jests and ringing laughter—
A glad temptation brightly poured—
  But oh, what heavy days come after!

It lends the soul a feverish power,
  What wild and flashing words to speak,
And lights a cold and gloomy hour
  Where hope nor sunlight seemed to break;
'Tis like a transient magic spell,
  The draft within yon gilded chalice,
But fevered lips that love it well,
  Regret too late its burning malice.

There is a tearful record kept
  By a pure angel from on high,
And tears of blood are o'er it wept
  From eyes that slumber not nor die—
It bears the names of those like thee,
  Who only touched and lightly tasted,
Yet have gone down as silently
  As treasure-barks that rocks have wasted.

A voice of warning sternly comes
  From where the young and proud were wrecked,
And canst thou tread earth's ruined homes
  And sink thy godly intellect?
The costly jewels of thy brain—
  And wouldst thou have their brightness scattered?
To dull the maddest sense of pain,
  Wouldst have thy reckless life-strings shattered?

Is there no hallowed spirit fled,
  To hover round and guard thy fate?
Nor whisper from the sainted dead,
  To stay thee ere it be too late?
Is there no human heart that's thine,
  And linked by ties thou would'st not sever?
Oh turn and flee the sparkling wine,
  As thou would'st keep that love forever.

Ministering angels stand between
  Thy priceless soul and its dark grave;
And would'st thou trample love unseen
  That lines thy path to shield and save?
Oh we are not our own, but His
  Who by a wondrous mystery wrought us,
And we should guard a truth like this
  That by His costly blood He bought us.

By all the star-bright hopes that shine,
  And make thy future dazzling seem,
By angel aspirations—thine,
  And by ambition's gorgeous dream;
By all the prayers that upward go,
  Joy deep and passionate emotion,
Oh tread this strong temptation low
  And save for Heaven a heart's devotion.

There is a bird in Eastern skies,
  That will not soil its wings with earth—
The peerless bird of Paradise—
  Art thou not too of Eden birth?
Then leave the wine that's foaming high,
  Though jovial friends shall praise its gladness,
And pass the cup untasted by,
  Charmed from its ruin and its madness.

Ida.

A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger.

A spur in the head is worth two in the heels.

A willing mind makes a light foot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Curiosities of Great Men.

Among the curious facts which we find in perusing the biographies of great men, are the circumstances connected with the composition of the works which have made them immortal.

For instance:—Bossuet composed his grand sermons on his knees; Bulwer wrote his first novels in full dress, scented; Milton before commencing his great work, invoked the influences of the Holy Spirit, and prayed that his lips might be touched with a live coal from off the altar; Chrysostom meditated and studied while contemplating a painting of St. Paul.

Bacon knelt down before composing his great work, and prayed for light from heaven. Pope never could compose well without first declaiming for some time at the top of his voice, and thus rousing his nervous system to its fullest activity.

Bentham composed after playing a prelude on the organ, or whilst taking his 'anteentacular' and "post-prandial" walks in his garden—the same, by the way, that Milton occupied. Saint Bernard composed his "Meditations" amidst the woods; he delighted in nothing so much as the solitude of the dense forest, finding there, he said, something more profound and suggestive than anything he could find in books. The storm would sometimes fall upon him there, without for a moment interrupting his meditations.

Camoens composed his verses with the roar of battle in his ears; for the Portuguese poet was a soldier, and a brave one though a poet. He composed others of his most beautiful verses at the time when his Indian slave was begging a subsistence for him in the streets. Tasso wrote his finest pieces in the lucid intervals of madness.

Rosseau wrote his works early in the morning; Le Sage, at mid day; Byron, at midnight. Hardouin rose at four in the morning, and wrote till late at night.

Aristotle was a tremendous worker; he took little sleep, and was constantly retrenching it. He had a contrivance by which he awoke early, and to awake was with him to commence work. Demosthenes passed three months in a cavern by the sea-side, in laboring to overcome the defects of his voice. There he read, studied and declaimed.

Rabelais composed his "Life of Gargantua" at Bellay, in the company of Roman cardinals, and under the eyes of the Bishop of Paris. La Fontaine wrote his fables chiefly under the shade of a tree, and sometimes by the side of Racine and and Boileau. Pascal wrote most of his "Thoughts" on little scraps of paper, at his by-moments. Fenelon wrote his "Telemachus" in the Palace of Versailles, at the Court of the Grand Monarque, when discharging the duties of tutor to the Dauphin. That a book so thoroughly democratic should have issued from such a source, and been written by a priest, may seem surprising. De Quesnay first promulgated his notion of universal freedom of person and trade, and of throwing all taxes on the land—the germ, perhaps, of the French Revolution—in the boudoir of Madame de Pompadour!

Luther, when studying, always had his dog lying at his feet—a dog he had brought from Wartburg, and of which he was very fond. An ivory crucifix stood on the table before him, and the walls of his study were stuck round with caricatures of the pope. He worked at his desk for days together without going out; but when fatigued, and the ideas began to stagnate in his brain, he would take his flute or his guitar with him into the porch, and there execute some musical fantasy (for he was a skilful musician) when the ideas would flow upon him as fresh as flowers after summer's rain. Music was his invariable solace at such times. Indeed, Luther did not hesitate to say, that after theology, music was the first of arts.—"Music," said he, "is the art of the prophets; it is the only other art, which, like theology, can calm the agitation of the soul, and put the devil to flight." Next to music, if not before it, Luther loved children and flowers. That great, gnarled man had a heart as tender as a woman's.

Calvin studied in his bed. Every morning, at five or six o'clock, he had books, manuscripts and papers carried to him there, and he worked on for hours together. If he had occasion to go out, on his return he undressed and went to bed again to continue his studies. In his later years he dictated his writings to the secretaries. He rarely corrected anything. The sentences issued complete from his mouth. If he felt his facility of composition leaving him, he forthwith quitted his bed, gave up writing and composing, and went about his out-door duties for days, weeks, and months together. But as soon as he felt the inspiration fall upon him again, he went back to his bed, and his secretary set to work forthwith.

Cujas, another learned man, used to study when laid all his length upon the carpet, his face towards the floor, and there he revelled amidst piles of books which accumulated about him. The learned Amyot never studied without the harpsichord beside him; and he only quitted the pen to play it. Bentham also was extremely fond of the piano-forte, and had one nearly in every room in his house.

Richelieu amused himself in the intervals of his labor with a squadron of cats, of whom he was very fond. He used to go to bed at eleven at night, and, after sleeping three hours, rise and write, dictate, or work, till from six to eight o'clock in the morning, when his daily levee was held. This worthy student displayed an extravagance equalling that of Wolsey.—His annual expenditure was some four millions of francs, or about £170,00 sterling.

How different the fastidious temperance of Milton! He drank water and lived on the humblest fare. In his youth, he studied during the greatest part of the night; but in the more advanced years he went early to bed—by nine o'clock—rising to his studies at four in summer and five in winter. He studied till mid-day; then he took an hour's exercise, and, after dinner, he sang and played the organ, or listened to other's music. He studied again till six, and from that hour till eight he engaged in conversation with friends who came to see him. Then he supped, smoked a pipe of tobacco, drank a glass of water, and went to bed. Glorious visions then came to him in the night, for it was then, while lying on his couch that he composed in thought the greater part of his sublime poem. Sometimes, when the fit of composition came strong upon him, he would call his daughter to his side, to commit to paper that which he had composed.

Milton was of opinion that the verses composed by him between the autumnal and spring equinoxes were always the best, and he was never satisfied with the verses he had written at any other season. Alfieri, on the contrary, said the equinoctial winds produced a state of almost 'complete stupidity' in him. Like the nightingale, he could only sing in summer. It was his favorite season.

Pierre Corneille, in his loftiest flights of imagination, was often brought to a stand still for words and rhyme. Thoughts were seething on in his brain, which vainly he tried to reduce to order and he would often run to his Thomas "for a word."—Thomas rarely failed him. Sometimes, in his fits of inspiration, he would bandage his eyes, throw himself upon the sofa, and dictate to his wife, who almost worshipped his genius. Thus he would pass whole days, dictating to her his great tragedies; his wife scarcely ventured to speak, almost afraid to breathe. Afterwards, when a tragedy was finished, he would call in his sister Martha, and submit it to her judgment; as Molier used to consult his old housekeeper about the comedies he had newly written.

Racine composed his verses while walking about, reciting them in a loud voice.—One day, when thus working at his play of "Mithridates," in the Tuilleries' Gardens, a crowd of workmen gathered around, taking him to be a madman about to throw himself into the basin. On his return home from such walks, he would write down a scene at first in prose, and when he had thus written it out, he would exclaim—"My tragedy is done," considering the dressing of the acts up in verse as a very small affair.

Magliabecchi, the learned librarian to the Duke of Tuscany, on the contrary never stirred abroad, but lived amidst books, and lived upon books. They were his bed, board, and washing. He passed eight and forty years in their midst, only twice in the course of his life venturing beyond the walls of Florence; once to go two leagues off, and the other three and a half leagues, by order of the Grand Duke. He was an extremely frugal man, living upon eggs, bread and water, in great moderation.

The life of Liebnitz was one of reading and meditation. That was the secret of his prodigious knowledge. After an attack of gout, he confined himself to a diet of bread and milk. Often he slept in a chair and rarely went to bed till after midnight. Sometimes he was months without quitting his seat, where he slept by night and wrote by day. He had an ulcer in his right leg which prevented his walking about, even had he wished to do so.—Eliza Cook's Journal.

Death.

A mother was kneeling in the deep hush of evening, at the couch of two infants, whose rosy arms were twined in a mutual embrace. A slumber, soft as the moonlight that fell through the lattice over them, like a silvery-veil lay on their delicate lips—the soft bright curls that clustered on their pillow were slightly stirred by their gentle and healthy breathings, and that smile, which beamed from the pure depths of the fresh glad spirit, yet rested on their red lips. The mother looked upon their exceeding beauty with a momentary pride—and then as she continued to gaze on the lovely slumberers her dark eyes deepened with an intense and unutterable fondness; and a cold shudder came over her, lest those buds of life, so fair, so glowing, might be touched with sudden decay, and gathered back in their brightness to the dust. And she lifted her voice in prayer, solemnly, passionately, earnestly, that the giver of life would still spare to her those blossoms of love, over whom her soul thus yearned. And as the low breathed accents rose on the still air, a deepened thought came over her, and her spirit went out with her loved and pure ones, into the strange wild paths of life, and a strong horror chilled her frame as she beheld mildew and blight settling on the fair and lovely of the earth, and high and rich hearts scattered with desolation and guilty passions. And the prayer she was breathing grew yet more fervent, even to agony, that He who was the fountain of all purity, would preserve these whom He had given her in their perfect innocence, permitting neither shame, nor crime nor folly to cast a stain on the brightness with which she had received them invested from his hand as with a mantle.

As the prayer died away in the weakness of the spent spirit, a pale shadowy form stood beside the infant sleepers. "I am death," said the spectre, "and I came for thy babes—I am commissioned to bear them where the perils you deprecate are unknown; where neither stain, nor dust nor shadow can reach the rejoicing spirit. It is only by yielding them to me you can preserve them forever from contamination and decay." A wild conflict—a struggle as of the soul parting in strong agony, shook the mother's frame, but faith and the love which has a purer fount than that of earthward passions, triumphed, and she yielded her babes to the spectre.

"Behold!" said Death, as he touched the fair forms, and the beauty of life gave place to a holier and yet deeper loveliness, "behold, the smile of innocence is now forever sealed. They will waken where there is neither blight nor tempest," and the benign power, whom we call the Spoiler, bore away the now perfect blossoms of immorality to the far off sky.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher makes the following shrewd reply to those disinterested people who ask the temperance men why they don't enforce the laws against rumselling, instead of framing new ones like that of Maine:

"It is said, "Why don't you execute the present law?" This puts me in mind of an old rat, who, sleek and fat, comes out of his hole and sees a new trap. He walks around it, peeps into it, nibbles at it, and finds that it is not like the old one—it is all wire, and there's no getting out of it. So he goes to the keeper of the house and says: "Why are you not satisfied with the wooden bottom, through which I have crawled forty temes?" So with these old liquor rats—they know how to evade them—they can crawl through most anything. They don't like the Maine Law.—These men can tell what the law means.—The outcry they make, makes me think they smell fire. I never was so much in favor of the law, as when I found out how the rumsellers opposed it."

A Picture.

Reader, let us picture a scene,—one fraught with sad interest, and suggestive of mournful emotions.

Far, far away, and in one of the loveliest spots that deck the God favored face of old Ireland, in years long gone, stood a beautiful cottage, cosily nestled among the trees and flowers that grew and bloomed upon the banks of one of those charming little lakes, of which "Green Erin" can boast so many, and that served in the Celtic ages, as mirrors for the COLEENS of those times. This cottage was the home of Bryan S——, who had but a short twelve-months before, gladdened his heart and brought sunshine upon his hearth by taking the lovely Norah to his home, to be the presiding angel over all that therein was. Old Ireland had not within her whole length and breadth a happier peasant than Bryan, nor a more loving, sweet-tempered wife than Norah, Heaven, too, as if to bind their love by a firmer tie, and make their happiness more complete, had given them a boy—a laughing, bright-eyed littte elf. Bryan was proud, Norah was pleased, and together they thanked God. Years passed by, and the peasant's boy was fast growing to manhood. Bryan and Norah had, by their industry and frugality, accumulated a goodly portion of this world's goods, and they determined, for the love they bore their son, to give him a legacy of far more value than filthy lucre, and consequently we find the peasant boy a student at the University of Dublin. * * * * *

Years had flown. Bryan and Norah had been gathered to their fathers. A gallant ship was bounding o'er the billow towards the New World, bearing many persons who were leaving starvation behind, to a home in the Land of Plenty.

The peasant boy was one of its passengers.

* * * * * * *

Yesterday we heard a poor miserable, bloated wretch begging a dime to procure for his children bread to keep them from starving. The intelligent eye of the mendicant attracted our attention. We entered into conversation with him, and was surprised at the fluency with which he spoke. We were perfectly astonished at his extensive knowledge of classic lore, and we wondered how one so highly gifted could have fallen so low. But the ways of Providence are inscrutable. The peasant boy, the student and the mendicant were one. Cynthianians, would you dream of a family starving to death in your midst? Do you know what is the cause of this destitution? It is not liquor, of course—but, what is it?—Cyntkiana (Ky.) News.

TEMPERANCE CHART.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 8, 1852.

State Temperance Convention.

We publish to-day the call of the Central Committee for a Temperance Convention to be held in this city on the 12th of January, 1853. Let all who read the Chart ponder that circular, and spread it wide among their friends, that all the friends of the good cause in the State may know their duty, and take immediate steps to do it. Let county meetings be called, and delegates chosen to that grand rally of the friends of progress and reform; and then let those chosen not fail to come up to the help of the Right against the Wrong. Send men of principle—sound-headed, pure-hearted, fearless, and earnest men, who would rather have the consciousness of being right than

"A whole year's applause
Of stupid starers and of loud huzzas."

☞ Gentle Reader, do not overlook, but be sure to look over, the article from "The Independent," on Wolfe's Aromatic Schiedam Schnapps. It is from the pen of that great and good man, HENRY W. BEECHER, in losing whom Indiana lost more than gold can restore. We do hope none of our Druggists will lend themselves to the scheme of distributing that falsely labelled poison among our people. If any should, let the brand of Cain be upon him, that, like Cain, he may feel that his punishment is greater than he can bear.

☞ We take the liberty of publishing a letter from the Rev. LeRoy Wood, of Clark county, because it informs us that the right spirit is awake in that section of the State. Let this be our apology for making public that which was not, perhaps, intended for the public eye. It will do good in other parts of the State. Let us let our friends know that our cause is not overwhelmed by the wave of political excitement which has recently rolled over us; that it is still steadfast in its own strength, as the rock which remains unmoved when the wave that covered it for a time, has subsided. Let voice answer unto voice all over our State, until the song of progress shall arise from all her emancipated children, and the march of the destroying angel of Intemperance be stayed forever.

A Good Sign.

The religious world are becoming awake to the demoralizing influence of Mrs. STOWE's celebrated work, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The English press noted its obliquity, and the American Evangelical papers are aroused. That organ of sound theological sentiment, the New York Observer has long carried on a holy crusade, and the other Presbyterian journals of more radical tendencies are joining in the contest. The Independent will soon be alone, in its support of this negro romance. Before many months, Uncle Tom will have passed from public notice, and few will be so bold as to give it countenance.

[Carson League.

A slight mistake, that of yours, neighbor of the League. It is very difficult, very—indeed it is—to write down so veritable an idea as that which is embodied in that strange book, Uncle Tom's Cabin. You can't do it in a few months, try your best. No—and we'll even allow the "London Times," and "New York Observer" the privilege of assisting yon. The Times, you know, lavished praises on Haynau, the woman-whipper and butcher, and we fear its name will add little to your strength, where, as in our country, reason has more, and mere brute force less power, than in other less favored climes. We know it is foolish "to support a negro romance," but whether we will or not it will still find support; and we, now, like yourself, assume our prophetic robes and pronounce that "Uncle Tom will" not "pass away from public notice" in many months. We hesitate not thus to place our prediction side by side with yours, and let them both go to the future together. We know that we hazard our repntation as a prophet by doing so; but, great as it is, we put it to the hazzard. Nay, further, we really fear, that Tom will be canonized, and take his place among the Saints of the Calendar; for of whom can we more fitly think than of him, when devoutlg praying, "let me die the death of the righteous."

"Old City Hotel."

"We believe the Chart is too severe in its strictures on the owners of the above-named property, and that the trustees that have charge of it have no desire whatever to foster a den of iniquity. The building is in a dilapidated, and, we believe, dangerous condition, and for that reason we give room to the above."—Locomotive.

So it seems that our Bro. of the Locomotive deems our strictures on the Trustees of the "Old City Hotel," too severe. It will be recollected, however, that what we said was based on the supposition that they knew the condition of their property and the character and habits of its tenants; which we suppose they now understand if they did not before our notice; and will take steps for the correction of so great an outrage to propriety, decency and morality. If a change shall not soon be made in reference to it, our article must stand, stript of its condition, as our recorded opinion against both the house and those who have charge of it.

Bro. Elder is only speaking ironically, however, when he says we are "too severe." In any other sense, even the men who control it, whatever they might say, would laugh at his language, as the utmost stretch of flattery consistent with truth.

☞ CARLYLE, in an essay on German journalism and journalists, has the following recommendation, which might well be commended to a large portion of our journalists. It really seems that a large proportion of our newspapers are conducted on the principle that the liberty of the press is, in the language of the Democratic Review, "the power to publish wicked and pernicious doctrines." To those who practice on this principle, we recommend a timely adoption of the advice of Carlyle:

"By way of palliative, we have sometimes imagined that a Congress of all German Editors might be appointed, by proclamation, in some central spot, say the Nurnberg Market-place, if it would hold them all; here we would humbly suggest that the whole Journalistik might assemble on a given day, and under the eye of proper marshals, sufficiently and satisfactorily horse-whip one another simultaneously, each his neighbor, till the very toughest had enough both of whipping and of being whipped. In this way, it seems probable, little or no injustice would be done: and each Journalist, cleared of gall, for several months, might return home in a more composed frame of mind, and betake himself with new alacrity to the real duties of his office."

THE GENIUS OF YOUTH.—This is a small monthly, printed and published by ROSS ALLEY, at Olean, Ripley county, Indiana. The printer has acquired a knowledge of his art without the aid of any instructor; and we understand the press upon which his paper is executed is one of his own construction. Taking into consideration the fact that the Proprietor is still in his teens, and that his opportunities have been most limited, we know of no terms too strong to express our desire for his success.

TERMS:—1 copy 15cts per year;
8 copies $1 " "
18 " $2 " "
30 " $3 " "

Let the "Genius of Youth" be encouraged by all the friends of merit.

A gentleman on whom we can rely, informs us that he has now in his employ five men, who for the year preceding the nineteenth of July, were known as drunkards, and had not in that time performed a single week of unbroken labor, but who, since that time, have been steadily at work and have carried to their families, every Saturday night, the wages of their week's toil. Let the rum organs put that in their pipes, and then see if they can't hunt up a case of drunkenness somewhere, brought about by the liberality of some of the rum-selling gentry.—Providence Advocate.

A man had better be poisoned in his blood than in his principles.

"This teaching every one to read, is bearing its fruit in our own days, here and elsewhere, and a very unwholesome kind of fruit it appears to us to be."—Shepherd of the Valley.

☞ In the above we have the expression of a more treasonable sentiment against our free government, than could be uttered by an open levying of war against it. The man who uttered it, is not only traitorous at heart against our institutions, but against the rights of common humanity, and the Creator himself. He should be marked with the brand of Cain, that he may be known and shunned; and, if he represents a class entertaining the same idea, he and the fraternity should be held as the real enemies of all that is pure and elevating in self government—the real friends of all that debases and brutalizes. He has been born too late. His spirit belongs to the dark ages; and should seek a congenial companionship among the degraded Mexicans, or the Lazoroni of Italy, who, under similar sentiments, have been sunk as low as the spirit of oppression could desire.

FIRST IN WAR—FIRST IN PEACE, FIRST IN THE HEARTS OF HIS COUNTRYMEN.

Welch's Washington after Stuart.—This superb engraving is eliciting universal and unqualified admiration. We have seen a large number of letters from many of the first artists, authors, statesmen, jurists, and amateurs in the country, all unanimously testifying to its high excellence both as a faultless translation of STUART's painting and as a valuable exhibition of Mr. Welch's artistic skill as an engraver.

From a large number of notices appearing in various papers, and of a highly flattering description, we select the following from the Washington National Intelligencer:

"As a production of artistic skill, the print reflects the highest honor on the engraver. It is a fac-simile, a mirrored reflection of the original; and could but the rich coloring, for which Stuart was so justly celebrated, be transferred from the canvas and thrown upon paper, the print would be a multiplication instead of merely an imitation of the picture. Stuart's style was remarkable for breadth and boldness; both are here; the very touches of the pencil, in all their unreserved and masterly freedom, have been preserved to us; insomuch that no one familiar with the works of the great painter can fail at once to recognize his brush. With sound judgment and equal modesty the engraver has abstained from all attempt to add a line to the original, though unfinished. We have the noble Godlike head, and nothing more. It is enough. It meets and satisfies every wish. If it be true that Stuart himself, having succeeded, thus far, beyond his hopes, was afraid of adding lest he should diminish the effect, how much more does it become one whose sole aim in this case, and whose highest attainment was perfect imitation, not to overstep the modesty of his artistical position, and attempt to complete, in drapery and background, a production so perfect that even the author trembled to add another touch.

On the whole, we cannot but congratulate Mr. WELCH on his happy success in a most difficult undertaking. It will identify him, in his place and degree, with the wide-spread fame of the work of our greatest painter, and thus far give him to share, as far as perishable art can be a sharer, in the immortality of WASHINGTON.

This print, supplying as it does all that can be desired in its way, must of course, have a wide diffusion. It should adorn the dwelling of every American who can afford to procure it; and the publishers have wisely set the price as low as the cost of such an enterprise will allow. Would it not be a very becoming and no less popular act should Congress order a supply for distribution among their constituents?—What more suitable or worthy present could be made for example, to a public institution for education? What fitter to be placed before the eye and the ambition of the youth of America, than this exemplar of all the civic, all the social, and all the domestic virtues?"

We conclude the above article from the Intelligencer with the urgent request that our readers will call at our office and examine this most superb and only faithful likeness of the immortal Washington. This valuable portrait will also be found advertised in another part of our paper.

☞ The Diploma of the Mass. Institute awarded to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral by Prof. Webster, when Chairman of their Committee on Chemicals, is now on exhibition at the American College in this city.

It is set with the medallion awards of the three great Institutes of Art in this country; and also the gold medal of the Medical Institute at Naples. Surely this discovery has received the honors of the great, as well as the gratitude of the humble it cures.—Phil. Sat. Cour.

DREADFUL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—On Wednesday night, a collision occurred on the Indianapolis and Bellefontaine Railroad, between this city and Lanesville, about three miles from here, which resulted in the death of one man, and the serious and probably fatal injury of three others.

A construction train belonging to the Indiana Central Railroad went up to Lanesville in the evening for a load of "ties," without giving notice to the regular hog train, which runs on the I. & B. R. R.—The latter started up without knowing the other was on the road. The construction train started down after loading, and soon after the collission occurred. Both trains were running backward, and thus were prevented from seeing each other's lights. The shock damaged both trains, though not seriously.

The name of the individual killed was Thomas Barrett.

Thomas O'Brian received a severe compound fracture of one leg, besides an injury of the kidneys, from which it is doubtful whether he will ever recover.

William Dunn had one leg cut entirely off, and the other horribly crushed. Both his legs were amputated just below the knees, yesterday morning, by Drs. Parry, Mothershead, and Bullard. He is doing as well as could be expected, but very weak from loss of blood.

Michael Cady had one foot almost entirely cut off at the ancle, and several of his ribs broken, by one of which his lungs seem to have been perforated so that the air escapes and dilates the skin which covers the broken ribs. His left eye is also much injured. At the time we saw him, the physicians did not amputate his leg, because he had not rallied sufficiently from the shock of the injury.

The above-named men are all Irishmen, and residents of Indianapolis. They have, we belive, families.

This is the first railroad accident of so great magnitude that has yet happened near this place, and God grant that it may be the last. Thus is brought home to the minds of railroad men the great necessity of sleepless diligence, care, prudence, punctuality, temperance, and system, in the management of railroads. Upon the numerous railroads which will centre here, and cross the city in many directions and places, such accidents will surely occur very often, if those having them in charge do not ordain and carry out inflexibly an efficient system of rules and regulations.

Since the above was written, we have learned from most undoubted authority, that it was well understood that the construction train was going up after the 'ties,' and the disaster resulted from a misconception between the persons concerned, which was apparently unavoidable.—Journal.

Michael Cady has since died, and the recovery of O'Brien is extremely doubtful. Dunn is in a fair way to recover.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A German, named Jacob Richter, who has been in the city about a week, was found in an alley on Sunday evening in a dying condition, and taken into the office of the Western Stage Company, where he expired about nine o'clock. An inquest was held by Coroner Smith, on the body. The verdict of the jury was, that the deceased "died from sickness and exposure." He was about forty-two years old.—Journal.

Though on the jury ourself, and unable to obtain any evidence that intoxicating liquors had anything to do in the above death, we have since learned that the deceased was greatly intoxicated a few hours before he was found in a dying condition.

NEVER shrink from a woman of strong sense. If she becomes attached to you, it will be from seeing and valuing similar qualities in you. You may trust her, for she knows the value of your confidence; you may consult her, for she is able to advise; and does so at once with the firmness of reason, and the consideration of affection. Her love will be lasting, for it will not have been lightly won; it will be strong and ardent, for weak minds are not capable of the loftier grades of the passion. If you prefer attaching to yourself a woman of feeble understanding, it must be either from fearing to encounter a superior person, or from the poor vanity of preferring that admiration which springs from ignorance, to that which arises from appreciation.—Exchange.

MORE OF THE FRUITS.—Margaret Hurley died of delirium tremens, in our county jail, on Sunday night last, where she had been consigned as a vagrant. A coroner's inquest was held over the body of Sally Williams, on Tuesday last; verdict, came to her death by intemperance and exposure.

Thus is the liquor traffic doing its murderous works in our midst—neither age or sex is spared in its merciless march.—Organ.

Items of News.

☞ It seems that among others who have endeavored to embroil our Government in a war with Spain, concerning Cuba, none have been more active than Mr. Law of New York. He has recently received such a notice from President FILLMORE, as will tend, we opine, to allay his belligerant feelings. Men of his stamp—who, for the promotion of a selfish interest, would kindle the fires of war between two nations—deserves the execration of all mankind.

☞ It is probable, from present indications, that great changes will soon transpire in the position of certain political parties in Great Britain, which may lead to the adoption of a commercial policy widely different from the free trade policy so much talked of in that country of late.—We wait the results.

☞ It appears from a recent letter of Bayard Taylor, written from Goetha, in Germany, that in the Austrian dominions the baggage of travellers is subjected to a most rigid and senseless examination to the Custom-House officers. Yet a Government that resorts to such disgraceful vigilance to maintain its ill-got and worse used power, has its friends and adulators even among us. Shame on the slaves!

☞ Prof. ROTH, of Heideburg, author of the "History of Eastern Philosophy," has employed the last three years in the study of Egyptian hieroglyphic language, which he can read with such facility as to induce the hope that he will be able to give the world complete translations of the inscriptions on all the monuments of the mother of Arts and Sciences.

☞ Nokiah Lisander, a free negro, was recently brought before the Mayor of Richmond, Va., and ordered thirty-nine lashes per diem, until he should leave the State. So it goes in the "Old Dominion!"

☞ Dr. J. W. Campbell, of Louisville, was killed on the evening of the 28th ult., by being rode over by a party returning from an Irish funeral. He was on horseback when they run over him, throwing both him and his horse down at the same time, and mangling his body in a most shocking manner. One of the party has been taken, and held to bail for manslaughter. They all ought to be severely punished for such murderous behavior.

Massachusetts.

The success of the new liquor law in this State is of the utmost importance to its triumph in other States. Maine has done her duty nobly, Rhode Island is doing hers, and Massachusetts will not be found wanting. The Salem Observer, a steadfast friend of the cause, says:

"From the gratifying accounts which have been received of the operation of the anti-liquor law in all parts of the Commonwealth, wherever the public authorities have not obstructed it, the friends of the great and holy cause of temperance have abundant occasion to thank God and take courage. And no part is more significant in favor of the success of the law in restricting the traffic, than the fierce, furious, and indefatigable efforts, which have been made and are making by the liquor interest of Boston, &c., for repeal. In view of these efforts, and especially those which have had especial reference to political action, the temperance men, at their late State convention and the various county and town conventions, and the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance, have each and all resolved to vote for no man who will in any manner encourage the repeal of this beneficent Statute, or for any enfeebling modification thereof.—And this is the only true ground for temperance men to take and to maintain, especially now that their opponents are openly and undisguisedly in the field, calling their conventions, sending out their speakers, and making their nominations."

Here is a very beautiful thought of that strange compound of Scotch shrewdness, strong common sense, and German mysticism, or un-common sense—Thomas Carlyle:

"When I gaze into the stars, they look down upon me with pity from their serene and silent spaces, like eyes glistening with tears over the little lot of man. Thousands of generations, all as noisy as our own, have been swallowed up of Time, and there remains no record of them any more: yet Arcturus and Orion, Sirius and the Pleaides are still shining in their courses, clear and young, as when the shepherd first noted them in the plain of Shinar!—"What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!"

A clear conscience is a sure card.

Correspondence.

For the Temperance Chart.

DR. GORDON—Dear Sir: I have this day received the 22nd No. of the Chart, containing your most excellent "Appeal to the friends of Reform in Indiana." I could most heartily wish that, that appeal was read and acted upon by every man in our State. Certainly there are matters contained in it well deserving the consideration of every citizen; and all that is necessary to convince them of this fact is to get them to think, to think soberly for but one minute, and they must, they will feel.

In Clarke county, where I reside, the good cause goes forward finely. Our citizens talk calmly, though fearlessly, of a Prohibitory Law; nor are any of them frightened at the cry of carrying things too far, or taking away personal liberty.—They have heard this kind of croaking until it has lost all its thunder, and now they heed it no more than they would the ravings of the rumseller.

I believe that an overwhelming majority of the Temperance men in this section of the State, are decidedly in favor of some strong prohibitory legislation on the subject; and there are many, very many too, who are not connected with our Temperance organizations, who will, as a very respectable old farmer said to me, vote with us.

There is a strong and growing conviction in the public mind that the prohibition of the sale and manufacture of ardent spirits is quite as legitimate for Legislative action as the licensing of hundreds of men all through the State to retail it. In this there is great unanimity, and to accomplish this we have our petitions in circulation, and intend to try and give to our approaching Legislature such an expression as will prove to them that we are in earnest, and as voters and free men, we are not afraid to ask for what we esteem our rights.

But when I began this communication I simply designed to enquire what has been done by the Central Committee with regard to a resolution passed at our last State Convention, determining to have one of a similar character this winter in your city. Has it been abandoned or not, and if not, is it not time that action should be taken immediately by the friends all over the State to secure as large a delegation as possible? Having had the pleasure of being at that Convention, I am exceedingly anxious for another of the same sort, only larger; and I think I can see many and very strong reasons why such a Convention should be had—and hope that the Central Committee will, without delay, adopt measures for calling such an one.

Yours, in the cause of Reform,
LEE ROY WOODS.

Louisville, Dec. 1, 1852.

For the Temperance Chart.

Some few days since our County Prosecutor having occasion to leave, appointed a deputy to attend to the duties of the office during his absence. Immediately after, the deputy, who is by nature a noble hearted, social, generous man, was invited into two or three grog-shops, and was there treated by some of his kind associates who were so unfortunate as to be tempted into those withering, blasting dens of desolation and death, which, in despite of all law, human and divine, continue to curse the character of our beautiful city. But the Attorney was true to his trusts.—From the rum-shops he made his way to the Mayor's office, sent after his friends who had been so kind in treating him, and for the guilty keepers. The cases were called up by his honor, the Mayor, and to the utter astonishment of the dram-drinkers and whisky-sellers, the deputy appeared as the Prosecutor in the cases. Mr. —— the first witness being qualified, the Attorney for the county commenced the investigation as follows:

ATTORNEY. Will the witness please state what kind of liquor he bought and drank?

WITNESS. You know d—d well what kind it was for you drank more than I did.

ATTORNEY. I do not ask you to inform me what I drank, but I wish you to state to this Court what you drank?

WITNESS. Well it was whisky I drank, and it was whisky you drank, &c.

The next case was called, and after a similar hearing, the Court fined each of the grog men two dollars and fifty cents, and costs of suit. During the trials, looks of vengeance and contempt fell from the defendants and witnesses on the bold and fearless lawyer. But as soon as a decision was obtained in both cases, the noble Prosecutor rose and addressing the Court, said: "If your Honor please, it may be thought that I have acted dishonorably in the exciting events which have just taken place, but before that sentence is passed by this interesting crowd on my hitherto stainless character, I beg leave to offer a few reasons in defence of my conduct, which, I trust, shall forever silence the tongue of slander, and secure me from those belligerent frowns which fall so freely from the criminals at the bar. Sir, I have been appointed, independent of my wish, Prosecutor of the county. I have sworn to support the Constitution of this State, and of the United States, and I should be looked upon by this virtuous community as a perjured reprobate, if, by my silence such high-handed iniquity as this should go unpunished. Forbid it Heaven that my humble tomb-stone shall ever mark the spot of a perjured villian. Sir, I am done."

Circular.

A State Temperance Convention will be held in the city of Indianapolis on Wednesday the 12th day of January, 1853.

All the friends of this great Reform—all the foes of that liquid poison which is yet drowning the intellects, darkening the hopes, desolating the homes and destroying the souls of thousands, are invited to come.

Our platform is broad enough for every patriot and philanthropist.

Our work is great enough to enlist the best intellect and energy of the State; and it is urgent enough to justify the most immediate—the most earnest effort.

Let every father come for the sake of his children.

Let every citizen come to deliver the State he loves from the stain and stigma of the license system.

Let every christian come to close this wide flood-gate through which millions have been hurried to eternal death.

Let every man come, because he is a man and must feel for the wants and the woes of his race.

Let us have a gathering worthy of our cause and of our State. Let every county and every township send its delegates.

The friends of Temperance in this city will open their doors and bid you welcome. We expect to entertain all who send their names to the Committee one week before the time of meeting.

Bring your petitions and memorials with you. We want to present them all together—to gather them into one mighty moral Avalanche to roll before the Legislature with a volume and a voice that will satify it that "the People are with us" and must be heard.

Our cause is advancing. Every breeze brings tidings of some new victory. It is a time to hope and to work. How much easier to accelerate a rolling ball than to start one that has stopped! Add but a little more to the momentum of the past year, and Indiana may stand among the States that have been redeemed. What a glorious fact to inscribe upon her annals! What a glorious heritage to leave to our children.

Yes, fellow citizens, this year we may take our place beside the four free States—we may banish the deadly Upas of Intemperance from our borders.

We are strong—the strongest party in Indiana.

1st. All the wise are with us, for they must see that what we seek is politic and just.

2nd. All the good are with us—for they must feel the benevolence of our object and efforts.

3rd. The heart of the drunkard himself is with us. He knows that we are trying to rescue and protect him.

4th. All consider the liquor-makers and sellers have left is with us. It echoes in the distillery—and in the dram-shop thetr condemnation and our praise.

5th. The prayers of all pious men and of thousands of meek sufferers are with us. And more than all—

The Omnipotent, whose Throne stands on a fountain of living water, is with us.

Let us unite our strength. Let us manifest it. Let us use it. For this purpose the Convention is called.

Yours in hope and effort for a prohibitory law.

A Wolf in gin—or Aromatic Schiedam Schnapps.

We have heard of a wolf in sheep's clothing; of a wolf in Æsop's fables who quarreled with a lamb standing in the stream below him for riling the water so that he could not drink. Besides these fabulous wolves we have stories innumerable of historic wolves. A certain Mr. Putnam of revolutionary memory, and irreverently called 'old Put,' crept into the den of a Connecticut wolf to return a call that his brindled neighbor had made upon him; disagreeable words followed, and a scuffle in which the amiable quadruped lost his much regretted life. We have many other wolf tales in remembrance which we cannot pause to record, hastening as we do to chronicle the achievements of Udolpho Wolfe of Aromatic Schiedam Schnapps notoriety!

This distinguished savant has a manufactory of Gin at Schiedam in Holland. The sale of that article would naturally be desirable. If allowed to take its regular course in commerce it would probably command neither so rapid a sale, nor so large a profit. Something must be done. The happy thought is struck—let it be made as a medicine and not as simple gin!

Accordingly, common Holland gin is made and mauufactured by usual methods; but Wolfe Gin is manufactured "by a process peculiar to his own factory"—doubtless a chemical discovery of a new method of tooling. Now see too how a rhetorical phrasing of language knocks the old fashioned juniper berry in the head:

"It is flavored and medicated, not by the common harsh berry, but by the choice botanical variety of the aromatic Italian juniper berry, whose more vinous extract is distilled and rectified with its spirituous solvent, and thus becomes a concentrated tincture of exquisite flavor and aroma, altogether transcendent in its cordial and medicinal properties, to any Holland Gin heretofore known."

This Italian juniper berry must be looked after, for it will revolutionize all our ideas of vegetation to have it ascertained that there is besides the old fashioned juniper another variety—a "botanical" variety"! It will never do to have botanical varieties of plants admitted into the vegetable kingdom!

But one thing rejoices us. This nimble Italian juniper is out after the old-fashioned harsh and crabbed juniper berry which has long ranged the world on errands of mischief. May it be caught and drubbed with a Hercules' club.

But, oh, the blessings of science! Instead of Holland gin to drink, thanks to our immortal Wolfe, we shall now have a "concentrated tincture" made by the 'distillation' and 'rectification' of the 'spirituous solvent' of the 'vinous extract' of a 'variety of the aromatic Italian juniper berry'! Bacchus, weep! Nothing like this was known in thy day, either in Greece or sunny Italy. Nectar-drinking gods, ye all lived too soon. Botanical junipers were not then growing! Jupiter, friends and celestial ladies Olympian, your peculiar delights were mere slops, and Ganymede a fool and Hebe a slut. We, in this latter day, have Ganymede Hebe Udolpho Wolfe bearing to our longing lips this concentrated tincture of a botanical variety of Juniper, and disease, and weakness, and death fly away. They can stand a good tug at mere medicine, but Aromatic Schiedam Schnapps is too much even for diseases that have fed for numberless centuries on the delicacies of a doctor's pouch or saddle-bags, unharmed!

Where are our scientific societies? Are there no medals for merit left? Shall Udolpho Wolfe and his Aromatic Schiedam Schnapps go unhonored! Oh! ingratitude, &c.

But, rejoicing in this disclosure of science at Schiedam (the very name is suggestive), we have but begun to joy. It is yet to be told of the powers of this wondrous agent.

The advertisement proceeds:

"IN GRAVEL, GOUT and RHEUMATISM; in OBSTRUCTIONS OF THE BLADDER and KIDNEYS, and DEBILITY OF THE URINARY FUNCTIONS, its effects are prompt, decided, and invariably reliable. And it is not only a REMEDY for these maladies, but, in all cases in which they are produced by DRINKING BAD WATER, which is, almost universally the cause of them, it operates as a SURE PREVENTIVE."

We have often been troubled with 'gravel' in our boots, and squirming about as we would, we always had to come to the one remedy—pulling off the offending member and shaking the 'gravel' out. We shall know how to manage better hereafter.—As to these other grievances, we have no doubt whatever that we have had them all, and shall have them again, each particular one. And we shall know what arms to take up against this "sea of troubles."—We mean also to send a bottle or two of Schnapps to our Street Commissioner and see if it will have any effect on those heaps of gravel which have blocked up Columbia-street, Brooklyn, for so many months.

As to 'bad water,' if at last we have a remedy for its innumerable evils, the world may roll around an extra turn or two for mere jollity at so precious a boon. For, among the extraordinary changes which have been going on upon our globe, the recession or encroachment of the ocean, the sinking or rising of continents and islands, the formation of deltas, reefs, &c., no change can be compared to that which has afflicted fresh water. Thousands of people can no longer drink it. Limestone water, granitic water, alluvial streams, diluvial percolations, mountain springs, and fountains in the valley, cisterns, wells, Croton, Schuylkill and Cochituate, all of them are subtle enemies of health. Our travels have revealed to us a most affecting valetudinarianism. On ship-board water from casks produced ills that only brandy could allay. The water of England deranged all the stomachic economy unless qualified with cogniac, or followed at proper intervals with sling, or beer. We observed that the maladies increased as one journeyed south, until Parisian, Belgian and Berlin water were utterly intolerable, and nothing but wine and beer could be kept upon the stomach. We do not think that this can be regarded as depending upon electric conditions of the atmosphere; nor upon relative distances from the magnetic poles; for we have seen the same effects in all atmospheres and just as much in east and west journeyings as in those north and south. Indeed, no temperance man should take boat on the Ohio or Mississippi, until he has removed his name from the pledge. For those two rivers are as poison as death from the first drop of head waters to the last eddy at the Gulf of Mexico; and no remedy has ever been discovered for their effects, except brandy, or whisky,—until our incomparable Wolfe discovered his 'botanical variety' of Juniper!
